In 1972, though Ford's position improved on some pollution issues, although he still voted against a permit program for industrial polluters and against setting industrial pollution abatement deadlines. He also supported the cyclamate compensation bill that permitted producers of banned toxic materials to sue the government for their losses, thereby encouraging the marketing of dangerous products and setting precedents for later favors to distributors of banned pesticides and poisoned chickens. He voted against improving the workplace environment by opposing funds for safety inspectors and exempting small firms from the Occupational Safety and Health Act. When the Nixon administration supported the Anderson amendment to permit cities to use $700 million from the Highway Trust Fund for mass transit, did Ford vote along with his hero and friend, Richard Nixon? No. He voted along with the highway lobby.

How was 1973 for Gerald Ford? He voted against the Anderson amendment again, voted to delete from the Urban Mass Transportation bill the key provision authorizing $800 million for operating subsidies. He backed nuclear explosions to release natural gas, supported pipeline construction through national parks, and opposed legislation to authorize the states to set stricter radiation standards than the AEC. So as not to screw up his thousand point batting average, he also voted for the Alaskan pipeline.

Lest anyone think that this record was the result of day to day quickness, rather than investigate research, you can take comfort from the congressional ranking provided by the Friends of the Earth and the League of Conservation Voters. Only two congressmen had worse environmental voting records than Gerald Ford.

Now as President, Ford believes in Project Independence, Nixon's xenophobic plan to use the energy scare to brush aside environmental concerns and accelerate strip-mining, oil shale development, off-shore drilling, Alaska pipelines, refinery construction, and nuclear development. As Gerry Ford himself put it, "we will never again permit any foreign nation to have Uncle Sam over a barrel of oil." Ford probably thinks environmentalists are elitists, East-Coast sophisticated snobs. But mass transit, urban pollution, workplace environment, and high fuel costs due to waste are hardly elitist issues. They affect many people. On August 15th, Ford decryed "zero growth advocates who assert there are finite limits to the earth's resources" and argued that America needed to override environmental considerations. Until August 15, most literate humans including myself sought to make ecology and prosperity compatible by balancing governmental policies, researching alternatives, encouraging conservation, and re-allocating resources.

Yes, friends as we see Nixon's contempt for environmental issues has a secure future indeed although the White House has a tendency to affect the President's views. Let's hope Ford changes. If not, environmentalists beware!

McCarran Act could be more than martial law

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

This information was taken from the Guerrilla Warfare Advocates in the U.S. Report in the Committee on UnAmerican Activities, HUAC's Internal Security Act McCarran Act, Title II.

Did you know:

Once the ghetto is sealed off and depending upon the violence being perpetrated by the guerrillas, the following actions could be taken by the authorities:

(1) A curfew would be imposed in the enclosed isolated area. No one would be allowed out of or into the area after sundown,

(2) During the night the authorities would not only patrol the boundary lines, but would also attempt to control the streets and, if necessary, send out foot patrols through the entire area. If the guerrillas attempted to either break out of the area or to engage the authorities in open combat they would be readily suppressed,

(3) During guerrilla uprising most civil liberties would have to be suspended, search and seizure operations would be instituted during the daylight hours, and anyone found armed or without proper identification would immediately be arrested. Most of the people of the ghetto would not be involved in the guerrilla operation and, under conditions of police and military control, some would help in ferreting out the guerrillas,

(4) If the guerrillas were able to hold out for a period of time then the population of the ghetto would be classified through an office for the "control and organization of the inhabitants". This office would distribute "census cards" which would bear a photograph of the individual, the letter of the district in which he lives, and his home city. This classification would aid the authorities in knowing the exact location of any suspect and who is in control of any given district. Under such a system, movement would be proscribed and the ability of the guerrilla to move freely from place to place seriously curtailed,

(5) The population within the ghetto would be exhorted to work with the authorities and to report both on guerrillas and any suspicious activity they might note. The police agencies would be in a position to make immediate arrests, without warrants, under suspension of guarantee usually provided by the Constitution,

(6) Acts of overt violence by the guerrillas would mean they had declared a "state of war" within the country and, therefore, would forfeit their rights as in wartime. The McCarran Act provides for various detention centers to be operated throughout the country and these might well be utilized for the temporary imprisonment of warring guerrillas,

(7) The very nature of the guerrilla operation as presently envisioned by certain Communists and black nationalists would be impossible to sustain. According to the most knowledgable guerrilla war experts in this country the revolutionaries could be isolated and destroyed in a short period of time.

Martial Arts a demonstration of form, technique, philosophy

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

The Afrikan Martial Arts demonstration and discussion which was held last Sunday at Bowker Auditorium left, as one student put it, "a lasting impression on the minds of the Third World Community here in Amherst."

Various Martial Art schools were represented at the event. Forms, and techniques were demonstrated using various kicks, punches, and block drills.

The philosophy of The Afrikan Martial Arts was expounded on, and the need for Black people to adapt such forms of self-defense was the message delivered by the participating groups.

In the discussion period, it was stated by Elmer Grover, black belt instructor from the New Orleans school of New Afrikan Martial Arts Federation, that "Black people need Afrikan Martial Arts because historical facts prove that all our Afrikan values and concepts from political, cultural, economical, moral, social, idealogical, and scientific were destroyed or changed by a three hundred year period of slavery, and a one hundred year period of forced citizenship servitude.

"That period changed us from Afrikans to Negroes, which are the shadow-image of western European man. By reclaiming our heritage as Afrikan people, and making all values and concepts relate to Afrikan, and by seeing ourselves as a captive Afrikan Nation held in the United States, we understand that we need a "Martial" character for our captive Nation to struggle against our oppressor successfully."

It is imperative that Black people incorporate what is available in the way of advanced weapons, but we must ingrain the political Martial Survival Culture into the life styles of our captive Afrikan Nation. By perfecting our fighting Art and studying it on a continuous and Nation wide basis we create a self-defense shield around our Nation.

If we're to talk about struggling for National independence and maintaining that nation against attacks from all quarters, then each person of our nation must live the spirit of defending the Nation. Each family, each community must perpetuate a political-martial survival culture for now and for all time to come.

The Afrikan Institute of Martial Arts will hold classes at the UMass Area at New Africa House, Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 6:30 a.m.-8:30 a.m.

Peace Corps seeks volunteers

Since its beginning in the early 1960's, the Peace Corps has been sending young men and women overseas to work as Volunteers in the field of agriculture. Today there are nearly 2,000 Volunteers working in extension, management and research in developing nations around the world.

Ed McLaughlin, a representative and former Volunteer of the Peace Corps will be on campus to talk with interested Seniors. He will be in the Campus Center, Concourse Level today through Thursday.

Many of the agricultural programs which the Peace Corps sponsors will find the two-year college graduate in agriculture an ideal candidate, especially if he has had some practical farming experience.

McLaughlin asserted "most volunteers work in dairy and beef cattle production and management programs". A large number of programs use volunteers in field and forage crop production, vegetable and tree crop production and agri business or cooperative management. Volunteers work also with agriculture machinery, teaching basic maintenance, repair and operation of tractors, stationary and mobile combine harvesters, planters and machine shop tools.

For example, in Nepal many agricultural volunteers, working with the Nepalese Department of Agriculture, provide technical information to farmers in adopting improved agricultural techniques, assist in obtaining credit for various inputs and promote improved storage practices.

In Brazil and Jamaica agricultural volunteers work with cooperative societies as extension agents in their specialized area: field crops, vegetables or livestock development. They provide technical assistance to small farmers, demonstrating improved crop or animal husbandry methods, improve record keeping systems and conduct training programs for farmers.

In Swaziland Peace Corps volunteers work with small farmers in horticulture production and in dairy cattle extension, attempting to increase milk production and to increase improved pastures and the number of farmers in commercial production.

All volunteers receive necessary expenses and a re-adjustment allowance at completion of service. Transportation and medical expenses are also provided.

Additional information and applications are available in the Placement Office throughout the year.

Teaching, learning workshops offered

The Center for Instructional Resources and Improvement (CIRI) is planning a series of workshops and seminar activities which are designed to focus faculty, T.A., and student attention on creating classroom environments which are more conducive to effective teaching and increased learning. Faculty members and advanced graduate students who have expertise in areas concerned with teaching improvement and learning at the University or College level will conduct sessions which have direct application in teaching and learning situations.

The first set of CIRI workshops will be held from 9:00 A.M. to 12:00 this Saturday and Saturday, November 2, 1974 on the eighth floor of the Campus Center. These sessions are geared to those graduate students who are currently teaching courses and to those who are either preparing to teach courses in the spring, or to enter career situations in the future which will require them to teach.

These workshops are open to faculty and students, as well as T.A.s. Besides the sessions, information will be available on the services CIRI and other university programs and organizations offer to students on campus.

Some of the sessions being offered are: Sexism in the Classroom led by Kathryn Girard of Everywomen's Center; Videotape: A Tool Analyzing and Improving Instruction, led by Pierre Monnin and Libby Klemer; Planning Instruction and Instructional Materials led by Glenn Cable; Teaching Improvement Strategies led by Dan McCarthy; and Creating More Student Involvement in the Classroom led by Dr. Jack Hruska.

Graduate students, faculty members and undergraduate students who are interested in participating in the workshops are urged to contact the Center for Instructional Resources and Improvement in the Graduate Research Center in Room 125A or call 545-0868 or 545-0828.

On WMUA

Mon. is "Oldies" night

The sounds of the past have returned to WMUA every Monday night between 7 and 10 p.m. Vinny Perruzzi is the host for the show entitled Musical Flashbacks. Every week a different year will be spotlighted with the songs, news and sports of the year.

A trial airing held September 30 received such favorable audience response that program director Scott Bacherman approved the show for the remainder of the semester. All shows feature a countdown of the year's top 10 songs from 9:30 until 10 p.m. plus a five minute sports report from that year by WMUA sports reporter Larry Convoy.

According to Perruzzi, the purpose of the show "is to give three hours of hopefully good memories to our listeners. I hope the songs can conjure up good vibrations from the past."

Any listener who would like a particular year spot-lighted can get in touch with Perruzzi by writing Musical Flashbacks, c/o Wmua, Marston Hall, Amherst.

Plans for women's weekend

"Keep up the good work. What you are doing is really needed." "The facilitators did hard things and did them well." "I'll be living the shared feelings and ideas of this weekend for a very long time. Openness, whether on the part of the facilitators regarding programs or the participants in discussion probably is the one word that characterizes the experience most for me"

These were all comments made by the women who spent their weekends together, as a part of last year's Weekends for Women program, sponsored by Everywoman's Center.

Julia Demmin, who worked to develop the program last year, will also be facilitating a weekend on October 25-6th. Called "Time for Ourselves, Time for Others", Demmin talked about what she hoped would happen among the women who attended. "What I have discovered, is that a great many women have not shared with other women for years of their lives. But there is something very important, and I don't have a name for it, that happens when a group of women get together and share."

Demmin has been a part of group dynamics for many years now. With a PH.D. in English, she taught at the college level for ten years, before moving to the Valley area. More recently, she has been working as a group facilitator in both the Berkshires and the Pioneer Valley. She has also worked with the Feminist Counselling Collective.

The weekend at which Demmin will be facilitating is the first in a series of days and weekends, sponsored by Everywoman's Center, UMass. and running from October to January. "Time for Ourselves, Time for Others" will be for women who want to explore the relationship between the changing times and the changes in their own lives. It starts Friday evening at 6 p.m. when a light supper will be served, until 10 p.m. and will resume the next day at 9 a.m., til 5 p.m., that evening. Cost will be $25.00. Women who are interested should contact Everywoman's Center, at 545-0883.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 22 — Born today, you are happiest and most productive when you are able to work in the midst of harmonious surroundings. On the other hand, you are not in the least emotionally unstable and, should disturbances invade the employment scene, whether it be at home or away, you are quite able to weather the unpleasantness and to bid your time until peace returns and you can once again begin to get high-level results for high-level efforts. You would, of course, do well to insure peace on the employment scene and should always work toward that end.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — This is a day that virtually does what it's told. You can gain much by insisting upon having things your own way during early morning.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Become aware of the underlying meaning and you will be able to understand not only what another says but why he or she is saying it!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — All activities of a creative nature are favored now. Another's influence may not be especially welcome — but it may well be beneficial.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you value another's friendship for its own sake, you can hardly expect to be welcomed with open arms. Don't put a price on a relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Whatever you find objectionable about morning activities can probably be corrected during afternoon hours if you are willing to search for the source.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — There is nothing that comes easily or free today—but the labor and expense you go to to gain success at this time proves worth it in the end.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Trustworthiness is the key to today's success. Unless you can be trusted to go about your own business in your own way, all parties lose out.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A feeling of inadequacy where new projects are concerned could keep you from doing your best today. Try to relax and roll with the punches.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Activities outside the home may prove a setback to at-home projects. Don't allow yourself to be sidetracked until late in the day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Self-esteem is essential if you are to advance your case before those in authority. A promotion may well be in the offing by evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Unless you feel yourself slipping where another's esteem is concerned, do nothing to change your manner or method at this time. Proceed!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An insecure relationship with a loved one may cause you to be more moody than is wise. Try to face issues squarely and make decisions realistically.

Dear Mr. President:
You are probably aware, along with millions of other Americans, that we are at present lacking a Vice President.
I was a homeroom representative in high school and have since taken some political science courses, so I am no novice to political processes. I, therefore, aware of my civic responsibility, do hereby offer my services to this great Republic and to History, and will accept the office of the Vice President of these United States, pending, of course, its being offered to me.
Your future colleague,
Mr. Porky Wickis
P.S. I am not kidding.

It's aims are: 1) support the efforts of the men and women now in Massachusetts prisons to better their living conditions; 2) further public awareness of present conditions in Massachusetts prisons and of the prisoner movement; 3) publicize the issues of drug "treatment," shock "therapy," behavior modification, "special offender" classification, and other forms of psychological manipulation presently used by prison officials; 4) promote activities which deal with crime and it's causes and solutions.

Among the activities to be considered will be a bussing program to prisons, reporting on prisons, theatre group, film series, poster drive, fund raising events and discussion groups and lectures. Everyone is invited to attend.

Staff Correspondent

Prizes of mint-condition 19th century silver dollars will be raffled by the UMass Coin Club, November 11.

Proceeds will benefit the Belchertown State School. Fifteen of the coins will be awarded at the drawing in Campus Center, according to Raffle Committee Chairman Jon Roche.

The UMass Coin Club was founded in the fall of 1973 by Ed Willins and Stan Michonski to serve the UMass community by providing information about numismatics.

As a member of the American Numismatic Association, the Coin Club has access to a variety of material from the ANA in addition to each individual's private collection. The Club meets biweekly to provide information about coins to any interested student as a service to the University.

Jose Limon Dance Company in rehearsal.

Limon's spirit lives on through his dance troupe

By
JUDITH WOLINSKY-SOLOWAY

The audience at the Jose Limon Dance Concert was extremely receptive; and so it should have been. The sellout crowd was rewarded with an evening of superb dancing.

The spirit of Jose Limon himself hovered over the auditorium Friday night as the 16 dancers performed the four dances on the evening's programme. Although Limon died in 1972, some of the dancers were in the Company when the Master was alive, thus keeping Limon's spirit strong.

The first 2 dances presented the female dancers and male dancers separately. Ruth Currier, current Company director choreographed the first dance, Limon the other three.

"Quartet" was the opening selection. In movements from Durante's Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, the dancers presented femininity in constant movement. Dressed in pastel-coloured dresses, they followed the programme description; "to lean, to spring, to reach, to fly."

"The Traitor" was the opposite of the first dance. The piece was masculine, full of tension and agony and had no musical accompaniment. The silence, but for the sounds of bare feet and harsh breathing, made the piece even more forbidding. Clay Taliaferro gave a powerful portrayal of the Traitor.

The evening's highlight was "Carlota", another tension-filled piece done without musical background. Carlota, Napoleon's sister-in-law, dreams nightly of she and her husband, Maximillian's former days as Emperor and Empress of Mexico. What the audience sees in her mind are the happy days in power, the disintegration of their position, and finally her husband's execution by the Mexicans, the last leaving her crazy for the 60 years she survived Maximillian.

From Carlota's opening shrieks to her closing sighs, Carla Maxwell was in complete control of her character. Maxwell has danced the role since Limon created "Carlota" and still maintains the total emotionalism required to portray the tragic woman.

The last selection, "A Choreographic Offering" to Doris Humphrey, Limon's Mentor, is the only one that brought the entire group together on stage. Dressed in colorful leotards, the Company danced through a series of numbers; quintets, duets, full company, etc., in Humphrey's style. Seeing the whole company performing together was as exciting as their dancing.

A glance at the YanCon; more math than football?

By BILL EDELSTEIN

Thus far in the season the Yankee Conference has proven to be "The Great Equalizer" of it's members; an average of four conference games per team have been played and not one club is either undefeated or winless. To put it in more complicated terms; Boston University romped past Maine, who upset Connecticut, who overpowered New Hampshire, who beat Vermont, who stung Massachusetts, who roughed-up Rhode Island, who play Boston University next week.

Now that the reader is completely perplexed, let me try to explain the strange goings-on.

UMass leads the Yankee Conference, at least for the week, with a 3-1 record, Connecticut is in second with a 2-1 mark. Since the Minuteman play the Huskies this coming week, probably for the YanCon title, first and second places could change rather abruptly (over Dick MacPherson's dead body!).

commentary

Maine, who UMass defeated soundly at the beginning of the season, has righted itself and is lurking in third place with a 3-2 record after having endeared themselves to Minutemen fans by white-washing UConn, 7-0.

New Hampshire and Boston University are in a tie for fourth place with 2-2 records, while Rhode Island and Vermont help hold up the standings.

The Yankee Conference should clear up considerably after next week's showdown at Amherst. If the Minutemen emerge victorious, there can only be, at most, a four-way tie for first (Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, and either Boston University or New Hampshire), if the Huskies win, a mere six-way tie is possible (everybody but Vermont), if the game ends in a draw, the statistician will jump from a Southwest tower.

Although Yankee Conference clubs aren't equalizing teams out of the league, where they stand a week 5-8 over all (which is one of the reasons why Big Ten and Pacific Eight coaches aren't holding their collective breaths in anticipation of the Top Yankee), the conference has managed to keep itself tied up fairly well.

Harrier ideology

You may have been wondering how colleges go about building championship cross country teams. A look at one of the finest teams in the nation, that of Run University (URun) may give some insight into the world of cross country running. A recent trip to the roadside on one of the team's mountainous courses revealed some interesting information.

Evidently, the coaches have come up with some new training techniques that could revolutionize running. The idea is to send a pack of attractive young females out on a course ten or fifteen minutes before allowing the thinclads to start. The result has been a number of record-breaking performances, as the runners overcome extreme pain and fatigue to gain their well-deserved reward at the end of a workout.

An alternative program consists of offering a few M&M's or a variety of candy bars to the runners after practices.

Of course, there are tactics that are known to all cross country runners. One of the most popular is to accidentally step on the back of your opponents shoe, causing him to complete the race with only one shoe. Another tactic employed is one that involves going out at a comfortable pace and slipping into some nearby bushes, while the other runners run a mile or two. When they come by again (most good cross country courses include a loop that is run twice) all that's left to do is to nonchalantly get back into the race and pour it on near the finish.

It's easy to see that those basic methods of practicing and competing can greatly help a team.

Strategy is involved in cross country, as in any other sport. A team can enter a meet with one of several approaches. A favorite at many schools is to leave the starting line in a jog and let the opposing team take the lead. After two or three miles, psychological processes come into play and the enemy starts to tire, thinking that they have been running an unbelievable pace for the first half of the race.

A scheme that had great success on the high school level is to have one of the team members take the lead early in the race. This pacesetter then proceeds to take a wrong turn on the course, hopefully taking several opposing harriers with him, while his teammates remain on the course. By the time the visiting runners realize they are off the course, it's too late to make up the valuable lost seconds. This strategy, however, can only be executed on a team's home course, and has to be dropped in favor of better plots for away meets.

These examples illustrate that there is more to cross country than simply running, and that often the master-strategist rather than the super-runner prevails.

NHL has new look; chaos prevailing

NEW YORK [UPI] — Along with the slippery puck, human nature has taken some funny bounces during the first two weeks of the NHL season.

The scenario is similar in such hockey hotbeds as Montreal, New York, Chicago and Boston. The old-time, pure-bred fan, tired of being fed repeated doses of what he calls a watered-down, over-expanded product, complains that a whole month can go by between "good" games, the kind he remembers from the days of a six-team league.

It's hard to work up an interest, the fan will say, when the competition is so one-sided there is no doubt who will win the game.

Yet, when the weaker visiting team does put on a good show, these same fans show their appreciation by booing the home club.

There's no pleasing some people, it would seem, and there's been ample evidence of this psychological phenomena in the opening phase of the National Hockey League season.

For example:

Montreal, the favorite of many to regain the Stanley Cup now that Ken Dryden is back in goal, has won only one of its first six outings. In the season opener, the home fans watched in stunned amazement as the Canadiens required two power play goals in the closing minutes merely to earn a tie with the once hapless New York Islanders, who never have won in Montreal.

In their next home game, the Canadiens had to settle for a 4-4 tie with Los Angeles, which at present is the only unbeaten team in the NHL despite going winless throughout the exhibition schedule.

In New York, long-suffering fans treated their favorites to a few desultory choruses of razzberries as, in three home games, the Rangers had to fight from behind to overcome the fledgling Washington Capitals; settle for a tie with California, a team that had lost 17 of its previous 19 appearances in Madison Square Garden; and then drop an embarrassing 1-0 decision Sunday night to the Vancouver Canucks, who had won only twice before in the Garden.

The Black Hawks also got off on the wrong foot by dropping their home opener to Atlanta, marking the first time the Flames had won at Chicago, and Boston, another top contender for the Stanley Cup, currently is running third in its division.

While some of the stronger clubs have had trouble warming up their engines, the so-called weaker clubs have been surprising. Vancouver, which never has made the playoffs, just completed a four-game road trip in which it won three games and tied one to climb to the top of its division with only one loss in six outings; Los Angeles, unbeaten in six games although it opened the campaign with a five-game road trip, leads its division; and the Flames and Islanders, each with three victories in six games, are tied for another divisional lead with Philadelphia.

"It's the new divisional setup that's making the difference," Gerry Meehan of the Canucks explained, referring to the fact that the NHL now consists of four divisions with 10 teams qualifying for the playoffs.

"It makes a difference when you know you'll be in the race for a playoff berth all the way. You know you have something to work for."

UMass' victory: Mixture of good and bad

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

Saturday's win over Rhode Island was UMass' biggest win of the season so far. It gave UMass the conference lead over a Connecticut team that was shocked by an inspired UMaine team 7-0 at Storrs.

The game marked an auspicious debut for Brian McNally, a sophmore quarterback who played defensive back last year. McNally came in early in the second quarter and led UMass on several long scoring marches and showed that if he doesn't have the experience yet, he sure has the poise.

Mark Tripucka, pressed into the starter's role after Fred Kelliher's first-quarter injury against Villanova, continued to have problems moving the team and was lifted by Coach Dick MacPherson. "We'll just have to wait and see the films before deciding on who our number one quarterback will be come Saturday," said MacPherson.

The game was a carbon copy of the last two UMass games against Vermont, and Boston University. The Minutemen roared into a 14-0 halftime margin courtesy of two Greg Sprout placements, a Jim Torrance five yard run off right tackle and a brilliant diving, rolling grab by Walt Parker on a two-point conversion pass from McNally.

But the Minutemen came out like Littlemen in the second half and saw their shutout go by the boards when Paul Ryan rolled out on a fourth and one and hit end Bill Britt from the three, for Rhode Island's only score.

Rhody came back deep into UMass territory and at the end of the third Stenza seemed destined to score the tying marker when the biggest play of the game occured. On the first play of the fourth quarter Ryan looked for tight end Bill Matkevitch at the three but Bob Levine jumped in front of the receiver to intercept the pass.

McNally then led the Minutemen from their own three to the Rhode Island two in a nine minute drive that effectively put the game out of reach. Greg Sprout a good kicker who only needs a little more experience according to MacPherson to become a better one kicked a field goal to ice the win.

The drive was really the first impressive march the Minutemen have put together all season in the second half and, if anything, it proved to the players that they can move on offense in the second half. UMass quarterbacks also passed at a 50 per cent clip for a change. They're both morale boosters they'll sorely need against UConn.

Other than McNally the main offensive star was Jim Torrance who garnered 147 yards on 28 carries all of them big ones.

"We had our offensive line (they came through with another outstanding performance) of Russ Cooke, Ned Deane, Brad Calnan, and Ross Schubarth blow their opposite numbers out for three yards and from there Torrance was on his own. The offensive line did their best job of moving out people since the Villanova game."

There was a dark cloud on the UMass horizon however. The Minutemen failed to score touchdowns three times when they should have due to a fumble and two mental miscues.

In the first quarter Jerry Mondalto was stopped on a fourth and one from the URI six on a play that should have gone to Jim Torrance who was wide open, but MacPherson called the play to go to Mondalto and couldn't alert messenger tight end John Willis to change the call in time.

In the second quarter, McNally fumbled when hit at the two on a second and goal preventing UMass from scoring, while in the fourth quarter a McNally touchdown was called back on an illegal procedure call.

UMass will have to avoid fumbles and foolish penalties if they're to beat UConn. As MacPherson said after Saturday's win over the Rams, "we'll be a really good football team as soon as we can stop fumbling away the ball."

That and the continued improvement in the offense especially in the second half, could bring the Beanpot back to Amherst.

Thinclads topple Wildcats

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The UMass harriers had a scheduled meet against New Hampshire last Saturday, but coaches from both schools agreed to run the meet as part of the Codfish Bowl Cross Country Championships in Franklin Park. The result was a fourth place finish for UMass, as well as 24-35 victory over UNH in the Yankee Conference matchup.

New Hampshire's George Reed captured individual honors, as more than 200 runners from about thirty different colleges and universities took part in the five-mile race. The Wildcats' top harrier outran Charlie Duggan of Springfield, and in doing so, set a new meet record of 23:59.

Cliff Staples paced the Minutemen runners, a team composed entirely of freshmen, taking eleventh with a time of 24:46. The first-year harriers totalled 132 points to earn the fourth place finish. Springfield won the team title with 97 points, nipping Vermont by a margin of two.

Dino Lammachia ran his best race of the year to finish 26 in 25:22. Frank Carroll and Bobby Neil were timed in 25:28 and 25:32, respectively, and finished in the number 29 and 31 spots. Rolf Meyer was the fifth UMass runner, capturing 35 with a time of 25:35. Keene State took third with a total of 123 points, just nine points ahead of Staples and his teammates.

In placing fourth, the UMass freshmen beat 23 varsity cross country teams from New England, including squads from UConn, UNH and Central Connecticut.

Comparing the times to last year's New England championship times, the team would have placed fifth in the New Englands. It was a great overall showing, and all five runners ran so well that they would have placed in the top 45 at the 1973 New Englands. Of course, the circumstances at the New Englands are different from those at the Codfish Bowl, but the course is the same (Franklin-Park)—and times are the only comparative statistics in cross country.

CROSS COUNTRY CORNER — The University of Massachusetts cross country team was finally recognized in the National Poll. According to Harrier, a national cross country magazine, UMass was ranked thirteenth, just ahead of William and Mary. Providence, which topped the Minutemen runners earlier in the season, was ninth while Manhattan fell from the top 15.

The victory over UNH boosted the harriers' record to 9-2, the best since 1971, when Coach Ken O'Brien's charges went 10-3. This year, however, the dual meet record was better percentage-wise than 1971.

The freshmen runners will travel to Storrs this Saturday to face the freshmen of UConn and the varsity squad of Holy Cross. The harriers, led by Staples, Neil, Carroll, and Lammachia boast a 3-0 record.

Due to a change in the date of the New England Championships, the Yankee Conference meet has been changed from the originally scheduled date of October 26 to November 4. The YanCon showdown in Burlington, Vermont will be the next meet for the varsity harriers.

Intramural touch football campus championship playoffs begin today. All league championship teams should secure a copy of the playoff schedule from the IM office immediately.

It's Super Beanpot!

It's Super Bowl week in Amherst. That's right, the game of the year in the Yankee Conference will take place Saturday afternoon at Alumni Stadium between UMass and UConn.

The Minuteman victory over Rhode Island this weekend coupled with Maine's stunning upset of UConn at Storrs brought thoughts of a Beanpot back to the '74 edition of the UMass football team. Coming into the big game the Minutemen record in the conference is three and one, while UConn is two and one.

The only YanCon encounter left on the schedule would be New Hampshire at home on November 16th. If such is the case, the rest of the season would be academic and the Beanpot would return to Amherst after a one-year sabbatical.

The team which thus far has taken on the roll of the spoiler is, of course, Maine. Since rolling over to be humiliated by UMass earlier in the season (and it always seems that Maine comes up with totally inept performance against the Minutemen in any athletic endeavor) the Black Bears have come on to win their last three in a row. The hero in the victory over the Huskies was Winthrop's Mark DeGregorio. A five-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter may have put the nails in the 1974 UConn coffin.

But I shouldn't jump to fast conclusions. A victory over Connecticut is still needed. But, assuming that the Minuteman Machine rolls on, Coach Dick MacPherson won't have to be embarrassed about handing over the Beanpot to Larry Naviaux at Curry Hicks Cage during halftime of a basketball game. Instead, things may just be the other way around.

For that to happen, the Minutemen must have direction on the field come Saturday afternoon. No matter who starts at quarterback, the leadership has to be there. Sure, Rhode Island almost tied up the game in the fourth quarter until a Bobby Levine interception sealed the Rams' fate. If the momentum had swung the other way, who knows what the outcome would have been? And if Rhody could have pulled it out, this week's game would not have amounted to what it presently is being billed as.

Every year come January we hear nothing for a two week period save for news of the NFL's version of the Super Bowl. One day the sports pages all over the country focus on the two coaches and their contrasting styles, and the whole bit goes on and on comparing players at each position on the opposing teams. Well, nothing more need be said because the basics have already been set for this week's match. Everyone knows that it's the battle for the Beanpot, the holy grail of the Yankee Conference.

Super Bowl week is only just beginning.

Ford warns against 'extremists' in Congress

CLEVELAND [UPI] — President Ford campaigned through the Midwest for Republican candidates yesterday with a warning that a Democratic landslide Nov. 5 could pack Congress with economic "extremists" and jeopardize peace.

In increasingly tougher language Ford beseeched party faithful at stops in Oklahoma and Ohio to back Republican statehouse and congressional candidates to preserve the two-party system.

A Democratic landslide "could resurrect the wild spending programs of the years 1965 and 1966," Ford told an Oklahoma City rally, and "election of these extremists of the Democratic Party — and they would come from that element — could threaten the internal balance of our legislative processes."

Citing world trouble spots from Cuba to the Middle East, Ford said a President needs a bipartisan Congress behind him to deal with international problems.

"If we get the wrong kind of Congress, peace could be in jeopardy," he said.

"I plead with you to give America, not to me, the kind of Congress that would be missionary, farsighted and imaginative."

Ford said 1974 is "the year of decision, as I see it, for the survival of the two-party system in our great country."

Democratic National Chairman Robert Strauss reacted strongly to Ford's use of words like "extremists," and called on the President to retract them.

"It's reminiscent of the 1970 campaign efforts of President Nixon and Vice President Agnew," Strauss said. "The same kind of

Brooke calls busing right if it ends segregation

By PAUL LOGUE JR.
AND JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporters

Senator Edward Brooke said yesterday he thinks busing is morally right if it can be used to abolish government designed segregation which he believes exists in Boston.

"I have never seen separate but equal education," he told a small audience in the Colonial Room of the Student Union.

Brooke, who was here to campaign for Staff Representative hopeful Bill Atkins, said the actual process of busing is a red herring which has been twisted into a political issue by demogogic politicians who are trying to excite the people. He said he has seen busing used more often for the purposes of segregation rather than integration.

He added that 75 per cent of all students were being bused prior to this school year, but not for the purpose of racial balance. He also said his Southern colleagues in Congress have been making cracks to him about "those rednecks in Boston".

When asked if he would vote to confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President, he said he respected Rockefeller as a competent and talented politician, adding that he had campaigned for him in the past. He said he'll wait until the hearings being held by the Senate Rules Committee are completed before making a decision.

Brooke summarized his fear of this country's danger of becoming a one party system. "The people are mad about Watergate as the polls show it. If the swing continues to move in more Democrats for this reason then we can expect trouble."

Brooke gave Massachusetts as an example: "In the legislature there are only eight republicans out of 40 in the Senate, 52 out of 240 in the House and no republicans in the executive councils except those appointed. The fact is that most of the country is Democratic. If that isn't a one party system, then I don't know what is."

Brooke added that it is time for people to take stock in Mass. There are so many aspects of politics in which people can get involved in. "We need the young not only as critics but as active participants."

Calling himself a Maverick, Brooke said he has remained a Republican because, "I feel that working with the conservatives from within will help the growth of the party."

A Veterans' representative asked Brooke if he would vote to override the bill on the President's desk which would improve Vietnam Veterans' benefits if the President vetos it? Brooke said he would vote in favor of the Vets.

He also elaborated that the Vietnam Vet has not received the benefits those of "my war" have received. "It is time that these men got what they need as far as these benefits will provide." He favors the Amnesty Board idea that Ford has implemented. "As far as those with strong convictions go I would favor unconditional amnesty, but not all fit into this category."

Funding for off-campus housing in Spring called likely by Gage

By LANA FISCHER
Staff Reporter

Dr. Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, says there is a "good chance" he'll allocate funds to the Off-Campus Housing Office project next spring when reviewing various proposals.

Larry Gendron, President of the Commuter Assembly, had expressed concern that the office would not be re-established by Whitmore officials. The Commuter Assembly had previously operated on a experimental basis with funds it no longer has.

Gendron said Gage had indicated to him at the beginning of the semester that the office was a "good idea" but that funds from Whitmore were not available to support it.

Gendron claims the Off-Campus Housing Office has been very successful. According to the assembly president, the office not only "helped students look for places to live by giving them information on apartment complexes in the area," but also "cut down the workload of apartment complexes by sifting out people who knew about the complexes before inquiring to see the apartments."

Gage told the Collegian he feels the Off-Campus Housing Office is a "useful and well-patronized service for students."

Gage said that although "we don't have spare pockets of money," he sees the project as being of "outstanding importance" and that he would hate to see it "wither and die."

Randy Dahl, head of the Commuter Student Affairs Office, said that office only had enough funds to pay for one of the two clerical positions for six weeks.

He said other funding for the project during the summer included $1500 from a Federally supported work-study program and $200 from the Graduate Center.

Dahl said a joint proposal from the Commuter Assembly and the Commuter Affairs Office in regards to the project has yet to be written and presented to Gage. "Right now," he said, "we're going through preliminary soundings. Gage has not yet said yes or no since we have not yet presented a formal proposal."

Gage has indicated he would like to see the project set up educational session to instruct students on leases so that they might be able to "make wise decisions on their own."

School of Ed marathon returns next month

Twice a year, once in the fall and once again in the spring, the School of Education sends out a call to anybody interested in education in any way to come together at UMass and share their ideas. The response in the past has brought as many as 5000 people to attend over 400 events. For five thirteen-hour days (Nov. 11-15) as many as 10 different activities take place simultaneously. Usually lasting an hour, they range from transcendental meditation to computer uses in education and just about everything in between.

The sessions are free and open to the entire University community and general public. There is no registration and participants wander in and out of the School of Education picking and choosing from the potpourri of events. The atmosphere is much like that of a bazaar-normally quiet hallways are jammed with noisy crowds buzzing excitedly about what has just been seen or done and what's about to take place. Every age, color, sex and stereotype is present, coming this year from as far as North Dakota and North Carolina.

The whole idea is to get people to expose themselves to as many new and different ideas, activities and other people as possible in one week, organizers say.

This year there will be three special emphasis days. Tuesday, Nov. 12, will feature the arts and education when "Marathoners" will have the chance to participate in a clown workshop, dance and drama exercises, puppet making, photography, quilting, poetry, and body movement among other things.

Thursday, Nov. 12, is Alternative School Day when dozens of alternative schools (directors, teachers, parents and students) will be on hand to exchange ideas and experiences. The National Alternative School Program will also present its survey of all the public alternative schools in the country.

Friday is a rather unusual day, unless one milks cows and cooks Chinese meals everyday. When the program says the emphasis is on Community Based Education, it's no joke. For half of the day, some of the most exciting people in Action learning (the Foxfire people, Dynamy - an internship program from Worchester, City As School from N.Y., Univ. without Walls, Alternative Semester Programs from Boston and Vermont among others) will be discussing their activities. BUT, the second half of the day, will find "Marathoners" out in the community - milking cows, cooking, banking, news reporting, researching - actually putting into practice what they just finished talking about that morning.

The School tries to make it as easy and rewarding as possible for people to attend: Day Care is provided free of charge; parking is free and readily available; pick-up meals are cheap, healthy and on the spot; university credit is offered to UMass students free of charge (20 hours of participation equals 1 hour of credit) and $31 credit for non-students; and events run from nine in the morning until ten at night so that participation can be worked in and around classes and jobs.

Some of the events that promise to be of interest, aside from the special emphasis days include: Outdoor Education for all ages; the Charlotte, North Carolina Community Drug Program; a three-part course on story telling; Cross-cultural education games; harmonograph building; all of the Teacher Preparation Programs; hypnosis; children's literature; sex education; bike touring; the film "Future Shock"; a children's theatre workshop; and many, many more.

For more information, call the Marathon Office at 545-1585 or go visit them in 225 C in the School of Education. There is a preliminary schedule available which lists all of the events currently planned.

The School of Education Marathon balloon attracts a crowd as it lands on campus last year. The Marathon will return again on November 11.

Car pool information being compiled now

The new, revised car pool lists are now being compiled for distribution during the first week of November for students who want to correct erroneous information on the original list, add a phone number, or add your name to the list for the first time. It will be held in the Commuter Assembly Office (Hatch level, Student Union, beside games room). The deadline for completed registration cards is Wednesday, Oct. 30th at 5 p.m. The office is open from 9-5 on Monday-Friday and the phone number is 5-2145.

These lists are for faculty, staff, students, or anyone else commuting to the UMass campus.

This car pool system is computer assisted and it lists people who are interested in starting a car pool. After locating your name on the list, it's up to you to contact others in your area and arrange something with them.

Some people who registered during the summer did not get their names on the list. However their cards have now been located and will be added to the revised list.

The day the revised lists are ready a notice will be posted in the Collegian along with a list of the 10 spots on campus where they can be found. Any questions about this car pool system can be answered at the Commuter Assembly Office.

Dr. Moore helps plan medical seminar

A UMass professor of public health has helped organize a three-day medical technology seminar to be held in Manchester Thursday through Saturday.

Dr. Gary S. Moore, director of the UMass medical technology program, said the goal of the seminar, is to "encourage continuing education of members of the Society for Medical Technology."

Moore stressed that medical technology majors are encouraged to attend the seminar which is being held at the Sheraton-Wayfarer Motor Inn. Moore said it's about a 90-minute drive to that Manchester Motor Inn.

Workshops will be conducted in such areas as Microbiology, Hematology, Chemistry, Immunology and Coagulation. Other topics will include blood banking and histology. On Saturday, various topics will be discussed concerning student careers.

Moore said students will not be required to pay a daily registration fee if they are members of the SMT. Student non-members of the SMT must pay a $2 daily registration fee. Moore also said student rates are available with the hotel.

Boston meeting held on student office

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

Student government leaders here are awaiting a report from the state's Department of Education on a recent meeting held in Boston to discuss the creation of a Mass. Office of Student Affairs.

Joseph Cronin, Mass. Secretary of Education, met with representatives of 75 Mass. public and private colleges to discuss the creation of that office in his department.

Richard Savini, President of the UMass Student Government Association, said there was some suspicion among the student leaders that the meeting might have been some sort of publicity stunt for Governor Francis Sargent's reelection campaign.

But he said such an office is probably needed to get student input into the state's education department.

Martin Miller, Chairperson of the UMass Academic Affairs Committee, also attended that meeting. He said the "need to have an office that deals with the staff beauracracy, but it shouldn't be under the control of the state."

The proposal for the office was initially made about two years ago by former UMass SGA president Larry Ladd. In a seven-page report to state leaders, he wrote that "no program presently exists that represents the Massachusetts student in a meaningful and constructive way.'

He concluded the report saying the Office of Student Affairs "could reaffirm Massachusetts belief in the development of the students' individual initiative especially in regard to intern staff of the office."

Miller said another meeting will be held in Nov. at Southern Massachusetts University (SMU).

Amherst officials reject coeducation

By BILLY SCHWARTZ AND LEE NEWMAN
Amherst Student Correspondents

Alumni leaders have approved by a "reasonably close margin" a recommendation to the Trustees not to make Amherst coeducational.

The results of the closely divided vote were presented to the Trustees this weekend along with a statement reaffirming full alumni support of the College if the Trustees decide to admit women.

President Ward, returning from the weekend deliberations in New York, said this morning that "If the Trustees choose coeducation in two weeks, this document (from the alumni) will give us the best posture vis a vis alumni response after the vote." He found the alumni mention of "a close margin" to be "most significant for me."

The alumni vote was taken two weeks ago by members of the Executive Committee of the Alumni Council and other interested alumni assigned to work with the five campus committees which last year studied the issue of coeducation.

The statement, which includes a cross-section of opinions on the issue of admitting women, will be mailed this week to all alumni.

Several of the 18 alumni who attended the meeting two weeks ago declined comment on the actual margin of what their collective statement calls "a reasonably close vote."

"The whole evening was a very reasoned, low-keyed and objective inquiry," said C. Michael Spero '58, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Alumni Council.

"I do not believe there was a member there who presented an emotional argument," he said about the Friday alumni-Trustee meeting. "There were just the basic concerns about the specific effects on size, finances, and relations with the sister institutions. Both those who spoke for and against spoke on a thoughtful, reasoned basis rather than on one of nostalgia," Spero said.

In their presentation to the Board, the Alumni Council Executive Committee and alumni commentators offered four views on the issue. They said that among the alumni, "Those opposed include 1) Those who believe that the College's current situation is desirable and unique; and 2) those who believe that coeducation is educationally desirable but that financial considerations, impact on sister institutions, and the size of the College outweigh the desirability of coeducation.".

Mt. Holyoke studies Black Studies major

By MEG SOENS
Mt. Holyoke Correspondent

The 1973-74 Mt. Holyoke catalogue contains a statement in the description of the Black Studies major indicating that a five college major in Black Studies would be implemented "from the start of the current academic year". Such a major at Mr. Holyoke has yet to be started.

Hampshire and UMass have already approved the project. Walter Steward, chairman of Mt. Holyoke's Black Studies Department, has pointed out that the unequal relationship of blacks and whites and its result of distorted social reality has perpetuated through conventional academic offerings. The aim of the Five College Black Studies program is to develop in students a definition of reality "free of distortion which serve the interests of those who desire to subordinate others. When the position was first proposed at the faculty meeting last spring it sparked some major controversy. It was said to be ideologically slanted for a definition of a major.

Stewart emphasized the fact that in his view the delay in confirmation of a Five College Black studies major at Mt. Holyoke was in no way due to "foot-dragging" on the part of the administration. It was, he claimed, due to the heavy workload of the Academic Policy Committee last year and to his own tardiness in giving materials they requested.

The arguments brought out at two meetings of the Subcommittee on Black Studies clearly indicates that it is basically a conflict of rhetoric and semantics. The questions revolves around not merely the wording of a statement but also around the very definition of Black studies and its resultant validity as a field of study. More meetings are scheduled for this heated controversy.

Dr. Horner lauds Smith College for adapting to social changes

By CAROLYN HULL-RYDE
Smith College Correspondent

In a speech kicking off Smith's centennial events Monday night, Dr. Metina Horner praised Smith saying in the midst of shifting societal demands "Smith College has successfully addressed the challenges presented to her by each succeeding generation."

The need to re-examine sexual stereotypes is a recurring theme for Dr. Horner who advised the audience that there must be a "careful shaping of new and essential roles for both men and women - and it is important that it be for men and women because we are mutually interdependent."

In describing the history of higher education for women, Horner called it "a story of achievement in the face of protest, active resistance and subtle dissuasion that came and comes in many forms, from many different sources, for many different reasons."

Most influential and damaging of all, Dr. Horner said, were the dire predictions of clergy and the medical profession about the "inevitability of extensive physical and moral disintegration and social ostracism for women" who entered education. She added that during the 18th, 19th and early 20th centuries young women were warned to conceal their learning for the sign of education meant a farewell to every winning grace.

Horner described the "profound negative consequences" of the industrialization on the lifestyles and status of women. With the egress of the family from rural to urban areas women and children became economic liabilities. The status of women diminished to male dependency. With an increased emphasis upon competitive achievement for men, a working wife spelled masculine failure, Dr. Horner said.

In the face of strong resistance, Dr. Horner pointed to such women as Sophia Smith (founder of the college), who saw the need industrialization brought for women's education. Smith proposed that a young woman's education should be made equal to that afforded to young men. In September, 1875, Smith College opened.

To achieve stability was the goal of the woman's movement at the end of the 19th century. Today the woman's movement is a human question, challenging roles and the way we have organized society. New levels of social consciousness required of each of us is the major issue of the movement. But she stressed that "when resources are scarce, consciousness diminishes". Women must be free to enjoy self determined life goals, traditional or nontraditional, Dr. Horner said, adding that "the pursuit of knowledge and search for oneself is a lifelong, ongoing process."

Hampshire Council rejects 17 proposals

By BIFF PRICE
Hampshire Climax Correspondent

The Hampshire College Community Council, in a chaotic meeting, last Thursday, rejected all 17 Governance Review Committee proposals. Rather than consider each of the 17 separately, the Community Council voted them all down as a package. It was the first leak in the Governance Review boat at Hampshire, but some observers felt that the vote would not affect upcoming deliberations in either Academic or College Council.

The proposals came from a study commissioned by the College Council. This month the proposals are the subject of heated debate in all three governance Councils. In November, all Councils will meet and again discuss governance. Early next year, a new ad hoc Constitutional Reform Committee will gather all input from the entire Hampshire Community as well as the Councils and then attempt to draw up Constitutional amendments or a revised Constitution for Hampshire College.

Much of the 'risk' has been taken out of transferring to Hampshire by the initiation of a new transfer admissions policy. Students now transferring to Hampshire will be evaluated to determine academic status by faculty before they arrive here. Formerly transferring students were kept in the dark about their academic status until they arrived. When they arrived, their work was evaluated.

The new policy will require transfers to submit all work about two months before the start of the semester. Since Hampshire is not on the credit system, a group of faculty would evaluate past work and place the student accordingly. The student is then able to contest the group's decision if desired. His academic standing would be announced two weeks before the billing date, giving the student some time to decide if the placement is satisfactory. According to The Hampshire Climax, reaction from transferring students now on campus seems to be favorable.

Tape says Ehrlichman, Haldeman knew

Dean admits covering up Ellsberg break-in WASHINGTON [UPI] — John W. Dean III, the Watergate prosecution's star witness, admitted yesterday that he knew about the 1971 Ellsberg break-in eight months after it happened and that he destroyed one of the burglars' notebooks after the original Watergate trial in January, 1973.

"You were covering up the California burglary?" asked John J. Wilson, attorney for H.R. Haldeman, former White House in the Watergate cover-up trial.

"Yes, sir, I was," Dean acknowledged.

"And you did this consciously?" Wilson asked.

"I did."

"Why?"

"That was the easiest solution for me at the moment. I just put it in a shredder and hoped the problem would go away," Dean said.

The cross-examination of Dean began after President Richard M. Nixon's former counsel had been under direct questioning for five days as the prosecution's first and star witness.

Just before chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal finished his direct questioning, he played the sixth presidential tape to be introduced into evidence. In the tape, made of a conversation April 16, 1973, Nixon told Dean that Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, his top two aides, were "in on the obstruction."

Members of the White House "plumbers" special investigation unit committed both the 1971 break-in at the office of Pentagon Papers defendant Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist in Beverly Hills, Calif., and the 1972 break-in at the Democratic National Committee in the Watergate complex.

Ehrlichman was found guilty of conspiring to violate the psychiatrist's civil liberties. Nixon said in written interrogatories at the trial in July that he learned of the break-in March 17, 1973.

A notebook belonging to E. Howard Hunt Jr., a mastermind of both break-ins, was removed from his White House safe after the first break-in. As Wilson bore in, Dean testified he found the notebook in January, 1973, the same month that Hunt and others were convicted in the original Watergate trial.

In his final testimony under direct examination, Dean said he had been disbarred from the practice of law, had received no promises from the government in exchange for his testimony, and was now serving a prison sentence.

Judge issues warning in Kent State trial

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Federal Judge Frank J. Battisti cautioned newsmen and attorneys yesterday to avoid prejudicing the case of the prosecution or the defense in the trial of eight former Ohio National Guardsmen charged in the shootings at Kent State University in which four students were killed and nine wounded.

Battisti referred to a statement made earlier by former Guardsman James Pierce that he had lost his job on a construction project in Florida because of the amount of time the trial is expected to take.

Pierce made the statement during selection of the jury for the trial which is expected to take about six weeks, according to Battisti.

"Statements outside the court do not concern us in the extent as they may be prejudicial in this case," Battisti said. "The reporters should know better and counsel should instruct its clients not to make statements of this kind to the news media."

Battisti later tempered his statement and said it was not an admonishment of the media.

"It is quite probable that my statement...can be taken as rather harsh," said Battisti. "I happen to know the statement was recorded accurately and I am not criticizing the reporting."

"I would like the press to keep in mind that the spirit of my remarks is to avoid prejudicing the case of either the government or the defense," Battisti said. "We are all aware of the problems that exist through the constitutional rights of free speech and to a free press and to a fair trial.

"It is difficult for the press to know where to draw the line," said Battisti. "I am not admonishing the reporters."

Five of the guardsmen face maximum sentences of life imprisonment if convicted in the deaths of four students demonstrating four years ago against the expansion of the war in Indochina.

Cost of living climbs again to 12.1 per cent annual rate

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rising prices in everything to haircuts and shoeshines boosted the cost of living in September to its highest annual rate since 1947, the Labor Department reported yesterday.

At the same time, the monthly report said, the average wage-earner had 5.2 per cent spendable income this September than he did a year ago because of the impact of inflation and higher payroll deductions.

The September figures showed that the consumer price index — the best pocketbook yardstick of inflation — rose 1.2 per cent for the month on a seasonally-adjusted basis and 12.1 per cent for the 12-month period, an annual rate unequalled in 27 years.

AFL-CIO President George Meany said the report showed that "sharply rising prices are wiping out the modest wage gains of American workers...Instead of moving forward in the American tradition, workers are being pushed backward. Their living standards and those of the elderly and the poor are eroding at an intolerable pace."

The report said retail prices defied economic norms by rising even where they normally decline at this time of year and, overall, price-increases effected nearly every corner of the consumer budget.

Food prices, for example, rose 1.4 per cent in September when they are supposed to show a seasonal dip. Prices were higher for beef, pork, poultry, eggs, cereal, bakery products, processed fruits and vegetables, sugar and sweets.

Moroccan officials stop alleged assassination plot

RABAT [UPI] — Moroccan authorities smashed a plot by Al Fatah Palestinian guerrillas to assassinate King Hussein of Jordan during the Arab summit meeting opening in Rabat this weekend, Arab diplomatic sources said yesterday.

Moroccan government officials would not immediately confirm the report which coincided with the opening of an Arab ministerial meeting to complete preparations for the summit scheduled for Oct. 26.

The sources said Moroccan security forces arrested 14 Palestinians on charges of planning to kill Hussein.

All were members of Al Fatah, the guerrilla organization headed by Yasser Arafat, who also is chairman of the overall Palestinian Liberation Organization, the sources said.

The sources said four of those detained held "relatively senior" positions in Al Fatah, the most powerful of the Palestinian guerrilla movements, but their names were not disclosed.

Jordanian authorities have frequently accused Palestinians of being behind a number of abortive murder attempts against Hussein. The two sides have been bitter enemies since Jordanian troops smashed Palestinian guerrilla forces on Hussein's orders in the bitter "Black September" fighting in Jordan in 1970.

Ray says lawyer pressured him to plead guilty

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] — Attorneys for James Earl Ray contended in Federal Court yesterday that Ray's previous lawyer, Percy Foreman, told Ray he would "barbeque" in the electric chair unless he pleaded guilty to the slaying of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Ray is trying to win a new trial on grounds he was pressured into saying he killed the famed civil rights leader, an act he now denies.

Bernard Fensterwald hit hard at Foreman, the noted Houston, Tex., attorney, in his opening statement, but then moved on to the question of whether the conditions of Ray's confinement in the Shelby County Jail prior to trial rendered him incapable of making a logical decision.

Ray is asking U.S. District Judge Robert M. McRae Jr. to set aside his guilty plea negotiated by Foreman on March 10, 1969, and order a new trial.

Fensterwald said Ray never intended to plead guilty to the murder of King, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize. He said Ray had every intention of going to trial and asserting his innocence in the April 4, 1968, slaying.

"Attorney Foreman coerced Ray into a guilty plea," Fensterwald said. "Foreman put every pressure on Ray. He said Ray would barbecue, be electrocuted, if he went to trial. He used bribery as well as coercion to see that Ray did not backslide on his agreement to plead guilty."

Fensterwald offered no evidence the first day to back up his charges against Percy. Instead, he moved into the events surrounding Ray's stay in the Shelby County Jail from the time of Ray's arrest in London on June 8, 1968, to his guilty plea nine months later.

Fensterwald said Shelby County officials deprived Ray of many of his rights during the time he was in "Cellblock A" awaiting trial. The defense lawyer said he was particularly concerned that Ray's mail was copied and sent to prosecutors.

Mozambique troops restore order after 48 die in racial clashes

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique [UPI] — Loyal troops arrested dissident Portuguese Commandos yesterday and restored order after at least 48 persons were killed in the bloodiest racial clashes since a black-majority government took power in this East African country.

Hospital authorities said 33 whites were among those who died in Monday night's street battles between black and white troops which set off mob violence in the capital's African shantytowns. An estimated 160 persons were injured.

Portuguese High Commissioner Rear Adm. Victor Crespo, appealing for calm on radio, said mixed black and white army patrols had restored control and arrested units of Portuguese commandos who face punishment. But most of the 240 soldiers involved were flown home to Portugal Tuesday, military sources said.

Frelimo Mozambique Liberation Front Premier Joaquim Chissano, installed in office last month after the front's 13-year guerrilla war against Portugal, said over national radio, "Loyal troops have neutralized dissident groups."

The Frelimo administration asked Portugal to maintain its 65,000-man army in the former colony during the transition to formal independence next June.

The renewed racial bloodshed endangered the fragile peace between Mozambique's eight million Africans and 250,000 non-blacks and could shatter Portuguese Army and Frelimo cooperation in the eight months before Portugal's complete withdrawal, military sources said.

rhetoric and the same sort of attempt to appeal to the baser instincts of the American people. It was rejected in 1970 and it will be rejected in 1974."

Throughout the day Ford received additional reports from local party officials of slipping Republican support, and some acknowledged that Ford's appearances were themselves attracting smaller crowds than hoped.

Ford leveled his hard-hitting attack on the Democrats at a public rally attended by about some 9,500 persons in Oklahoma City's Convention Center and then flew here to continue the fight in an address to about 300 GOP faithful who paid $500 a plate at a fund-raising dinner in a downtown hotel.

Underscoring a widely reported GOP problem, former Republican Gov. James Rhodes, locked in a tight race to unseat Democratic Gov. John Gilligan, pointedly separated himself from the national party and chose not to appear with Ford in predominantly Democratic Cleveland. Cleveland Mayor Ralph Perk meantime was reported trailing his Democratic opponent for the Senate, former Astronaut John Glenn, by a wide margin.

Gas controls hit

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Federal Energy Administrator John C. Sawhill said yesterday the government must lift federal price controls from natural gas in order to avoid supply shortages.

Consumers, he said, will have to expect and tolerate the higher prices that would surely follow such deregulation.

"We need more supplies to distribute, not more shortages," Sawhill said in a speech to the American Gas Association.

"And the only way we will develop those supplies..is by deregulating the price of new natural gas."

U.S. goes South, West

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The population of southern and western states continued rapid growth in 1974 while declines in six states produced a slowing trend in the Northeast and Midwest, the Census Bureau said yesterday.

As for the nation as a whole, the bureau estimated the population at 211.4 million on July 1, 1974, an increase of 1.6 million in the past year and 8.2 million since the 1970 census.

Between July 1, 1973, and last July 1, the bureau reported, population losses were registered in New York, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Iowa. The District of Columbia also had a population drop.

Arizona and Florida continued their four-year pace as the nation's fastest-growing states.

Kissinger embarks

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger embarked yesterday on an extended diplomatic mission to Moscow, South Asia, and possibly the Middle East, to promote peace and draw attention to the world's long-range food problems.

Kissinger, who visited Mexico Monday with President Ford, was flying first to Moscow for talks with Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev Oct. 23-27 on the next stage in Soviet-American strategic arms negotiations.

From the Soviet capital he will fly to India, Bangladesh, Pakistan and Afghanistan to discuss political, economic and food problems in South Asia before delivering a major address to the World Food Conference in Rome, Nov. 5.

Legislature rejected it

Campaign reform question appears on ballot

BOSTON [UPI] - The Watergate scandals-secretive bagmen escorting briefcases stuffed with laundered money from fatcat lobbyists - have caused politicians to scramble over each other screaming for campaign finance reform.

In Massachusetts, it resulted in a campaign finance reform law which is being tested this election season. It also resulted in a popular petition drive that was a success among the voters.

However, the petition, the work of Sen. John M. Quinlan of Norwood, a Republican candidate for secretary of state, was not a success in the legislature, where it was turned down overwhelmingly by the Democratic controlled House and Senate earlier this year.

That is why referendum Question 5 is on the Nov. 5 ballot, the only question out of six not to bear the stamp of approval of the legislature.

Quinlan's petition, if approved by a majority of the voters, would establish a five member Corrupt Practices Commission appointed by the governor to staggered five year terms. The commission would have subpoena powers and could hold secret hearings to investigate candidates' compliance with state and federal campaign financing laws.

The petition also would extend the provisions of the current law regarding disclosure of campaign expenditures and contributions to all candidates for public office above the town and city level. Candidates would be required to receive and disburse by check all amounts larger than $25.

Candidates would have to designate a single bank as the depository for campaign funds. The bank would have to be the recordkeeper for the candidates' finances and records of receipts and expenditures would be open to the public.

Candidates would be limited to one fund raising committee.

Campaign spending limits in the current law would be extended to cover all media expenses and require all media firms to report the purchase of media services by candidates.

Under the existing law, Chapter 1173 of 1973, an independent director chosen by a four member committee the state chairman of each party, the secretary of state, and a law school dean appointed by the governor does the work of the proposed corrupt practices commission.

Rep. George Keverian, an Everett Democrat and House chairman of the Election Laws Committee, argued that "the Quinlan people are a little embarrassed by the five member independent commission. The legislature pre-empted their reform. But Quinlan chose the course because it was the vehicle he was using to run for secretary of state."

Dukakis disputes Sargent on taxes

BOSTON [UPI] - Democratic gubernatorial nominee Michael S. Dukakis yesterday said he wants Gov. Francis W. Sargent to explain just how he would avoid a major tax increase next year in the face of an impending budget deficit.

Dukakis, according to polls way ahead in his race to unseat Sargent, said he has been unable to find "even a single budget analyst or fiscal expert who shares" Sargent's evaluation of Massachusetts' fiscal state.

"Everyone from the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation to the House Republican leader agrees there will be a major deficit next year," Dukakis told a gathering at Suffolk University.

"As a responsible candidate for governor," Dukakis said, "I have outlined precisely how I plan to avoid a budget deficit and new taxes next year, now I call on the governor to do that."

"If he doesn't outline those plans - and he hasn't to date," he added, "I think the citizens of this state can only conclude that a re-elected Sargent administration will be forced to enact a major new tax program next year."

"Well, I wonder if he isn't misleading people in stating he'll avoid taxes next year," Dukakis said. "He hasn't done so in the past - and he hasn't said how he'll avoid new taxes in the future. In fact, it is interesting to note that in 1970 he waited until after another election before proposing new taxes, which came in 1971."

Police find weapons in Boston schools

BOSTON [UPI] - Eight knives were found by police yesterday in front of two Boston high schools as officials began using metal detectors to stop the flow of weapons into racially troubled classrooms.

The detectors were placed at Hyde Park and South Boston High Schools, scene of previous violence stemming from implementation of a U.S. District Court school desegregation order that 18,235 students be bused. Classes were conducted without major mishap.

The school department said five metal detectors on loan to the city from Eastern and United Airlines, were available for use and two more were on route from United and an Oregon manufacturer. Officials declined to say where the new devices would be used.

Hyde Park Headmaster John Best said detectors were placed at one of two doorways to his school and students entering were "spot checked." No weapons were found on students, but six jacknives were found on the front lawn, he added.

High School students discuss integration

CHARLOTTE, N.C. [UPI] — Four students from Boston's racially troubled Hyde Park High School began a four day exchange of ideas yesterday with students from Charlotte public schools, fully integrated within the past decade.

"We hope we can talk to you on a relaxed basis," said Gordon Cureton, chairman of a student relations group. "Everything's not perfect here as you might believe. We too have problems."

The four Boston students were invited to visit Charlotte to see what has been done to make integration work. West Charlotte High School students initiated the exchange through letters to Boston newspapers urging Bostonians to "give integration a chance."

The four Boston students, Iana Gonsal, Bob Messina, Linda Lawrence and Barbara Steer, arrived Monday night amid a large gathering of students and reporters.

The overwhelming attention given the visit was beginning to cause the visitors to "clam up," said one school official, and the students indicated they wanted more discussions in "private" sessions.

"The mission in coming here is to learn," said Sam Messina, Bob's father, who accompanied the students here. "The best way of communicating might be in small groups, in executive session if you know what I'm saying."

Several students on the committee briefed the visitors on steps taken at various Charlotte schools to keep trouble to a minimum.

"The main problem we do have is due to parents causing their children to rebel," said one Charlotte student.

Studies housing, financial aid

Student Center strives to humanize UMass

By LAWRENCE MAGID

Director of the Student Center for Educational Research

Housing, financial aid, and the politics of classroom education are only a few of current studies being conducted by the Student Center for Educational Research. The Center, now in its second semester, is a unique program, funded by the Students, Senate; the Center is dedicated to humanizing the living and learning conditions at UMass by having students study their university with an eye towards changing it.

The Center began its operation in January but the idea was developed more than a year ago by a group of student Senators seeking a vehicle through which they could find "ammunition" for their reform efforts while involving increasing numbers of students in the process of change.

"If we're ever going to take control of this institution, we've got to understand it inside and out" commented Tom Spriggs, former Chairperson of the S.C.E.R. Board of Directors. "Sure a few of us have ideas as to what makes Whitmore tick, but to build a movement around institutional reform we need massive numbers of aware students and we need to know about the whole system."

While hardly reaching the masses, S.C.E.R. has succeeded in involving about 35 students in the process of researching and understanding the university. The first activity of S.C.E.R. was spring semester's Student Interest Research Seminar. The seminar, a three credit course, gave students practical experience in various types of research techniques.

While students learned about and used specialized research methodologies, the main focus of the course was to apply common sense and serious inquiry into an issue of mutual concern. Linda Collins, a student in last semester's seminar and now part time paid research assistant for the Center feels the experience was far more valuable to her than her previous courses in research methods.

"In most method courses the professor lectures about various research techniques and then tells the students to choose a subject — any subject — to apply the technique. But here we First decide what we need to know and then figure out the way to get the information."

This semester's research seminar is taking a similar approach, but unlike last year when the Center concentrated on a long range study of counseling, S.C.E.R.'s students are now involved in a myriad of projects. Frank Antonelli, and Lucy Ross, are working together to determine the feasibility of a publishing Course and Teacher Evaluation booklet which would inform students in how their peers feel about the course offerings and professors at UMass. A consumer guide to learning; this pamphlet would be a valuable tool for students as well as an incentive to make faculty more creative teachers.

While several S.C.E.R. students are looking into educational questions, others are examining the economic issues of the University. Steve Latter, Matt Burns and John Pepi are examining the residence hall policies. Working closely with the Student Organizing Project, S.C.E.R. wants to find out whether the University can legally force students to pay $100 a month to rent half a dorm room. And since Commuters aren't getting any bargains, S.C.E.R. students John O'Keefe, Gail Sullivan and Ellen Gavin are working with the Veterans Coalition to determine the cause of Amherst's inflated rentals and what can be done to protect the interests of student tenants.

Despite what you thought of your introductory social science class, institutional research can be exciting and fun. To be serious you don't need to be stodgy and to be responsible you don't need to be docile. S.C.E.R. leaves no assumptions unchallanged and is willing, if necessary, to dig into the university's highest offices and most obscure documents.

It's not too late to get involved this semester. There are still opportunities for students to gain skills and possibly earn some money or credit for working with the Center. Small assistantships are available for grads and undergraduates.

In addition to the studies mentioned earlier, S.C.E.R. is working on an investigation into financial aid, a look at the Campus Center finances, the conditions for student employees, tenure practices, grading, the university power structure and more. To get involved come to the office in Room 432 Student Union or call 545-2892.

Student senators to be sworn during SGA meeting tonight

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The new student senators will be sworn in at tonight's meeting. Convening at 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

The Student Government Association governance convention will then take place at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. "All Students are urged to attend," Cindy McGrath, speaker of the Senate said.

The convention will discuss events of the past two weeks concerning students' power and rights. According to McGrath, "This is the first time a general governance meeting has taken place other than SGA president elections. Things can prove to be quite "interesting."

She also said the governance convention is basically going to discuss the function of student government. "Why do we have it, why the administration ties our hands, how that situation can be combatted if it should be combatted at all?"

The convention, she said, is "a way of finding out whether or not student government is representative of students. We don't know the relationship student government should have with the administration and with the students."

Women in business subject of seminar

The role of women in business management is the topic of a seminar Wednesday through Friday, Nov. 13-15, at the UMass School of Business Administration.

Three women management consultants are on the seminar faculty: M. Barbara Boyle, president of Boyle-Kirkman Associates management consulting firm; Sharon Kirkman, vice president of the firm; and Mary Barber, faculty member at the UMass School of Business Administration.

"Women: developing their role in management" is the title of the seminar which will include discussion on such topics as: "examining myths and stereotypes about women," "preparing a personal development plan," "organizational principles," and "the five-step approach to controlling."

Boyle-Kirkman Associates, headed by two of the seminar faculty members, specializes in helping corporations and educational institutions utilize women resources. M. Barbara Boyle has conducted executive awareness seminars for corporations and professional groups including the Harvard Business School and the International Management Conference.

It takes a crisis

By BOB FOSTER

Did you ever notice the fact that it takes a crisis to open the eyes of America? Study the Great Depression (did you ever wonder why "they" call it "Great"?) of the 1930's. You'll discover that the New Deal that so many "liberals" praised did little to spark our wilted economy. Instead, war and its resultant increased production brought us back to economic prosperity.

Examine the war itself. Germany was exceedingly swift in capturing continental Europe. Japan was waltzing through Southeast Asia and China with outstanding efficiency. And yet, we stood by and watched the world crumble around us. We were staring through eyeglasses with isolationist lenses. Yet, when crisis struck and the Japanese crushed us at Pearl Harbor, we finally reacted. Once again circumstance brought us to a national confrontation so that we could be awakened from our apathetic sleep. In effect, crisis saved us from a world dominated by facism.

World War II seemed to teach us a lesson though. We grumbled as we were forced to shift gears and transform our sleeping giant of a nation into an international engine of war. Yet, the grumbling brought a new national consciousness. Since that time, our isolationist spirit has never fully engulfed us. Granted, we used it as a weapon against the New China of Mao. But, we have yet to isolate ourselves from most of the world as we did prior to the turn of the century.

Instead, we have created Marshall Plans and nurtured Kissingers. We have also fought "police actions" as we once termed them. Korea and Vietnam were based upon our self-interest, but at least that self-interest was now of global proportions instead of merely national proportions. Our focus was changing. We no longer viewed ourself as a single country without international dependents or national dependency. Instead, we began to view ourselves as part of a world organism, each country dependent upon and depended upon by other countries. Isolationists were magically transformed into internationalists. We matured as a collective political entity.

Today, it is necessary to recognize this same model as a portrayal of the international economy. We sit in a dungeon of isolationist and egocentric trade policies while achieving new heights in political diplomacy. We continue to use economics as a weapon and as a defense. Yet, such a policy lacks intellectual insight. For in the world of interdependent countries, what is initially an economic attack may be rapidly transformed into an economic disaster for the attacking country.

Thus, today's analysts should not be surprised by Arab actions on the economic battleground. They merely copy American policies of the past two hundred years. International capitalism in its most brutal form is what made our country so prosperous. Now, we face the test of our own medicine. As we are plundered by astronomical petroleum prices, we must remember that we did much the same in South America and Africa and Europe and Asia. The policy is not new. It is American by heritage. Yet, now we face the opposite end of the economic chessboard. The plunderers have become the plundered!

The solution is simple. Crisis will again save us. It may be world depression or world war or both. But be assured, it will be crisis. Then again, maybe we shall take the lesson of interdependency from previous wars and depression. Who knows? To quote a very old, but very apt cliche, only time will tell.

A piece of Tripoli trash

To the Editor:

Steve Tripoli must enjoy sitting up in his office and pretending that he is Clark Kent, ace reporter. Unfortunately his article of October 18 is a piece of trash of which even Jimmy Olsen would be ashamed.

You advocate replacing the Student Government Association with the Student Organizing Project. You neglected to mention that the SGA is well aware of its problems and shortcomings, and that the Project was brought here by [and is funded by] the Senate.

You say that we have nothing now and thus nothing to lose by abolishing the SGA. We would lose the programs funded by the SGA, including WMUA, the bus system, day care facilities, and numerous others including the Collegian. While the Collegian takes in almost enough in advertising to support itself, other worthy organizations are not so fortunate, and would not exist without SGA support.

You say that you cannot remember anything concrete accomplished by any branch of the SGA. I suggest that the fault lies not in the SGA but rather in your memory. Cast your mind back to last year, when the Collegian's Business Manager got caught with his fingers in the till. Because the Student Judiciary was created to handle such cases, the gentleman in question was able to escape without a criminal record. Is that a concrete accomplishment, Mr. Tripoli?

I could present you with a long list of concrete accomplishments, but the point is that you should know without being told. Instead you mouth off about things of which you are utterly ignorant, never bothering to check out the facts. How can you condemn the SGA as worthless? How do you know? I have been involved in the Central Area Council for over two years and not once has the Collegian covered a meeting. How dare you criticize us for not doing our jobs when obviously you have not done yours?

You say that the SGA is a vehicle for egomaniacs on power trips. That is true, but I suggest to you that any organization has that problem. I might add that we don't see our names in the paper every day, but you do. Does that suggest something to you about egos?

Your blanket indictment of the SGA is a slap in the face to anyone who has ever participated in student government. Unlike you, student senators and area government representatives are not getting pre-professional training and paychecks for their extra-curricular activities. Unlike you, their reward for the work that they do is the feeling that they have done something for their fellow students. Unlike you, they care about this place, and unlike you they are trying to make it better.

I suggest that you can find more suitable targets for your poisen pen much, much closer to home. Perhaps in the future you will have the integrity to report on the SGA either factually or not at all. But I doubt it.

Myths about lesbians

To the Editor:

In reaction to the October 21st editorial by Zamir Nestelbaum, I can, sincerely, understand why Nestelbaum's "amusement was mollified" by his fabrication of 'Toughcookie', and her graduate school application. Indeed, I, too, was mollified by Nestelbaum's fabrication.

Firstly, I was mollified by the editorial staff for donating the premium of space to such an unenlightening, uninspired article. The quarter-page could have been well-used by a better-presented, more lucid article.

Secondly, the informative aspect of Nestelbaum's editorial, and thus, his motivation, is not clear. Nestelbaum merely serves to perpetuate the stereotyped image, the myth, encompassing lesbian woman in any essentially patriarchal society.

The generalization of Nestelbaum's portrait of lesbian, or more textually, 'Hard-assed dyke', woman necessitates clarification of the lesbian — as she is an individual. All lesbians are not elitist. All lesbians are not incapable of intellectual concentration. All lesbians do not hate all men. Lesbians merely prefer involving themselves with women and women's improvement.

The image of 'Toughcookie' is naturally of Nestelbaum's fabrication — for it is only in response to the radical, blatantly sexist faction which Nestelbaum represents, that 'Toughcookie' exists. Nestelbaum created 'Toughcookie'; this statement may be symbolically expanded to encompass all people of either Nestelbaum's or 'Toughcookie's frame of mind.

Nestelbaum and 'Toughcookie' exist in extremely separate poles, yet the essence for which either stands are inseparable. Since Nestelbaum is the real 'person', [in this instance 'Toughcookie' is fictitious] I shall chastise Nestelbaum. His attitude, revealed through his selected portrait of 'Toughcookie', articulates main barriers to world coalition and even, self-improvement. These barriers are intolerance and elitism. Nestelbaum is repulsive; he is a loathesome image to every aware sister and brother. He is guilty of all with which he charges 'Toughcookie', [except for the fact that we, as objective readers, are unable to determine the irrelevant preferance of his sexuality]. He is dangerous, for under his leadership the universe of potentially free and conscious sisters and brothers is threatened, not only by further division, but decimation.

As a conscious, aware person, I can bare Nestelbaum's prejudices, but I can not bear his balls.

Quote correction

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to correct a quote attributed to me in the article in The Daily Collegian of 15 October 1974. The title of the story was "Need seen for pre-med advisory committee" and was written by Staff Reporter-Mark Citron. The quote in question concerns letters of recommendations written by members of the Pre-Medical Advisory committee and the right of the students to see these letters. Citron states I said, "The Attorney General of The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has said students must have access to all their files and that students must see it [letters of recommendations]". The quote should read "The Attorney General of the state of CONNECTICUT, has ruled that the CONNECTICUT *RIGHT TO KNOW LAW requires that a student has the right to see the contents of his file concerning his-her application to the schools of medicine and dentistry of the University of Con*necticut. I DO NOT KNOW OF ANY RULING OR ANY LAW IN THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS OR ANY STATEMENT BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MASSACHUSETTS CONCERNING THE RIGHTS OF STUDENTS AND THEIR LETTERS OF RECOMMENDATIONS. Therefore, I would appreciate it if you would include this clarification in the "letters to the Editor" as soon as possible since it is and will be the cause of great concern by students and faculty alike. In closing I would like to point out that there is a bill presently in committee in the U.S. Senate which deals with the "right to know" but until this becomes law the issue of the rights of all people to see their personal files and letters of evaluation, recommendation etc. is a highly debatable and vague issue.

Thank you for this opportunity.

What's for dinner, Fido?

I'm sure that every UMie has read about the competition at the pet food isle of the American supermarket. This is a fact of life for many that shop there weekly. Cat and dog food isn't covered by the federal food stamp program, but then, those that most need food stamps are often unable to save enough money to pay for them anyway. According to my Food Science and Nutrition Student Senate notes, pet food actually provides a reasonably well balanced diet, and it costs around 18 cents a pound. In comparison to other convenience foods, this is surely a bargain.

Canned pet food is even cheap when compared to the cost of horsemeat. It's a real shame that such a great American resource as the mustang was destroyed by hundreds of thousands several decades ago. There are still a few left in the mountains of the western United States, but they certainly are not enough to be commercially beneficial. Many of these scattered remains do end up in slaughterhouses, but they aren't sufficient to feed hungry American dogs, much less hungry American people.

We Americans have been told that it is absolutely necessary that we change our eating habits. Afterall, many millions are malnourished throughout the world, and thousands more are slowly starving to death. What's more the situation is not expected to improve.

I have a partial solution to this problem which could satisfy the needs of a fraction of the hungry. The time has come when we must consider even the most radical of partial solutions.

I'm sure that many of us are familiar with the pet explosion in the United States in which millions of unwanted cats and dogs are destroyed every year. Some arrive at this tragic destination because their owners want to show their children the miracle of birth. (As one humane society worker put it - "Let them see the miracle of death.") Millions of others wander to their moment of truth beneath an automobile. A handful of animal benevolent associations have struggled to make low cost neutering and spaying clinics available to those that can't afford the regular high costs, but I think that this is on the wrong track.

Look at all that wasted protein! Let's eat those cats and dogs. Poor families could pick animals up at either a nominal cost from animal shelters, or else they would be able to acquire them from those constantly appearing giveaways. You know the kind: "Free, six month mutt - to a good home only." The animal would lead a wonderful life, being fed only the best of foods. During this period, the animal would also show these poor souls the pleasure that comes from being the proud owner of a cat or dog.

I realize that some people will react to this as being inhumane, but I would like to state that this is certainly more humane than many of the scientific experiments that occur. At least this has a very direct and unquestionable benefit to mankind, and these animals would be dying anyway. And who can argue against feeding the hungry?

This solution would solve two problems. First, there would no longer be an excess of unwanted pets - instead, when that stray cat has a litter of ten, it will be raised as if one's very life depended upon it. Second, many hungry humans will be able to eat the meat they need.

In closing, I would like to mention that this will also require additions to the Good Housekeeping Cookbook. Housewives will be able to send in their favorite recipes for roast pup, hot dogs, and curried cat. Who knows, maybe we will see some offerings in the recipe column of the Collegian's own Life-Style page!

Bonds of liberation

There's a new myth making the rounds today; a myth of liberation. It claims that liberty can only survive through fraternity. I parallel the everpresent movement for total equality and liberation of the oppressed with the mythical doomed sentence of Ixion.

Ixion was a Thessalian king who defied the gods and was cast into Hades and lashed by his hands and feet to an ever revolving wheel of fire. Perpetually turning in one position, never advancing, his echoing cries for liberation haunt the chambers of hell for eternity.

We are constantly spinning about from one cause to another, concluding nothing, just beginning again and again. Too dizzy to remain on one wheel we drop off and latch on to another cycle; another liberation movement.

There is no escape; the sentence has been passed and we are condemned to a fate of eternally recurring ignorance. Political organizations have become a brief outlet from the hard reality that we are faced with in our day to day existence.

> Political organizations have become a brief outlet from the hard reality..."

"Turn to Socialism--all you have to lose are your chains" I am told every day. I could never settle for any system of government; even anarchy has its restrictions. It is a system and is subject to fault and must be ever changing to conform to its own standards and laws.

So I ask what is it to be free? to be truely liberated? The answer is not to be found in assemblages who unite in the cause of independence, nor in clubs, organizations, or societies. Any form of organized liberation movement is an automatic infringement on liberty of all involved.

Members of liberation groups are pledged to uphold the code of ethics that comprise their purpose for existence. Each constituent becomes a nonentity; a mere element employed by the giant titans who believe that they lead such movements. They too become material for the caucus's quest; they lose their human personality and become the movement--figureheads, martyrs to the cause.

On any given day one can scan the headlines of an average periodical and most assuredly encounter a liberation article of some form. A revolting loom of nausea seizes me when I read about how I am depriving women of their rights or when I find that on some point of the map people have mustered together, like a herd, in violence to assert their liberty. The result of organized liberation is personal downfall.

Extreme forms of collective action, as the aforementioned riot are looked upon by the public and the press and is either applauded or remonstranced. Sympathetic journalists tend to relate such activity as the spontaneous action of the movement against the oppressed and the downtrodden while writers siding with the established authority interpret them as massive underground conspiracies conceived by small minority organizations or unstable, neurotic agitators.

Thus the public is lured into choosing sides. The birth of movement and countermovement trespasses onto the grounds of the individual's freedom. No one is able to speak in daily conversation without the incringing decreed labels of sexist, racist, anti-this, or something-hater.

It is my liberation that is challenged when it is dictated what title I am to apply to a neighbor. I must in no way make inference to their marital status, race, creed, or national origin. The cardinal sin of referring to a femage as a girl and not a woman, or Miss, Mrs. and not Ms. forces me to stop and waste my time on absurd semantics. I would rather not refer to them at all then suffer the consequences of an error in tautology.

All through history I have read that liberty cannot survive without fraternity. It is the association with other people, societies, organizations that become obstacles to personal freedom. The responsibility of liberty rests on the individual.

I leave Ixion to his fiery wheel. There is no trace of a smile upon his lips, for liberty is a serious business. Each and every day the free man must reassert his freedom by accepting full responsibility for his being. I am responsible.

Gerald Ford: A fantasy

By DAVID FREID

Washington, D.C. (UP-Unim Press) In the Capitol, by the dawn's early light, it was announced that Congressional members of the National Politics Union had issued demands for higher wages. Congressmen from all over the nation, in an unusual display of bipartisan agreement, warned that their union and that OTHER Union (and the republic for which it stands) were each dependent on their both working. It is therefore in everyone's interest, they said, to see that a settlement is reached as quickly as possible. President Ford this morning imposed himself as mediator in the Congressional dispute, arguing that he wasn't elected to the office of the presidency, so what was the point in worrying about justifying this new position?

Ford amused reporters with a repertoire of Richard Nixon jokes, just to show the nation that he doesn't like Nixon either. Ford's best was the one about Richard Nixon rewriting history-and how that was the only way he'd go down as one of America's great statesmen. "That's why he's writing his memoirs," Ford mused. Ford's pinpricks were not wholly unlike Mickey Mouse criticizing Walt Disney, but Ford did manage to get down to business. He told representatives that they would have to put in their two years of service to the government just like draft dodgers and deserters. "That is what my conscience dictates, and my conscience is my ultimate authority." (There IS a dictator in the White House.) Ford's reliance on conscience as justification for his words is similar to his performance during his school career, when he claimed that it was a lot easier to respond to a question in History by falling back on conscience as a basis for an answer rather than utilizing readings in Richard Hofstadter...

Later in the morning, Speaker of the House Carl Albert announced that the House of Representatives would indeed go on strike if members' demands were not satisfied. Asked what the House's chances were of having its demands met, Albert said that they were excellent since the House was bargaining with itself. Before ending his press conference, Albert broke into hysterical laughter, hinting something about all appropriations bills originating in the House. One reporter countered that the Senate must still approve such a bill. What would happen, he asked, if the Senate denied approval? Albert, now convulsed in glee, asked the reporter if he had any idea of what it looks like to see 435 people standing on their heads. Nevertheless, Congress is a deliberate, slow-moving body and it could be a while before conclusive action is taken.

President Ford's press secretary was informed that the Speaker of the House had mentioned that the House was bargaining with itself. Was it necessary, someone asked, that Ford mediate? With a knowing, diabolic semi-smile, the press secretary responded that President Ford doesn't really (giggle) know what he's doing.

As of yet, there has only been some scattered violence as some unruly representatives threw eggs at the sergeant-at-arms last night. The cry over Washington this evening is "I wish I were a representative again. I wish I were - I wish I were Leslie King again."

So do a lot of other people.

Everybody loves a lover

To the Editor:

Everyone talks about how women are oppressed, and I agree: women are oppressed. They're raised to be passive dependent creatures who need men to open doors for them, light their cigarettes, and be all-around authority-figures. This is most evident in the dating game, which everyone knows consists of the chase, the man chasing, the woman being pursued; the man aggressive, the woman passive.

But can't we see that as the woman is pressed into the passive role, the man is thereby forced to be aggressive? Isn't this just as oppressive? Where lies the choice to be what you will?

What will people think if a woman walks up to a man and talks to him? That she's offering herself to him? What will people think if a man is at a dance and doesn't ask anyone to dance? That's he's impotent? My word!

Whatever happened to:

"Wow, you are cute!"

"Hey, you're not bad yourself!"

I guess what I'm getting at is the fact that men aren't as strong and independent as they seem to be. After all, we are people, too, just like women! I think it would be wonderful if all these opposite-sex people were pushing love on me and I could sit back and say, "Well, maybe....uh, later....hey, hi!" But is all that just some kind of routine of socially-taught and empty, expected behavior? Does love exist? Or are we all going to wake up someday and find the audience gone, the play over, and nothing but props all around us?

Is the male-female relationship a game and a play, or do we all need love? Is there a better way to get it? Or do I have to be something that I'm not?

Anyone interested in men's liberation, specifically in forming a once-a-week support group, to explore the male-female problem, please get in touch. Or should it be coed liberation?

Liberation today!

Bogus wall

To the Editor:

Friday night it was really disgusting down at the Blue Wall. The place was crowded way beyond capacity and yet a large number of UMies decided to 'abandon all common sense and continue to try to crowd in. The result - they lowered the gate at the entrance creating a fire hazard and what was even worse - because they could not leave, some men were seen urinating by the pin ball machines. And you wonder why they call this place a zoo?

Russia not so rosy

To the Editor:

Recently I had the opportunity of visiting Russia and I found it a very interesting experience. When Angela Davis spoke at the University of Massachusetts on Oct. 5, she gave a very one-sided picture of the actual conditions that prevail there.

Before we get too enthusiastic about promoting a socialist revolution, let us consider whether conditions in a country that has been socialist-communist for a half a century are really better than ours.

In the first place, the average person in Russia has very little freedom compared with the amount of freedom we all enjoy in America. It is difficult, if not impossible, for them to get permission to travel outside their own borders. During my visit, I, with a group of friends, was involved with some young black market operators who did their best to buy some of our clothing and shoes at fabulously high prices. The women, especially the older women, do much of the hard manual labor in building construction, cleaning streets, etc. The pay they receive for their services is pitifully low and the prices they have to pay for food, clothes and other commodities are unbelievably high.

The big majority of the people live in apartments and while I did not have an opportunity to inspect one of them our guide told us that in some cases as many as four families shared a common bath and kitchen.

Very few automobiles, which are very expensive, are owned by individuals who are not connected in some way with the government. Incidentally, there is only a very limited number of bicycles to be seen there.

With all its faults, the average person in America lives in luxury compared with the average person in Russia, including a freedom which just doesn't exist there. I would like to suggest that before getting interested in promoting a revolution in America, people so inclined would do two things: 1. read "The Gulag Archipelago" by Alexander Solzhenitsyn, and 2. arrange to spend a year or two living in Russia.

A SCULPTURAL EVENT

UMass art student Anne Hamburger yesterday designed "Library No. 2 — A Sculptural Event" on the grass next to the real library. The full scale outline was first marked off with string, and then drawn in with a chalk machine from the Athletic Department.

The photo at left shows the finished product as seen from the twenty-fourth floor of the library (library No. 1).

Veterans can receive credit

Veterans who attend school here as regular undergraduate students may now, in most cases, receive some academic credit for their service experience.

Veterans who are applying for credit must submit a legible copy of their DD214 separation paper with their student number written on the top to the Registrar's Office.

Students who have other than dishonorable active military service of six months to one full year, including the completion of basic or recruit training, may be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman level (two "military science" credits). Military service over one year will be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman and sophomore levels (four "military science" credits).

A veteran who has been commissioned as an officer by completion of a program such as OCS is eligible for eight "advanced military science" credits. In addition, credit may be given to veterans who have attended certain military schools while in the service. If the veteran wishes to pursue this he must bring to the Registrar's Office a legible copy of this CC214 and Diplomas of Certificates of training for courses completed as proof of completion of such training. The Veteran who wishes to pursue this credit must also be present when the forms are turned in at the Registrar's Office so that he can interpret any unclear abbreviations or numerical codes and provide a course description if necessary.

Credit may also be given for on the job training received in the service.

Any veteran who wants to have his forms checked for possible academic credit should bring them to Bill Staton at the Registrar's Office any week day between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Heart Fund has walk

Get out your converse sneakers and walking shoes for that mere twelve mile jaunt on Saturday, November 2nd. The fourth annual Heart Fund Walk, sponsored by the National Service Sorority (Gamma Sigma Sigma) and fraternity (Alpha Phi Omega) will begin at 10:00 a.m. from the Haigis Mall - between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration and eventually return by way of Atkins Farm and Middle Street.

Each person walking is required to obtain a sponsor to back him with a pledge of money — for each mile.

There will be four checkpoints en route for those willing to walk — but not for twelve miles.

Wear a pair of heavy shoes suitable for walking. Take along a second pair if you like. Don't wear tennis shoes or sandals (in November!). If possible, wear woolen socks — not nylon. Powdering your feet will prevent chafing.

Sign up October 23 or 25 on the Campus Center Concourse.

MassPIRG to canvass on nuclear question

By DONALD J. PARSONS
MassPIRG intern

"MassPIRG reports," written for the Collegian by a UMass intern at the Amherst based environmental group, appears weekly in The Collegian.

MassPIRG reports

"Have you ever asked your father if he'll let you take the car for the night? If you have then you've canvassed someone. You have approached someone, equipped with a set of facts, and attempted to set up a person-to-person intelligent sharing of knowledge." That is how Doug Stanley, Project Coordinator for UMassPIRG's nuclear referendum program outlined his idea of canvassing.

MassPIRG is presently involved in an effort to canvass voters in the Hampshire-Franklin County area on the Anti-Nuke referendum issues scheduled to be considered by area voters this November 5. You as a student supporting MassPIRG can easily become a part of this spirited and exciting effort. Operating within its role as a public interest research group, MassPIRG is offering orientation meetings to provide information about nuclear power plants that will prove vital in your effort to communicate intelligently with the people you canvass. In addition, these workshops will focus on problems you may encounter in canvassing, and strategies for coping with them.

Equipped with this knowledge, you will be encouraged to join a canvassing team going door-to-door, dealing with people on a personal level. As such, you will bring them the opportunity to discuss a problem of profound significance, and you will undergo an absorbing learning experience in dealing with different types of people on a one-to-one basis. It is not expected that you merely present facts, but that you act as an interpretator of how these facts affect certain people. To do this, you will have to be a good listener as well as a good talker, so that you will understand their questions and concerns.

It is not required that you be aggressive or a super-reporter, but simply that you have a healthy interest in dealing with people and finding out just how well you can present yourself when faced with another person's viewpoints. When approached in the right way canvassing can be fun and easy.

In most cases, to know the issue of nuclear power plants is to be against them, but people often choose to recognize only the facts that affect them personally and write off other hard facts as someone else's problem. The fact is that with the upcoming referendum each person who votes does have power, very effective power. The very existence of the referendum exemplifies the power that citizens have, since it is largely due to the efforts of the Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC) that this referendum is taking place.

If you wish to take advantage of this opportunity to participate in a program on the referendum issues, come to the orientation being conducted on Wednesday night October 23rd, 1974 at 7:00 in Room 164 in the Campus Center, or drop by the MassPIRG office at 233 North Pleasant Street, Amherst, or call them at (413)256-6434. The target is the Amherst area on the weekend of October 25.

Peace Corps, VISTA continue recruitment

Peace Corps and VISTA representatives are on campus through Thursday to talk with seniors and graduate students interested in the programs.

From 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day in the Student Development Center in Berkshire House (Room 102) and in the Campus Center information will be available from representatives who have completed their own volunteer work with either Peace Corps or Volunteers in Service to America.

VISTA and Peace Corps have a total of 12,000 volunteers serving in the United States and abroad. Most programs sponsored by the organizations request applicants with specific degrees or skills.

The largest Peace Corps program involves secondary school education, with volunteers working as teachers or substitute teachers, teacher trainers, and developers of curriculum materials. The Corps seeks experienced teachers, supervisors, and college graduates with degrees in: English, secondary education, education, math, chemistry, physics, industrial arts, physical education, and French. Graduate degrees are needed in sciences and primary education.

VISTA seeks majors of elementary education, adult education, special education, guidance, vocational education, and recreation.

Neither VISTA nor Peace Corps requires knowledge of a foreign language for volunteers, but Spanish would be helpful for VISTA, and for Peace Corps work in parts of Latin America.

State Senate foes want nuclear issue open

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

Incumbent Democratic State Senator John Olver and his Republican opponent Gerald McCarthy both agreed that "the alternative of nuclear power should be left open since it is the only kind of energy being allocated substantial funds for investigation", in a WMUA interview moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski on Monday night.

The men are candidates for the Franklin, Hampshire, Hampden District Senatorial Seat in the State House.

The candidates debated on a variety of issues including physical autonomy, the law requiring professors to have a mandatory amount of classroom hours and the drug situation on campus.

Referring to physical autonomy, McCarthy said, "I would support the idea of a school committee where there would have to be a one fifth vote of the town for the budget to be approved."

Senator Olver said, "I have supported physical autonomy for local school committees. I would not object if autonomy went only with a required four fifths vote." He also commented, "The University would not have progressed so greatly if it had not been for physical autonomy given to it ten or eleven years ago."

The candidates also discussed the possible repeal of a law requiring professors to have 12 "contact" hours per week. Senator Olver said, "There is a good deal of misunderstanding in the legislature as to what a professor does. There is also a misunderstanding about the number of outside hours that go into teaching."

McCarthy said, "There are many legitimate aspects of a professor's work such as individually working with a student or doing research. I would support a repeal of this law."

Both candidates also agreed there was a problem with marijuana on campus, but that it was "next to impossible" for the administration to control its use at UMass. Senator Olver said he favored the idea of making marijuana use a civil offense rather than a criminal offense at the low level. He also said, "Rather than having a black market, it might make more sense to have state control over marijuana. It would reduce crime substantially."

McCarthy said he was against the legalization of marijuana since "recent research indicates that it may cause neurological damage."

In a discussion on nuclear power both candidates agreed they would vote "no" on the referendums providing for the dismanteling of a nuclear plant and the delay of a nuclear plant to be built in Montague.

Senator Olver said, "I cannot see eliminating the option of nuclear power which may be necessary during a period of time. I find it very difficult to understand that so little money is being spent on alternative energy sources."

McCarthy agreed saying, "I like the option of nuclear power but I would also like to look at the alternatives such as solar energy."

The candidates also discussed the effect that the emergence of coed bathrooms at UMass has had on the legislature. Senator Olver said, the initial impact "has lessened and it is not a shock to many legislators as it once had been."

The question of whether state funds should be given to private institutions was also debated. McCarthy said private schools were in serious financial trouble. He also said "private schools cannot compete with the tuition at public schools on the college level therefore they should be given grants from the state."

Senator Olver said, "We must worry that if state funds were given to private institutions that tax money might be taken away from public schools. It is clear to me that these private schools would come under some kind of state control if they were given state funds and many private schools do not want this."

The candidates also discussed the abortion issue and the idea of prayer in public schools. Both candidates agreed that it was up to the individual hospital employee to decide whether or not he-she would participate in performing an abortion.

Concerning the prayer issue, Senator Olver was against the idea while Mr. McCarthy supported a voluntary system making it the decision of the individual student.

Expects $20 billion by 1975

Venezuela will use oil income to aid poor

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez is using his country's new oil wealth to improve the lot of urban and rural poor and pondering the effect the bonanza may have on Venezuela's relations with the United States.

Whatever the future of those relations is to be, Perez at the moment has the full support of Venezuelan political parties and labor groups which reacted with resentment against speeches by President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger demanding a lowering of oil prices.

Venezuela is the world's third largest exporter of oil after Saudi Arabia and Iran and is a founder of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC).

Perez is a strong supporter of the increased oil prices and in an open letter admonished the American president against threats, and said dialogue should take the place of confrontation.

The Venezuelans are sensitive to the fact they never received thanks from the United States that Venezuela continued to fulfill its oil commitments to the U.S. during the embargo imposed by the Arab states, its fellow members in the OPEC.

Venezuela by the end of 1975 is expected to collect $20 billion in oil earnings.

The enormous sum gives Perez both an opportunity and a problem.

The problem is how to invest it without sending off runaway inflation.

The opportunity is the means to carry out his campaign promise to relieve the lot of the poor whose lot is glaringly visible amid the wealth of Caracas, the country's capital.

Foreign imports ranging from Cadillacs to Dutch butter, all selling at outrageous prices, are plentiful in Caracas. But visible from smart shops and new hotels also are the "ranchos," the huts of the poor creeping precariously cheek by jowl up the surrounding hillsides.

Declared Perez in his March 11 inaugural speeches:

"An essential plank of government's action will be the fight against poverty....

"The Venezuelan state cannot look with indifference on the enrichment of a few with the wealth which belongs to all..."

His government has earmarked millions of dollars for development programs, with agriculture in the forefront.

An ironic fact of the uneven Venezuelan economy is that 50 years ago 75 per cent of the population lived on the land. Today, 75 per cent of the population is in the cities while thousands of acres of fertile land lie idle and the country imports 70 per cent of its food.

Jewish emigrants from Russia who want to return can't do so

MOSCOW [UPI] – The trip westward on the Chopin Express from Moscow to Vienna is almost certainly a one way journey for most of the Jews who take it.

When Jews apply to emigrate they are likely to lose almost everything, their jobs, their worldly possessions-and their Soviet citizenship.

They leave a world where they could no longer feel like Jews for another where they can no longer feel like Russians. Not surprisingly, some feel alienated in Israel and seek to return.

But once out, the doors are barred against them.

Soviet propaganda organs publicize the plight of those who fall between two ideological worlds-the discontented Russians in Israel and the rootless in Europe waiting vainly to go "home" or to immigrate elsewhere. The publicity is designed to discourage others from leaving.

The Novosti news agency sometimes prints letters from disappointed Soviet Jews as part of the propaganda campaign. Some examples from letters in a Novosti booklet:

–" I beg your permission to return to the Soviet Union. I have committed a crime against my country and myself by leaving for Israel."

–" All the promises were lies... If I had wings I'd fly home."

–" We turn to you, Russia, as to a mother. A mother has the right to punish her bad children. We've been fully punished for our mistake. And now we beg for forgiveness. Take your prodigal sons back."

–" What devil possessed me to come here?"

–" A Soviet citizen who finds himself in the capitalist world feels as if he has gone back to a time of darkness."

Despite such appeals, Soviet authorities have allowed only a trickle of emigrated Jews to return, perhaps no more than about 40 in the past three years. The word is out: the emigrant is a foreigner. Exodus is irreversible.

Many Soviet Jews designate Israel as their immediate destination to expedite their emigration, knowing full well they later will attempt to reach the United States, Canada, Europe or elsewhere.

This is because the Soviets allow emigration only on the grounds of family reunification. And more Jews have families, either real or imagined, in Israel than anywhere else.

Baha'i sponsors films on UN development

The UMass Baha'i Assn. in celebrating UNITED NATIONS WORLD DEVELOPMENT DAY will be sponsoring three UN films to be shown through Thursday, October 22, 23, and 24 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Campus Center concourse.

The films are: FEAR WOMAN, a film about the women of Ghana and their struggle for independence and economic security. The African setting is a visual counterpart of the dynamic activities of these spirited women who have set up their own businesses and employ women to run them. VOICES The Environment as a force to unite, as well as destroy mankind is depicted as this film explores the acitivites and rewards that result from a river renewel project. Its effect touches all. ONE-AND-AHALF DREAMS is a film put out by the United Nations Development Program telling what's being done by the UN to make poverty and illiteracy a thing of the past. Through international programs a young man in an underdeveloped country is given a chance to further his education.

Calls for resignation or overthrow

Vietnam opposition attacks President Thieu

SAIGON [AP] — Beset by battlefield setbacks and a deteriorating economy, President Nguyen Van Thieu is facing the most serious political challenge of his nearly 10 years in power.

The opposition has involved a constituency which traditionally has been the backbone of the Saigon government — the Roman Catholics.

Staunch anti-Communists, frugal and hard-working, they formed the only real popular base the military-oriented Thieu could count on.

But in recent weeks, this relationship has soured as militant Catholic leaders have publicly accused Thieu and his family of extensive personal corruption and held rallies to publicize the charges and call for his resignation or overthrow.

At the United Nations in New York, South Vietnam's foreign minister, Vuong Van Bac, said his government has launched a drive to eradicate corruption, "and this time it's not just a propaganda theme but real action."

However, some political observers see the corruption issue as merely a reflection of deeper ills including war weariness and a lowered standard of living.

Since the cease-fire agreement that was supposed to bring peace, reconciliation and prosperity was signed 20 months ago, the government has suffered a series of military setbacks, its battlefield casualties numbering nearly 130,000. The economy is reeling from inflation, unemployment and U.S. aid cuts.

In June, 301 Catholic priests formed an anticorruption committee, encouraged by an earlier statement from the church's previously apolitical hierarchy condemning corruption in the Thieu regime. Its more active priests turned the issue into an increasingly vocal campaign.

Poetry reading program continues this year

By BERNICE BLATT
Below The Salt Staff

Poetry is alive and well and living in Bartlett Hall. Last Thursday night, October 15, was the second in a series of poetry readings sponsored by the English MFA Program and The Poetry Alliance. Last year these readings were held in the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union, but this year they will be held in Memorial Hall.

Three poets read at the last reading. Elizabeth Brown, a current candidate for a Poetry MFA, began. She was followed by Joseph Langland, a professor in the English Department. Mr. Langland has just returned from a year long sabbatical, spent traveling around Europe. While an esteemed poet, his words rang of a different generation. His poetry has rhyming, peaceful tones. He recites most of his poems from memory, and even sang us a song that he had written for the McGovern campaign last year.

My first reaction was to laugh at this man, reading all this old-fashioned poetry, but then I realized that it takes some courage to read, with confidence, in a style that you still love no matter how outmoded it has become. Since he spent some time in Northern Europe, he is currently working on incorporating some of the lilting tones used in their speech into his poetry.

David Lenson, a member of the Comparative Literature Department, read next. He was confident and amusing at times. His stage personality was so overwhelming that he held our attention. His comical poetry was good and effective. His serious work fell flat next to it.

The next poetry reading will be on Nov. 5, at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. James Tate, Robert Bagg, and Candice Ward will read. The readings are free, and you can buy sherry for 50 cents a glass. The proceeds go toward the readings.

On Monday nights, WMUA is now featuring "The Banana Quarterly," a fifteen minute poetry reading beginning at 7:00 p.m. So far, James Tate, Frederick Will, and Sonia Sanches. Ms. Sanches is a black woman poet who lives in the area. She read at the Women's Poetry Conference last spring. Next week, J.D. Reed will read.

For more information on the poetry that flourishes in this area, keep your eyes on the halls in Bartlett. Posters for the readings usually don't come out until the day before the event. If you write, or just enjoy reading poetry, come to some of the readings here on campus and meet some of the people who are keeping poetry alive and well in the UMass community.

UMass aids art programs

The Community Arts Development Program here helps people throughout the state in getting arts programs going in their own communities.

Now in its second year, the program is run by the Arts Extension Service of the UMass Division of Continuing Education. It offers aid to groups interested in developing independent, self-governing, and self-supporting arts organizations and councils. A team of advisors can supply the skills necessary in initiating and promoting an organization that can work effectively to meet the needs and concerns of its community.

Management, planning, organization, public relations, community service, funding, and technical problem-solving are some of the services offered at no cost. The program is supported by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Those wishing more information are encouraged to call (413) 545-2013 or to write: Arts Extension Service, Division of Continuing Education, Hills House North, University of Massachusetts Amherst, 01002.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, October 23 — Born today, you are by nature a gentle, sympathetic person who must actually guard against a tendency to overdo both of these traits. Indeed, you have been known to give so much materially and spiritually to those less fortunate than yourself that both you and those dependent upon you for their own physical and moral well-being have been made to suffer, if only temporarily. Time and maturity eventually teach you how to give to others on the one hand while yet providing amply for loved ones on the other.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21) — Until you are approached with the facts, you would do well not to listen to what rumor would pass off as the truth. Take a conservative view.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec. 21) — A healthy emotional relationship is needed if you are to be able to come to an understanding with loved ones concerning your future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Work on present projects only so long as they take your interest today. It is essential that you gain rest at periodic intervals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A difficult situation will get the better of you unless you get to the bottom of things quickly. Be brave in your approach to others.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Confidence is your key to gain this morning. Stand up for those things in which you believe. Feel yourself strong enough to fight for your rights.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take the optimistic view of the present situation on the employment scene. You can make a little go a long way if you really try.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Accusations are not proofs of wrong-doing. Understand this and you will be more likely to give another a fair hearing—and to gain one for yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Unless you have excellent reasons for taking on another's responsibilities, you would do well to allow your fellows their own affairs.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — It is the Cancer with enough initiative to tackle things on his own who comes out ahead in the long run. Don't be afraid of hard work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Demonstrate to others your ability to handle details. You should have an excellent opportunity for gain before the day is through. Grasp it!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An opportunity for advancement comes early in the day; if you are not ready for it, you can hold it in abeyance — but only for a short time!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Be objective as you view the present at-home situation. You may find that when you are unemotional about things, all is quite well.

End Walt Parker

A double duty man

By JAY LUPPOLD
Sports Staff

"I'm glad you're doing a story on Walt Parker, he deserves it" - coach George Flood, assistant UM football coach.

The above quote says it all about 6'11", 195 lb. tight end Walt Parker. For those of you who remember, Walt Parker is the guy who caught that big touchdown pass from Piel Pennington against Harvard that caused the Ivy to fall from the walls of Harvard Stadium when UMass used the Johns as just another stepping stone to the Boardwalk Bowl in 1972.

Walt has been around here for four years now and though it hasn't been an easy time, it has been a good time.

"I've been pretty much in the background, it's been tough, but there has always been something to come along to rally behind", the likeable senior said.

But people have noticed and realized the presence of Walt Parker. "Walt has been really perservering for the past three years, one of the hardest workers on the team. He is a clutch performer and one of the most pleasant men on the team, he is great for the team", pointed out Flood.

Graduating from Ayer High School, not what you would call a high school power, Parker wasn't one of those highly touted 'come play for us' schoolboy stars. He was told yes, UMass would like to have a look at him, but that was it. He did it all on solo from there.

"I played quarterback in high school, but our offensive line wasn't so good, so I had to run alot and did well", the 'skilled offensive lineman' said, and when I came up here I started as a fullback", he added.

After sitting out his sophomore year Parker came back as a junior but all Yankee Conference Dick Cummings had the fullback slot locked up.

Realizing Parker's potential as a blocker and someone who could catch the ball - "he isn't the most graceful pass catcher, but he gets the job done", said Flood - Parker was converted to tight end.

I was recruited by other schools like B.C., Tufts and some other small schools, but decided to come to UMass because I had alot of friends here", he explained.

Used mostly as a blocker Parker has caught only three passes thus far, one for a touchdown against Dartmouth in one of the biggest wins for UMass football according to head coach Dick MacPherson, and then another for a big two point conversion in the Rhode Island win.

Having had to sit out last year with a stressed fracture of the leg, Walt had to watch as the Minutemen struggled through a disappointing season.

And it was a very porous offensive line that he had to watch as runners had a hard time reaching the line of scrimmage and quarterbacks had to run for their lives.

This year it is a different story. To date, UMass has scored the most points (121) than any other YanCon club and it's been the running attack that has been the main ingredient.

"The offensive line has been something we can all take pride in especially after last year. You can really appreciate it when someone breaks a long gainer, you can feel that it was all worth it", said Parker, who often has to take care of the opposing tackle on inside blocking situations.

And now with the coming of a newborn air attack in the person of sophomore quarterback Brian McNally, the receiving talents of Walt Parker should come into focus even clearer.

Walt said before the Rhode Island game that the team needed wins against both the Rams and UConn to get back into the Beanpot picture, and he said it with confidence.

Well, the Minutemen are half way there now, and Parker found himself on the receiving end of an important play in an important game last weekend.....

Wouldn't it be fitting to see number 80 in the end zone again this weekend.

Walt Parker, shown here reaching in vain for a pass in the Vermont game, has provided UMass coach Dick MacPherson with both competent blocking and pass catching while playing tight end at UMass. Parker caught a two point conversion pass in the Rhode Island win.

Women unfit for sports

To the Editor:

Since the overemphasized Riggs-King tennis match, it has come to our attention that the female ego has become completely blown out of proportion. Recently we have encountered many vociferous females who repeatedly spoke vaingloriously of their abilities to play tennis better than most males. Having only two years of weekend tennis experience, we decided to put one such female's ability to the test; only to find that her extensive experience in the game was no match for the male physique. What we lacked in ability was made up for by sheer male physical superiority. "I'm not the world's most physical guy, but I can't understand why she walks like a woman and talks like a man."

Don't get us wrong, we don't mean to put down women's tennis in any way. We merely wish to extinguish the mistaken idea that women can compete with males in physical sports. Therefore, we challenge any tennis playing female, residing on campus, who disagrees with our point of view, to play a match with our very own Mr. Riggs [with the above mentioned experience]. If any comparable female feels she can meet this challenge she may contact his promoter: Michael W. Haney at 546-6802.

Alston named NL's top manager

[UPI] — Walter Alston, baseball's "Father Time" among modern day managers who led the Los Angeles Dodgers to their sixth pennant under his stewardship, has been overwhelmingly named UPI's National League Manager of the Year for 1974.

Alston, who only two days ago signed his 22nd consecutive one-year contract with the Dodgers, received 11 first place votes from the UPI baseball correspondents across the country. His nearest competitor, Danny Ozark of the Phillies, received three.

While Alston managed such Dodger greats as Jackie Robinson, Duke Snider, Roy Campanella, Sandy Koufax and Don Drysdale in years past, it was probably this 1974 pennant winner that brought him his greatest satisfaction — if not his biggest challenge.

Spiced generously with young players — many with just one or two full seasons of major league experience, Alston nonetheless goaded his club past the favored defending champion Cincinnati Reds of Johnny Bench, Pete Rose etc. and wound on top by four games.

Ruggers rout Williams, 18-3

Saturday afternoon the UMass Rugby Club defeated Williams 18-3.

The match was characterized by loose play. UMass scored first with Jay Appleman bringing it in for four points. The Williams side however, countered with a penalty kick for three points to put them within one point of UMass. Scrum-half Gary Schuyler scored again in the first half to round out the half-time score at 8-3.

The second half was all UMass as first Kerry Elkin slipped into the endzone for four points, and then later Chip Connors also scored. Kelley Atteridge converted on this last try for two points to make the final score 18-3.

The B side also won 27-4 in a very physical match.

UMass next week travels to Providence to play Ivy League champions, Brown.

BOBBY BONDS (L), of the Giants, was swapped straight-up for Yankee Bobby Murcer (R) yesterday. It wasn't the only baseball deal, though. In two other trades of not quite earth-shattering proportions, immortal Brewer infielder John Vukovich was dealt to Cincinnati for pitcher Pat Osborne, while Met catcher Duffy Dyer went to Pittsburgh for one of the top utility outfielders of modern times, Gene Clines. The dealin' and wheelin' didn't just occur in the baseball world — several major gridiron barters were announced.

Southern Conn edges UMass stickers, 2-1

By LINDA MACKLER

In a game highlighted by two good defenses, the UMass field hockey team once again defeated, 2-1, by Southern Connecticut College yesterday behind NOPE.

Southern Connecticut had an amazingly fast offensive passing pattern, which the UMass defense was able to hold off for the first thirty minutes of the game. Then halfback Rachael Petralito broke away and drove into UMass territory for the first score, making it 1-0 at half time.

The second goal was shot by Jeri Tschada nine minutes into the second half, and Southern Connecticut was shut-out the remainder of the game.

UMass scored its goal when with ten minutes left to play, a Southern Connecticut obstructed a shot. She blocked it by trapping the ball between her legs, while standing inside the goal posts. This gave a penalty stroke to UMass' Joanne Smith, who for the second time this year, drove it in.

Despite Southern Connecticut's speed, UMass almost matched their pace and did, in fact, make twenty-eight shots on goal compared to their seventeen.

Coach Dora Metrelis of Southern Connecticut was expecting just this notch of competition.

"We were expecting a tough game from UMass this year," she said, "because we always have one."

Coach Albert from UMass was not displeased by the defeat.

"I was very pleased with the way the girls played today," she said. "They played a quick brand of hockey and they should be very optimistic about the rest of the season."

"It was a good overall team effort," she continued, "with outstanding performances by Kathy O'Neil and Joanne Smith."

The junior varsity team stretched its winning streak, adding another shut-out to their record by defeating Southern Connecticut 4-0.

Three goals were scored in the first half by Sue Kibling, Cheryl Meliones, and Nancy Rider. Karen Gipps added unnecessary security with a fourth goal in the second half.

The team continued to improve on their already established winning methods. They have clear, tight passing offense and a defense to support it. They constantly are gaining a good sense of "team."

"I could not single out one outstanding player," the Coach claimed. "It would have to be all eleven because of the excellent team effort. They clearly dominated the game."

UMass hockey '74-'75 preview

Work-outs commence

By GARY CASTALINE

The UMass hockey team began it's preseason training on October 5. For two weeks, 40 players, vying for the berths on the varsity and J.V. squads, have been piling into a Student Senate bus, vans, cars and even a pickup truck (not the same pickup used last year) to make their way to practice in Greenfield. The team must wait until November before their "home", Amherst College's Orr Rink opens. In the meantime, a 2 hour practice is stretched to 4 hours, including driving and dressing time.

Starting from day one, Coach Jack Canniff and assistant Coach Russ Kidd have had the players scrimmaging. The idea behind this being that inter-squad scrimmages will give them a chance to see if any newcomers can fit in with the veterans. Only four players have left from last year's varsity team, leaving but a few spots to fill. "Chick" Rheault, leaves the biggest gap for Canniff to fill. Several candidates are competing for the vacant position. They have been helped by another of the missing four, John Binkoski, whose knowledge of and experience in the nets will hopefully help one of the young goalies soften the blow of the loss of the team's former captain and MVP.

Although early in the preseason, many skaters have already impressed Coach Canniff, including several freshman. Among them are Bobby and Billy White, Chris Lamby, and Scott McChesney. Due to the fine showing of all the freshmen, it appears that this year's j.v. squad could be one of UMass' best.

Foreman not irked

N'SELE, ZAIRE [UPI] — Heavyweight Champion George Foreman relaxed beside the swimming pool of the Jet-Set Hotel Intercontinental in Kinshasa Tuesday, amusing a clutch of guests and chatting with newsmen newly arrived to cover his title match with Muhammad Ali Oct. 30.

"Naw, not at all. Ali, he don't bother me none," Foreman said softly. "He's like a medicine show. Whether the medicine was good or not, you have to sell it, and Ali's been selling himself just like the snake oil salesman at a side show. I accept it. Hey, I'm even entertained myself sometimes."

But Foreman has not even the slightest patch on Ali as an entertainer, a fact which brought about the 50-50 split of $10 million for their title clash. The heavyweight champion, indeed the champion of any division, is traditionally the man who gets the biggest slice of the pie.

Foreman glowers a bit when reminded of that, but then shrugs his massive shoulders. "I'm reluctant to get into that kind of ballyhoo," he said. "I'm the champ. Let him be a clown. Why should I be part of his show? I'm dead serious about this fight."

And serious he appears. The damaged right eye is noticeable only because his eyebrow, which was shaved for the butterfly stitches, still has not regrown hair.

Off to the side, trainer Dick Sadler agreed the cut had healed as he had predicted it would.

Bowlers open season

The UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team opened its season this past Sunday when it competed in the Owl Classic sponsored by Southern Conn. State College. The men's team captured the championship and the women's team finished second. In the doubles event Nancy Heglin and Karen James captured first place in the women's division and Brian Elsden and Dave Dimmick second in the men's. All around it was a very solid team performance and things look good for a fine season.

Bonds even for Murcer

NEW YORK [UPI] — Outfielder Bobby Bonds, the slugger-speedster who was supposed to take Willie Mays' place with the San Francisco Giants, was traded to the New York Yankees in an interleague swap Tuesday even-up for outfielder Bobby Murcer, once heralded as Mickey Mantle's successor.

"I don't think there's ever been a trade with two all-stars swapped even up," said Yankee President Gabe Paul. "Most trades of name players have someone thrown in on the side. But this was a one-for-one trade.

"The deal was finalized last night on the phone between myself and Horace Stoneham. We must have been on the phone, back and forth, 20 times in the last few days."

Morton to NY, Snead to SF

DALLAS [UPI] — The Dallas Cowboys Tuesday traded their perennial backup quarterback — Craig Morton — to the New York Giants for the Giants' No. 1 draft choice next year.

The Giants immediately announced they had traded their top quarterback — Norm Snead — to San Francisco, making it quite possible Morton would be starting next Sunday against his former teammates when the Cowboys and Giants meet in New Haven, Conn.

Hadl for 5 future picks

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Quarterback John Hadl, the National Football Conference's Player of the Year in 1973, Tuesday was traded by the Los Angeles Rams to the Green Bay Packers in a surprise deal for several draft choices.

Hadl was ousted from his regular job with the Rams last week by James Harris, who steered the club to a 37-14 win over the San Francisco 49ers on Sunday and convinced the coaching staff he can do the quarterbacking job.

The Rams issued a brief statement on the trade of the 34-year-old Hadl.

"It is the Rams opinion that John Hadl — a fine quarterback-should be of invaluable aid to Green Bay immediately and in the future," the statement said.

Green Bay gave five high draft choices for Hadl who was the National Football Conference's most valuable player last year when he quarterbacked the Rams to a 12-2 record and the NFC West Title under then rookie coach Chuck Knox.

The Packers gave up: a first draft choice in 1975, a second draft choice (acquired from Baltimore) in 1975, a third draft choice in 1975, a first draft choice in 1976, and a second draft choice in 1976.

Hadl, a 6-foot-1, 214-pounder, is a rugged player who's never had a serious injury in 13 years of pro football.

He was acquired by the Rams in 1973 after 11 seasons with the San Diego Chargers.

A native of Lawrence, Kan., he went to Kansas University.

Dave Croasdale

A defensive cog

By BOB HIGGINS
Sports Staff

The defensive backfield of the UMass football team has been criticized often this season. Although the criticism has not always been justified, there have been some problems. Foremost among these problems is inexperience, since all four defensive backs are first-year players.

One of the mainstays of this young secondary has been Dave Croasdale, a 5' 10", 175-pound cornerback from Manchester, New Hampshire. A 1973 graduate of Manchester Memorial High School, Croasdale spend last year at Phillips Academy.

Croasdale feels that the year in prep school was important in his transition from high school. "The level of football is about the same, but I guess I did get some experience," he said. "What it really did was teach me how to study, which I didn't know before."

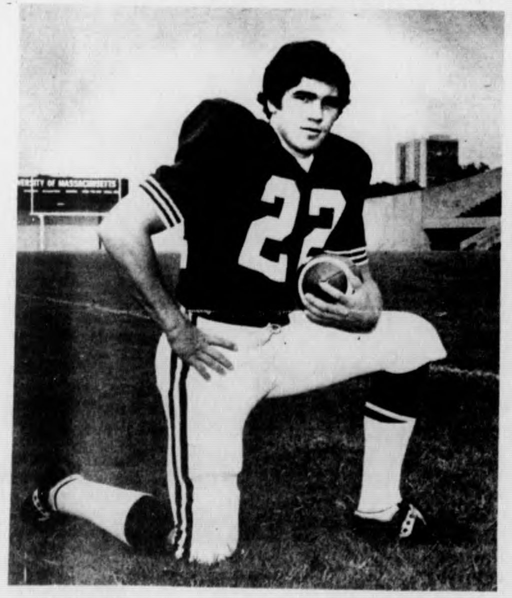
Although other schools expressed interest in him, UMass was always Croasdale's first choice. "I felt that UMass would give me a chance to do well both academically, and in sports," he commented. A political science major, Croasdale plans to try out for baseball in the spring.

Croasdale has noticed a marked difference between high school (as well as prep school) and college football. "Everyone here is about twenty pounds heavier, the receivers are quicker, and the backs are quicker and stronger," he said. However, he feels that he is capable of meeting the challenge. "The only area I need a lot of improvement in is my playreading," he said. "I have to learn to follow the ball better."

Croasdale has not been let down by the UMass football program. "It's a great program. I really like it a lot," he said. He also speaks highly of Coach Dick MacPherson, saying "He really knows what he's doing. He works us hard, but only because it's necessary."

According to Croasdale, criticism of the defensive backfield is unjustified. "I think we've done a good job so far," he said. He also is not disappointed in the team's play so far, and thinks the remainder of the season should go well. "I think we should have beat Villanova and Vermont," he said. "I also think we're capable of beating UConn, the Cross, and even BC."

Maybe so, but a lot depends on four, inexperienced defenders with just six games under their belts.



Dave Croasdale

—Walter Cronkite

"I shot the sheriff, but I did not shoot the chance to read today's Collegian sports pages. Devoured every word!"

—Eric Clapton

The Collegian office was teeming with members of the sports staff, all involved one way or another in getting out tomorrow's sports pages.

Over in a corner sat Dave Eibel, the head honcho, staring at three blank dummy sheets that, when filled, would produce yet another informative edition of Collegian sports. The sports editor's haggard face reflected the result of another fruitless day pursuing scoops.

Managing editor Bill Densmore came by and reminded Eibel of the midnight deadline. Eibel threw a typewriter at him. It was already 11:00.

"Staff", hollered the sports Caesar, "what do you have for tomorrow's paper?"

Bill Doyle, ace soccer scribe, spoke up: "I have an exclusive story. Pele' has quit the Brazil national soccer team for the express purpose of joining the UMass booters".

"Is that true?!", asked the excited boss.

"No", replied the snotty writer, "but it sure is exclusive".

"Dave! Dave!", pleaded investigative sports reporter Ben Caswell, "If you'll just requisition me fifty grand to pay off the Boyden janitors, I'll have enough info to put every sports administration figure in jail for twenty years!"

Just then, a paper airplane hit Eibel in the eye. Tom Crowley, Bob Higgins and Jay Luppold, in charge of writing headlines and captions, were having a little war with the planes. There were no stories or photos to write anything for.

Suddenly, two women's crew members rushed into the office with their oars. They cornered Eibel against the wall and put their oars to his throat. They said simply, "We better get more coverage", and left.

Densmore, crying, came back and threatened: Jerry Lazar (Editor-in-Chief) said for you to stop throwing things at me. And he said if you don't meet the deadline, you're fired". Densmore stuck out his tongue and ran away.

Eibel looked at his staff and made a decision.

Golfing writer Rich Sevieri was hitting five-irons at terrified columnist Steve DeCosta, while reporter-at-large Glenn Poster, on a lark, was calling Brazil to confirm Doyle's rumor. Football prognosticator Scott Hayes was picking Custer over the Indians by 14, and cosmic layout man Walt Powers was writing a caption to a huge photo of Mars, which he planned to sneak onto the back sports page.

The clock showed 11:55 when the harried sports head tied his belt around an overhanging pipe, slipped his neck into the loop, and jumped off his desk.

Just then, Steve Saraceno sauntered in with eight bombshell stories. "We're saved," sighed the sports staff in unison.

Saraceno handed in the laid-out sports pages with a minute to spare, then cut down and revived Eibel.

"I ...owe you my life", blubbered Eibel, shaking Saraceno's hand.

"Heck, Chief", replied the magnanimous super sport, "it's nothing' any assistant sports editor featured on the cover of Sports Illustrated and Time wouldn't do.

"Yep. All in a day's work..."

Strives for autonomy

SGA defies Whitmore

By CINDY ROGERS
AND BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporters

In an unprecedented show of defiance of the campus officials, a special convention of up to 200 student senators and area government leaders last night adopted a strong six-point resolution calling on the administration to end its "paternalistic" role over students.

The Governance Units Convention (GUC), meeting immediately after the meeting of the new student senate of this semester, also adopted a resolution calling for total independence from the administration.

The resolution, passed 60-24, read:

"That we work towards being a sovereign and autonomous body, free from all legal, financial, political and social ties to the administration of this University."

The six demands, passed unanimously, were directed to the Trustees:

1. That students at the University be recognized as responsible adults and that they have the right to determine the direction of their own lives. In this regard we demand to have primary determination concerning all facets of the University which directly affect us.

2. We demand that we have control over our own budget. Under no circumstances should the administration ever freeze the budget of the students of the University or attempt to determine where our monies will or will not be spent.

3. We demand that students of the University have major decision making power to influence academic requirements and procedures.

4. We request that the Board of Trustees lay out exactly where our power lies so once we find we have none — we can fight for what we want.

5. We want you (the trustees) to recognize us as people, not because of the structures we create such as the Student Government Assn., but because we are people — 23,000 to be exact.

"Hence, we demand that the University recognize our needs and act on them.

"We demand the right to freely organize around our interests and collectively bargain with the administration over all matters affecting students."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage, contacted at his home by phone last night, said it would "be ridiculous to pass any harsh kind of judgement on resolutions I haven't seen yet."

Gage said the demands for sovereignty and autonomy "sound fine in principle, but I'm not sure how they'll actually play out." He said he doubted if any group in a University can have real sovereignty.

Gage said he did not know what prompted the resolutions, and denied that his office has created any roadblocks to the proposed establishment of a student union or a student legal services office on campus.

Various student leaders have charged privately that the University has objected to the set-up and hiring of a staff attorney in a Legal Services Office funded by the Student Senate. The leaders say the administration is attempting to place restrictions on the legal activity that can be performed by the office on behalf of students.

Tenant strike erupts over rent increase

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Tenants of married student housing on campus have declared a rent strike effective immediately, in protest of rent increases from 15 per cent to 39 per cent levied on them in September.

Residents of . University and Lincoln Apartments are placing their rent fees in an escrow account. Ken Dean, Acting Director of Residential Life, estimates that only about 30 families are witholding rent, but Tenant Association chairperson Rosemary Whittaker says the number is "much more than that."

According to the Tenant Association 75 per cent of the residents in University Apartments alone are supporting the strike.

The rent strikers are also receiving support from the UMass Veterans's Coalition for Community Affairs, and the Tenant Association. Representatives of the strike have scheduled a meeting with Robert Gage and Ken Dean at 10 a.m. today, when they'll present their demands.

In a letter yesterday to Gage and Dean, the tenants' association set forth four demands requesting:

1) a rollback in rents to the state established cost of living increase

2) A rewritten lease mutually agreed upon by both parties

3) sufficient reforms to be made in the policy of the Married Student Housing Office in regard to its obligation to provide positive assistance to married students through minimal rents and maximal facility of living accommodations.

4) "...a sufficient degree of control over our lives, living units, and monies" while students at UMass.

The student group "will withhold all future rent payments" until these points are resolved, the letter stated.

Dean hopes that today's meeting will provide "a clearer understanding of the rent strike." He called the strike "a misunderstanding of the total financial condition of married student housing" on the part of the tenants.

"The essence of the protest is that the University should provide some subsidy to the married students residing on campus through reduced rents," said Dean. "We cannot provide financial aid through the rental structure."

Patrick Walker of the tenant's association declared in a written statement that rents have been raised at University and Lincoln Apartments to pay for North Village, "which were running increasingly in the red".

The Tenants' association feels it is an "exploitation" of married students to shift the burden of North Village to them.

Whites beat Hub black

BOSTON [UPI] - Whites dragged a black man from his car in racially troubled South Boston yesterday and beat him with baseball bats, city officials reported. It was second such incident in three weeks of disorders connected with school desegregation.

Officials said the black man, Colly Seaborn, 48, of the city's South End district, was dragged from his auto by four white males on Broadway and M. Sts.

See Black Affairs section, pages 10 and 11.

After the beating, he was taken to Massachusetts General Hospital where he was treated for head and arm injuries and released.

Governor dumps UMass law school; dodges jabs from Dukakis in debate

By MARTIN J. WATERS
Staff Reporter

SPRINGFIELD — Gov. Francis W. Sargent said last night that he will not approve creation of the state-operated law school proposed for the UMass-Amherst campus.

The University administration has taken initial steps to create a "legal studies program" for undergraduate preparation in law, and some observers have speculated that an eventual intention of the program is to set up a graduate law school.

In a television debate with his Democratic rival for reelection, Michael S. Dukakis, Sargent rejected the proposal, because "we have enough private law schools already."

Dukakis did not address the issue.

Questioned by a panel of four reporters at Springfield City Hall, Sargent said his administration would emphasize the growth of community colleges, and said of UMass-Amherst, "we're not just going to keep on expanding forever."

The two spoke in a television debate on Channel 57, Springfield's public TV station. The 8 p.m. debate was also broadcast live on a Boston station.

The two major party candidates for governor debated during the final 40 minutes of the hour-long program, while the opening segment featured Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight and Democratic gubernatorial candidate Thomas P. O'Neill III.

Two issues dominated the debate, in which Dukakis took off the boxing gloves and launched a bare knuckles attack on Sargent. Three previous debates have been notably diplomatic.

The issues were the campaign tactics of the two and state expenditures.

Gov. Sargent questioned the validity of what he called a Dukakis promise to cut state spending by five per cent, as Dukakis denied that Sargent's summation of the spending-cut proposal was accurate.

"Does this 'no hire, no fire' policy mean there will be no teachers hired for the new community colleges in Holyoke and Greenfield?", asked Sargent.

Dukakis did not reply directly, but called the governor's interpretation of the "no hire, no fire" plan he proposes "a distortion."

Dukakis questioned the Sargent administration operation of state service agencies, saying, "when a group of parents in a place like Belchertown (state school) has to suit the administration to get proper care for their youngsters, something is wrong."

A University of Massachusetts professor and students have been instrumental in bringing the suit which caused a federal district court judge to order physical improvements in the facility housing the retarded.

Dukakis lashed out at the "scurrilous" trend in Sargent's campaign since newspaper polls showed Sargent trailing in his race for reelection.

Dukakis said that until 10 days ago the Sargent campaign was run on a high level, but "now that the governor sees he's behind in the polls, he has launched a campaign that is so shrill, strident and so inaccurate that it troubles me deeply."

Dwight repeated his attack on legislative attendance records of O'Neill, and in a new charge, said Dukakis had a poor attendance record "in 1966, when he decided he wanted to be attorney general."

At the time, Dukakis was a state representative from Brookline. O'Neill was a legislator in the 1974 session.

Sargent said that Dukakis is "very short on facts." "This five per cent cutback proposal is another election promise that evaporates when you try to catch hold of it," Sargent said.

"The Dukakis staff should think five per cent harder before coming up with these ideas," Sargent added.

Rent increase causes married students' strike

In reply to this accusation, Dean says that "only a small portion" of the revenue from rent increases is being used to pay for North Village.

The Tenant Association statement says students are opposed to the rent increase because "it is being levied on us mostly to cover the costs of the University blunders at Lincoln and University Apartments."

It criticizes the administration which "takes advantage of our powerlessness to cover up their mistakes and mismanagement, and which generally displays an indifference to our needs, if not an outright abrogation of our rights."

Dean says the rent increase was decided upon to "make the system a little more self-supporting, a little more financially solid, and to provide funds for making improvements. By taking this strategy, we'll be making married student housing much more attractive as outside rent prices continue to go up."

Dean said the reasons for the rent increase were explained to the tenants of married student housing in August, and the administration "was surprised" to receive yesterday's letter of protest. "This can't continue, so I think we should concentrate on resolving the differences" at today's meeting, Dean told the Collegian.

In a random survey of Lincoln Apartment tenants the Collegian found varying attitudes on the strike. One tenant said, "We are not getting anything extra as a result of this increase."

"The rent increase isn't justified, because it hurts a lot of people. There's no source to pay for that kind of increase, along with car insurance, grocery bills, etc," said another.

On woman did not think the increase "was really all that bad" but said she could sympathize with the people on strike.

Another Lincolnresident feels the strikers have legitimate complaints, but "it's really a complex problem" and the administration "is really trying to straighten the mess out. I'm sure they understand the furor this is creating, but are looking for a reasonable way out."

"But then you've got all sorts of examples where that never happens," he added.

State doesn't deliver services - Olver

Campaign fights for children's rights

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

In this election season the Republicans have Sargent and the Democrats Dukakis, but the children's campaign has no candidate, just a platform and a staff.

The statewide children's campaign was organized to make children's issues a top priority and to determine the position of all the candidates on children's issues and to hold them accountable during and after the election, according to Kenneth T. Shechter, campaign director.

"To our knowledge it is the first children's campaign in the country" said Shechter.

"The attention of the campaign has been to raise the priority of children's issues so when the scramble for money comes children will not be left out", said Rose Olver, professor of psychology at Amherst College and member of the children's steering committee.

Also, "the campaign is necessary because the state is not delivering to children the services they need." "Good legislation is passed but it sits on the books and doesn't get implemented", she said.

The campaign officially began in June and will only run to November 5, "but it is only one phase of the project." "The potential lays in the ability to work as a campaign", said Strechter.

Five major public hearings were held across the state plus the work of the steering committee has resulted in a ten page platform.

The platform has 60 planks specifically dealing with education, mental and physical health, juvenile justice, jobs and recreation, family services and product safety. Other planks ask for enforcement of lax laws and the revision of older laws and practices.

In addition to the public hearings recently there were two hearings for the candidates.

At the gubernatorial hearing Strechter said "Dukakis and Sargent had to do their homework. They had to prepare for questions and were made aware of issues and a constituency."

At a hearing held in Springfield six state candidates met with a panel of heads of social service agencies, parents and young people aged 11, 12, and 17.

"They got the candidates to make a stand and tried to get the candidate to make a commitment for or against legislation," said Greg L. Speeter, Western Mass. Regional co-ordinator for the children's campaign.

Questionnaires were sent to all candidates for gubernatorial state representative's and senator's offices. The candidate's answers will be put on record and then the staff will follow their political career and "any inconsistencies that come up will be quickly pointed out", said Strechter.

Strechter said, "all candidates have responded except for Belloti." "He failed to respond to the questionnaire and failed to come to the hearing."

"I'm not sure what he is afraid of but if elected to Attorney General he will be isolated and insensitive to children's issues."

Children are also helping with the nitty-gritty operations of the campaign. "Kids in North Reading are attempting to have their own hearing calling in the school committee before the election", said Strechter.

In regards to platform input, children have attacked the tracking system that many high schools follow, insufficient bilingual education and the lack of youth employment and recreation said Strechter.

He also said, "kids in Springfield have pointed out that the majority of money goes to building hockey rings which is a white sport that Black kids don't play."

The campaign is a non-partisan effort "because we wanted to demonstrate a campaign that cuts across traditional lines of party and age. We represent democrats and republicans who can support the general aims with no party identification", said Strechter.

UN Day highlights youth

By CATHERINE KOZELL
Staff Reporter

World Population Day is today, confirmed to coincide with the annual U.N. Day Youth (under 30 for our purposes) received their first official recognition from the United Nations with regard to the population issue.

They accomplished this by the formation of the International Youth Population Conference recently held in Budapest. The Conference documented reactions to the World Population Plan of Action.

The basic feeling of the Conference members was that the original draft of the W.P.P.A. was nothing more than a series of compromises. They felt that although high rates of population growth will only aggravate existing socio-economic problems, the causes of these problems are primarily "exploitative and repressive social, economic and political structures and institutions." Called for by the conference was far greater involvement and participation of youth and women in developing plans for change in crucial issues of global concern.

"I believe that women ought to increase their awareness...they should support each other in opening the avenues which would lead them to be part of decision-making bodies." said Mary-Lou O'Neil at UMass Everywoman's Center.

In the past, women have rarely been on the decision-making level with regard to population policy. Ironically enough as it may seem, the Population Council of New York has only 3 women on its technical staff of over 30. This shows just how small the concession of token employment really has been. Up until this point, women have merely been passive acceptors of programs designed by men.

Increasing amounts of women in strategic positions however, should not result in the loss of their sexuality. For as long as women continue to take on male standards as a prerequisite to their attaining top-notch positions, and as long as those who are successful view themselves first as professionals and only second as women, their decision-making will continue to mean nothing for the majority of women in the world.

With all this talk on population control, women surely must play a much larger role in getting effective measures carried out to aid the members of their sex who want to be more than the baby producing machines that both nature and society have cast them as being.

Children should be a woman's prerogative, not her predicament, so she will serve not as subservient to her body, but to her intellect, if she so chooses. Education must bring mankind to this realization, and in doing so, ultimately society will prosper with statistics rising in the quality, not the quantity of life.

Credit union drops students

By JUDY STUDLEY
Staff Reporter

Students who have been trying to form their own credit union have discovered that there is one already at UMass.

But, the Five College Federal Credit Union, located in Draper Hall, is restricted to faculty, staff and their families.

Karl W. Broekhuizen, associate budget director of UMass and president of the credit union, noted that in its founding years around 1967 the credit union was open to students. In recent years the student provision was written out of the charter.

Student membership in the union caused problems according to Broekhuizen. Credit unions exist to encourage thrift, but students use it more for borrowing than savings. The result, he says is a draw upon the funds that makes the credit union a precarious business venture.

Broekhuizen says he is convinced that the chance of success for a student credit union depend upon whether professionals or students run the organization.

"The amount of time involved in making the organization run would be too much for most students. A financial management professional will be needed to make the fledgling organization go."

Will succeed Jaworski Saturday

Ruth appointed Special Watergate Prosecutor

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Attorney General William B. Saxbe Wednesday appointed deputy prosecutor Henry S. Ruth to succeed Special Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, effective Saturday.

Ruth, 43, has served as deputy Watergate prosecutor since June 18, 1973. A native of Philadelphia and an attorney since 1957, he has held several positions in the Justice Department.

Jaworski, in his letter of resignation submitted more than a week ago, recommended Ruth to succeed him. Jaworski said he was stepping down because the office had completed the major part of its work toward investigating and prosecuting Watergate defendants.

"I agree with Mr. Jaworski's conclusion that Mr. Ruth would be the best choice to complete the remaining work of the office," said Saxbe in a statement.

"I have discussed this subject with the President and he fully supports this appointment."

Ruth said he was "very grateful to Mr. Jaworski for his recommendation and I'm also grateful to the attorney general for appreciating and fulfulling the continuity of our operation."

He said he talked Tuesday to both Saxbe and White House attorney Philip Buchan, who "assured me of the same kind of independence that Mr. Jaworski had."

"The operation will continue exactly the same," he said.

Saxbe pledged that Ruth will have the same independence as Jaworski, who took over after then President Richard M. Nixon fired the first Watergate prosecutor, Archibald Cox, a year ago.

The Justice Department said Saxbe had consulted the Democrat and Republican leadership of the House and Senate — particularly the leaders of both parties on the House and Senate judiciary committees — about his selection of Ruth.

"All approved Mr. Ruth's appointment," it said. The department also made public a letter in which Saxbe had accepted Jaworski's resignation "with great appreciation for the magnificient service you have rendered to the country."

"Your dedication and success in pursuing many difficult problems and your great personal sacrifices deserve the praise of all Americans," Saxbe wrote.

Dean's testimony conflicts with crucial White House tapes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John W. Dean III yesterday questioned the accuracy of several tapes of crucial meetings he held with President Richard M. Nixon in the spring of 1973. Judge John J. Sirica decided to let the Watergate cover-up jury decide who is right - Dean or the White House.

Sirica also suggested that Nixon might be called as a witness of the court if neither the defense nor the prosecution could vouch for the accuracy of the former president's testimony. Both sides have subpoenaed him.

Dean said under cross-examination in the trial of five former Nixon associates that the tapes of at least three of his meetings with Nixon - Feb. 27, 28 and March 13 - did not square with his recollections. He said "there were parts missing" in some and others contained discussions he did not remember.

The former White House counsel did not say the tapes were changed. But he indicated his recollections - as he expressed them in the summer of 1973 to the Senate Watergate committee - were correct and thus could not vouch for the accuracy of those particular tapes.

The prosecution said it had decided not to submit those tapes into evidence because they differed with Dean's recollections.

But Sirica, presiding over the Watergate cover-up trial where Dean was in his sixth day on the stand, immediately directed that the questioned tapes be played so the jury could decide if Dean has been telling the truth about his Nixon meetings.

"Now listen," Sirica said, slapping the bench with his hand as defense lawyer John J. Wilson objected. "Just a minute. You just stop talking until I get through.

"You are not going to argue to this jury that this man Dean went up to the Senate committee... and gave false information when you will not let the tape be played. I think those tapes ought to be played in order to get all the facts before the jury and let them decide."

The argument erupted with the jury out of the courtroom as Wilson, attorney for cover-up defendant H. R. Haldeman, sought to establish that Dean's testimony last year before the Senate Watergate committee - in which he linked Nixon to the cover-up plot - differed sharply from the White House tapes. Dean, the former White House counsel, testified there had been "a lot of overlap" in the subjects discussed at the three meetings and that he told the prosecution after hearing the tapes he could not vouch that the recordings matched his recollections.

Kissinger sees detente talks

MOSCOW [UPI] - Secretary of state Henry A. Kissinger arrived last night to explore the future of detente with the Soviet Union and possibly arrange a summit meeting between President Ford and Communist party general secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev in late November.

"We expect to have very full, very friendly and very constructive talks," Kissinger said in an arrival statement.

Number one priority is expected to be the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks in which Kissinger is seeking to establish joint guidelines with the Soviet Union for negotiators in Geneva.

A senior American official said Kissinger was carrying "reasonably concrete" ideas for joint guidelines but did not expect to complete agreement on them during his current visit.

If a summit meeting is set up, it is possible such guidelines could be finalized then.

Initial statements due in Kent State trial

CLEVELAND [UPI] - The judge in the Kent State shootings trial moved jury selection along swiftly yesterday leaving the defense and prosecution with only three peremptory challenges before the opening statements can begin.

The final composition of the jury was expected to be settled upon sometime this morning, clearing the way for the opening statements.

The defense used eight of its 10 challenges and the government used five of its six challenges Wednesday. U.S. District Court Chief Justice Frank J. Battisti dismissed three prospective jurors himself, including one who said he already had made up his mind who was to blame for the Kent tragedy and another who said his judgment might be affected by his former membership in an Ohio National Guard unit involved in the shootings.

The 12 persons tentatively seated on the jury at the conclusion of Wednesdays session were:

Thomas P. Hallauer, a heating plant worker from Elyria; Jean A. Messenger, a Shaker Heights housewife; Arnette Young, a vending machine maintenance man from Cleveland; Martin F. Planisek, a school maintenance employee from Maple Heights; Paul Mack, a Cleveland truck driver; George Muntean, a toolmaker from Strongsville; William Pinter, a medical photographer from Euclid; Gladys Dillon, a Mansfield housewife; Janice Jackson, a bank teller from Akron; Albert Cantale, a factory foreman from Bedford Heights; David Naugle of Cleveland; and a woman identified only as Barbara Reed.

On trial for allegedly assaulting and intimidating student demonstrators on May 4, 1970 - the day four students were killed and nine were wounded in a 13-second barrage of National Guard gunfire - are eight former Ohio National Guardsmen. The U. S. Justice Department charges that their actions denied the students their civil rights.

Five of the eight face a maximum sentence of life imprisonment if convicted. They are: James Pierce, Ralph Zoller, William Perkins, Lawrence Shafer and James McGee.

Doctor says Ray told him more involved

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] - A physician who examined James Earl Ray after his arrest for the slaying of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. testified yesterday Ray once told him he was not the only one involved.

"I asked him," I said, "Were you really involved in this?" Dr. McCarthy DeMere said. "He said, 'Well, let's put it this way, I wasn't by myself.'"

DeMere, who examined Ray after his arrest June 8, 1968, in London, testified at a hearing to determine whether Ray should get a new trial on his contention that he was pressured into pleading guilty by his attorney at the time, famed criminal lawyer Percy Foreman.

Ray is currently serving a 99-year prison sentence.

DeMere said he saw Ray regularly after the first examination. After the guilty plea, he said, he decided to ask Ray about the crime.

He said he also asked Ray if he had any dislike for blacks.

"He said absolutely not, that he liked them, that he had been in prison with them and that he had absolutely no prejudice," DeMere said.

Ray, who seemed almost disinterested in the proceedings at the opening session Tuesday, listened closely to DeMere's remarks yesterday and smiled several times.

Hugh Stanton Jr., now district attorney for Shelby County and once an assistant defender in the Ray case, followed DeMere to the stand. He indicated Foreman was skeptical that Phil Canale, county prosecutor at the time, would agree to plea bargain.

"It would take an attorny general 10 feet tall not to try this case and accept a guilty plea," he quoted Foreman as saying.

Democrats hit Ford on campaign speech

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The White House rejected charges by Democrats yesterday that President Ford was unfair in warning voters election of Democratic "extremists" to Congress next month could threaten world peace.

"I am disappointed and shocked," said Sen. John V. Tunnev. D-Calif., who accused the Republican President of using "scare tactics" and "phony issues." He said voters would reject Ford's claims.

Democratic Party Chairman Robert S. Strauss earlier called campaign statements by Ford this week "reminiscent of Nixon-Agnew" tactics in 1970 congressional stumping.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen quickly rebutted the rebuttals, saying the difference between Ford campaign speeches and those of President Richard M. Nixon and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew "are the difference between day and night."

Nessen said Ford was actually surprised at the heated criticism and had simply been trying to appeal to Republicans and Democrats who would not want a foreign policy dictated by a one-party Congress.

Ford said while campaigning in Oklahoma City Tuesday that election of "extremists in the Democratic party" to Congress would bring about economic chaos and jeopardize world peace.

The White House gave no hint of a letup in Ford's campaign rhetoric as the President prepared to fly to Illinois and Iowa Thursday for more appearances on behalf of Republican candidates.

Campus Comments

Interviews By JIM PAULIN

Important aspects of dorm life are the physical conditions of the building, the efficiency of the maintenance services, cleanliness of public areas and the smooth functioning of the electrical, heating and plumbing systems. Campus Comments spent some time in Southwest talking to the residents of both high and low rise dorms and listening to what they felt about the management of their living quarters.

The question: What do you feel about the maintenance and the general physical condition of your dorm?

Donald Powell—Junior from Roxbury living in Mackimmie majoring in business. "The janitorial service is poor, especially on the weekends... there's too much trash around. They haven't gotten around to fixing a few of our showers."

Mary McGinn—Freshman from Stoneham living in Crampton majoring in Nursing. "Almost everything is okay except the heat is much too hot... the bathrooms are clean... the janitors are real helpful."

Scott Buckley—Freshman from Lynnfield living in Washington majoring in Economics. "The elevators are sort of beat on... The janitors do a very fine job... our janitor will vacuum the rugs in our room if we ask him and do it with a smile."

Dan Finneran—Junior from Shrewsbury living in J. Adams majoring in English. "We've had good service... A door was smashed in one night, but it was fixed the next day."

Ronna Levy—Sophomore from Framingham living in J.Q.A. majoring in Speech Education. "The garbage room stinks on the weekend and we live right across from it... sometimes it's warm enough but sometimes it's not. Oh yea, the windows are dirty."

Rich · Berman—Freshman from Natick living in Pierpont enrolled in the Inquiry Program. "I think the physical plant does a good job... There've been a lot of short circuits causing power failures, but that's probably because there's so many hot plates and refrigerators."

Letters to the editor

McGilvray's anger is justified

To the Editor:

It is with great reluctance and despair that I must agree with Donald McGilvray's statement in yesterdays Collegian, "the chickenshit WMUA Management who once again allowed themselves to be bullied by these behemoths, decided to "fire" me. [Fire a Volunteer?!] Not because they didn't like the ad, but because they HATED me.

Just to set the record straight, it was last August that Donald McGilvray approached me with an offer of his services, certainly a shot in the arm of our quickly dwindling budget. I approached Management Board, anticipating their approval of a weekly cartoon-promotion combination, a certainty to beef-up the greatly overused and worn out scroll that still appears daily. At that meeting, it was unanimously agreed to allow McGilvray a shot at drawing a different ad each week.

After McGilvray drew one ad, which lasted a mere five days, a petition was presented at our last station meeting. It was signed by most of the Women's Media Project and several station members. The proposal said that McGilvray's cartoons were a disgrace to our station, the Women's Media Project refused to have their weekly program promoted underneath his cartoon.

One member of their project stated, "I never met Donald McGilvray, but I hate him. I wish he were here right now so I could tell him to his face how much I hate him." Another member of the station came through with, "Don McGilvray represents all of the total fucked-up-itive-ness of this university," to which he received a resounding applause. I wonder how similar these statements would have been had Mr. McGilvray been in the room.

Not once was McGilvray approached by anyone from either the Women's Media Project or WMUA with any direct criticism of his cartoon.

Not one person even considered my suggestion that we allow McGilvray to try a few more cartoons, and evaluate his work at a later time.

The decision was signed, sealed, and delivered in less than fifteen minutes, and it was decided upon behind McGilvray's back. The final vote was 21 against, 2 for, with 3 abstentions.

Once again I helplessly sat by and watched WMUA's Management Board sit idly in the grandstand, uttering not a word, but voting in the negative because they were urged to do so.

I do not believe the members of the Women's Media Project are prong-toothed assholes. Nor do I think they regard themselves as the mind and mouth of all UMass women. Nonetheless, there are many problems at WMUA, the worst of which I fear are permanent. WMUA was never a tight, free-flowing operation and never will be. It was something to do with the fact that we are classified as a college radio station. We are also a learning center open to all UMass students who want to either learn or develop broadcasting or production skills. That is why there is dead air every day, why people don't know when they are on mike, and why people freak out when they run out of news before the time is up. These things are happening less and less, we are all learning.

No one wants to see this station turn into a power-shuffling, uncontrollable monster, but it has been a fear. We all play somewhat of a power game, especially those with any decision-making power. The action that was taken in regard to McGilvray's short-lived cartoon was merely another shuffle in the power game, the one that I noticed the first day of my freshman year, or the first time I set foot in the front door.

Support free Cyprus day

To the Editor:

The Cyprus Committee of Greater Springfield, Mass., as you see, is the enlargement of the original one, following the tragic events in Cyprus and Greece, that appealed for public contributions and support. Your response was gratifying. $6,000 has already been dispatched and clothing is being shipped at regular intervals. The NEED continues to be great!

In our continued efforts to bring an awareness to the public, a MARCH and RALLY are scheduled for Sat., Oct. 26th. The date marks the anniversary of the historic "OXI", St. Demetrios' Holy Day and the liberation of Salonica from the Turks in 1912.

The MARCH is scheduled for 1:00 P.M., from the St. George Greek Orthodox Church grounds, at Memorial Square, and the RALLY will follow at Court Square.

The order of the day will be as follows:

Mayor Wm. Sullivan proclaims a FREE CYPRUS DAY. A symbolic Torch of FREEDOM will be carried by young Marathon Runners from City Hall to Memorial Square. Services and Doxology will be celebrated in St. George's by Reverends Papadoulias, Katopis, Vulopas and Chamberas.

Assembling starts at 12:00 Noon with Marshalls directing and distributing flags, signs and banners. Parking will be accommodated in our Parking Lot, where Security Guards will be posted.

Police Escorts will lead the MARCH and St. George' Drummers will provide marching beat. Slogans and Cheers will be directed by the Marshalls.

RALLY starts with Religious Prayers by various Clergymen, the singing of National Anthems, speeches by many local and national speakers and closes with a Benediction.

United, as never before, our people deem it their duty to proclaim that injuring Greece is NOT in the best interests of America and that Turkey cannot possibly be appeased at the expense of CYPRUS!

Congress is fighting hard to apply THE LAW in STOPPING ALL MILITARY AID TO TURKEY - NOW! Our Congressmen BOLAND and CONTE are holding the line. They need our solid support. We can only show our determination by a massive outpouring of every man, woman and child, young and old, at the MARCH and RALLY, to proclaim, once again, that MIGHT SHALL NOT MAKE RIGHT!!

People's Market—yes, Munchies—no

To the Editor:

In response to Bryan Schultz's question concerning what can be done to buy food on campus and avoid the Munchies rip-off, we feel that the People's Market is the answer. The People's Market [located in the back of the S.U.] is a food co-operative that is open to all the university community. We have no membership fee and do not require pre-ordering of food. What we try to do is offer an alternative both economically and nutritionally. We carry fruit, vegetables, cheese, dairy products, grains, bread, yogurt, and canned goods at prices significantly lower than Munchies. We try to have fresh products on hand everyday, but sometimes we don't have enough volunteer help or storage space to handle it.

These are our two main problems. We need people to help stock shelves, cut cheese, bag lettuce and generally help out with things that need to be done. We rely on volunteers as a way to keep our prices low. If you have volunteered and we were so busy we forgot to say thank you, we apologize, just please come back and help again!

Our second problem is our lack of a permanent, at hand chilling room. We tried unsuccessfully this summer and into the fall to get a motion passed by the Board of governors allowing us to buy an air-conditioner and build a chilling room. At this point we have a temporary cold storage [for this semester only] which is located a floor below us in the walkway behind the Hatch. Although this arrangement is unsatisfactory we are using it in order to have some amount of stock on hand.

Our goal is to offer to the University community the best quality and variety of products at the lowest cost that is possible within our operating framework. To do this we need your help and support. Help us by shopping and volunteering at the People's Market.

The UMass chic

As another school season marks its course in our lives, the big problem of concern is, of course, what to wear. But don't worry. The fashionable UMie will be glad to know that, once again, the natural, well worn look is in.

Let New York have its glitter and gilt. We can have our country funk.

Let's start off with the "Layered Look."

As not to confuse our already boggled minds from studying too hard and coping with Hatch coffee, stick to basic colors. First, put on blue socks. Then, put on blue dungarees (straight legged of course). Next, top that off with your favorite blue shirt. Add to that, a blue sweatshirt. And there you are, ready for a day at UMie.

Suppose you found an exquisite plaid flannel shirt at a tag sale, but the hem is way beyond repair. Don't think of it as useless. Just wear it over your favorite blue turtleneck, roll up the sleeves and tie the bottom around your waistline. No one will notice, unless of course, you don't really care. Which brings us to:

The "But I'm only going to School" Look.

This is the easiest of all looks because all you have to do is get up in the morning and throw on the nearest articles of clothing that'll cover your body so that you'll be decent enough as not to be arrested.

But if you are indeed a fashion conscious UMie, you'll be glad to know that our country's 200th birthday is also a way to keep up with the latest or, what is known as:

That Bicentennial Look.

Think of those marvy colors, red, white, and blue. I hear the latest will be to cut up an old flag and line your favorite dungaree jacket with it. But I have a better idea. Why not take that flag and use your jacket as the lining? Let Ol' Glory really protect you!

In keeping with the spirit of '76, we have new found freedom in our clothes. Freedom from underwear came first and now there's freedom from belts. So now beltloops can hold those near and dear possessions that were once carried in our pockets. Why hide those beautiful dorm keys in your pockets? Hang 'em on your beltloops. And for the macho-personality, show your true self. Hang your pocket knife from a loop. Those cute little red Swiss Army Knives will just go peachy keen with blue dungarees.

While some may shout "thin is in," we all might realize that "fat's where it's at." So you'll be glad to know that overalls are big. And that's how you should wear them. Why not start a fad? Get overalls so big that you can wear them with your roommate or lover? Start the ultimate in unisex outfits with "the togetherness look."

Or start a whole new fad. Let's call it the "No Look." And it's so easy, because all you have to do is not go to classes at all. And that's one style that we've all followed.

Who should choose?

Lately it seems that we are becoming a nation of committees. The latest entry into the parade of investigations is, of course, the Rockefeller confirmation hearings. We are being treated to an expose, the likes of which most of us have never even dreamt of. It is more than a bit ironic for us to be concerned with someone's millions, when we find it difficult to scrape a buck together, and keep it together for more than fifteen minutes. Middle class poverty is running rampant, and yet we're all supposed to lose sleep over Nelson Rockefeller, and his little token gifts to his friends. The President tells us to tighten our belts and all that garbage, while every day figures in the millions of dollars float across the front pages of newspapers. Somehow it all doesn't seem quite cricket.

But getting back to the committees, the object is to screen applicants for the nations number two job. The obvious criteria, in the face of Watergate, is freedom from scandal or gross misjudgements. The assumption being, I suppose, that a scandal free administration is a good administration. Well, as the man said, it ain't necessarily so. There must be a certain ingredient known as desirability. The people must, for one reason or another, desire a particular person or persons to hold a position in government. The way we have done this in the past, was to hold a phenonema known as national elections. It's not a surefire way to success, (re: the Nixon-Agnew sweep), but you pays your money, and you takes your choice. Every once in a while we get stuck with a couple of beauts, but at least the people, some of them, have spoken. Since 1972, the people have had no opportunity to speak, although we have a new President, and will soon, we think, have a new Vice President. The Congress has done the work for us. To be sure, we could not impeach a President without a Congress willing to do so. (Stop snickering.) But once that was accomplished, we found ourselves with a 25th Amendment President, and another possibility on the way up. It could happen again, you know. Rockefeller, or whoever is finally given a green light, could become President, and faster than we can say Victor Lasky.

Now herein lies a fundamental problem. Rockefeller has tried, at least a couple of times, to be elected President. The people of his own party have consistently rejected his bids. If he, then, should become the Vice President, aren't we, the people, being put on? Isn't the Republican Party, Congress, and particularly the President, telling the people that we no longer can control the fate of our elected officials? In short, we, dear friends, are being completely overlooked. Our preferences count for absolutely nothing these days, Congress is too damn worried about how clean Rocky is, instead of tackling this basic problem. He's getting let in the back door, when the front door has been consistently barred to him by the people. It is more than unfair, or shady. It's a gross injustice on the electoral process. Allowing Ford to slip by was bad enough, but now the prospect of Rockefeller in the same boat is ludicrous.

Of course, it is reasonable to believe that this screening process will serve as a caution to all those who may be interested in seeking higher office. Clean is the word of the day. But what happens if we are lulled into concluding that the only way to insure honest and upstanding leadership is through the committee process? It comes down to the basic · question of the founding fathers, about the worthiness of the people to choose. Through all this we should remember that what we are seeing is not the normal course of events. We elect Presidents and Vice Presidents in this country. They go through a tedious process of state primaries, conventions, and hard campaigning. It is not the sure-fire way, but neither is democracy. If what we're looking for is efficiency, there are plenty of other systems of government that offer that choice. In light of the fiasco of the 1972 election, and the associated shananigans, it is probably unpopular for me to defend the campaigning process. But I must caution anyone who is satisfied with the committee approach to government, that we are seeing at present. It may be granting a certain amount of political cleaniiness, but it is more importantly depriving us of our right to have the final say. We should view the committee approach not with a sigh of relief, but rather with a yell of protest.

> Isn't the Republican Party, Congress and particularly the President, telling the people that we no longer can control the fate of our public officials?

The way our basic freedoms have been encroached upon, particularly by the past administration, for us to sit back now and watch a select group of people in Washington choose our leaders, is nothing short of surrendering the most powerful of the rights we have managed to hold on to. Sit back and watch, or stand up and be heard. Should we vote, or should they choose?

A right to live...

By ERIC FLEET

Disrespect for human life has always been the mark of a society doomed to destruction. Throughout history, as civilizations have reached great material wealth and worldly satisfaction, they have become increasingly immuned to the infinite value of each and every human life. Today, the testimony of our crumbling civilization is born by those thousands of souls whose lives have been snuffed out by the scourge of abortion.

Since World War II, man's life has become easier as he has increasingly acquired the power of instant self-gratification. Out of this technical revolution has developed a self-centered society where any sense of moral responsibility to others is downgraded. This attitude is encouraged by politicians and pathological "liberation" movements, always quick to tell people of their rights but never willing to inform them of the responsibilities which make those rights possible.

Out of this morally bankrupt milieu has grown the nihilistic notion that the Almighty Self is omnipotent, and that one may stop at nothing for whatever one deems to be in one's own best interest. Out of the putrid corpse our society is becoming, anarchy can be the only result.

This cowardly, narcissistic mentality, at its start, destroys only the weak. It begins with the innocent unborn. Then it moves to the aged, as is the case in Britain where euthenasia has followed the cry for abortion. Out of this abomination one can foresee a scourge not unlike that in Swift's Modest Proposal, where children were to be consumed like cattle. The poor, sick and weak members of society would become a sacrifice to the "common good" of the strong and mighty.

Most Americans, of all faiths, are shocked by this abhorrence. Yet, due to the efforts of the media and the social welfare state, they have become desensitised to the horror. As we grow lax in our attitude the death toll mounts and society marches closer to its doom. If the bloody tide of abortion is not stopped soon, we will have on our national conscience a stain more ghastly than the acts of Hitler, Stalin and Mao combined.

...And be human

By MARGARET CORNELL

Sometimes it seems strange to write about being Asian-American; after all, I am only a half-breed, ainoko as the Japanese say. Only part Japanese.. Look at my name: how much more English than that can you get! But and — this is crucial — my experience has been that of a Japanese living in America. It's not by blood or heritage that people are Asian, Black, Spanish, or — American. It is by experience or shared identity.

Yeah, there are choices open to Third World peoples here. Some might choose to simply be "People" and not let race stand in their way. They can react with anger to racial slurs and then keep on going, being people, being open and saying, "What does race matter? What is important is being 'human'." That path aligns them with the majority of course. Then there are those who are totally "ethnic". Only their group is open to them. "No outsiders allowed. You may be sympathetic, but you are outsiders. You can never understand." That path leaves them isolated in their own enclave, their own territory with a great deal of personal interaction left out because of ethnicity or lack of it.

I like to call both kinds of thinking "either-or". Either we are all mushy together with no "real" differences or we are shut up into stiff compartments and boxes. Isn't it just a little dangerous for adults to play games like this? And where does that leave people like me who fit into neither category? O great, let's have all the pure races get together; since some group has to be on the bottom, let it be the people of mixed race. That is overdrawn of course.

But I'm sick of people living for the future and clinging to the past. We live today, here, now. We live in a society of many races and cultures. It hasn't worked trying to act as if we are one race, culture, or sex. People have the same needs say many, but they forget that not all needs can be met in the same way. Politics and economics have worked, have been used to divide us. Why can't we use them to unite? They can be tools for us, instead of people being tools for economics and politics. But first, Americans had better learn who and what they are; America the Melting Pot has got to go, to be replaced by a multi-racial and multi-cultural society made up of two sexes. America can no longer afford to be run by and for white men only. Let's set our own house in order before we try to build relations with other peoples and nations.

Sargent wants unified control

Referendum to settle health agency issue

BOSTON [UPI] — The 1974 legislative session was drawing to a close and Gov. Francis W. Sargent had failed miserably in his attempts to win approval for his massive and highly touted package unveiled nearly two years ago to reorganize state government.

In a battle of wills that quickly became embroiled in partisan politics, Sargent told the legislature he wanted his plan approved to create a Health Services Regulation Agency.

Rep. Louis P. Bertonazzi, D-Milford, chairman of the subcommittee that had studied the issue for more than a year, recommended the legislature scuttle the proposal, and it did.

But Sargent was insistent. He sent the measure back. Again it was killed. He sent it back again with the clearly implied postscript that he would not allow the lawmakers to adjourn so they could get on with the business of campaigning for re-election until he got something.

A compromise was worked out. The legislature was allowed to adjourn in exchange for passing legislation putting Sargent's health systems on the ballot as a non-binding referendum question - its thrust to win voter approval which would serve as a mandate to the lawmakers to approve such an agency in the 1975 session.

That is by way of explaining what referendum Question 6 is doing on the Nov. 5 ballot.

It is by far the most challenging question voters are asked to answer. It asks if the legislature should enact a bill next year creating a Department of Health Systems Regulation DHSR - nee HRSA - with the power to administer the medicaid program and most other state health regulation matters.

The proposed department would be created within the Executive Office of Human Services. In addition to administering medicaid, it would control and set rates for nursing homes, hospitals and other health providers under medicaid; license and inspect health facilities; and regulate private health insurance policies, medical and hospital insurance plans.

An office of health consumer protection would also be created by the act. A state health plan would be adopted by a proposed Health Systems Regulation Council. The plan would include the principles and methods to be followed by the Rate Setting Commission in determining rates of payment to health care providers.

The commissioner of the new department would have the power to approve and standardize accident and health insurance policies.

Black man beaten by Hub whites

No arrests were reported.

Three weeks ago a group of angry whites dragged another black man from his car near the Old Colony Housing Project in South Boston and beat him with sticks and clubs.

That incident triggered a confrontation between 600 whites and 400 Boston police. During the next two days violence broke out in the predominantly black Roxbury section in apparent retaliation for the beating incident.

Problems at South Boston High School itself, previously the scene of racial tensions, flared yesterday with 11 students suspended and at least one arrested following fights between black and white students.

Elsewhere in the city, where court-ordered desegregation and busing has touched off weeks of tension and racial turbulence, officials said there were no major incidents.

School officials said the incident at South Boston High School took place in classrooms, corridors and the girls locker room.

They involved "pushing, shoving and some punching" officials said. They said a teacher's aid was punched in the face during one scuffle but did not require hospital treatment.

A 17-year-old white student was charged with assault and battery in one of the fights, officials said.

A black coed not involved in the fight was suspended at South Boston for carrying a knife.

At Hyde Park High School two black students were arrested for throwing objects out of a school bus window, the School Department reported.

Officials at South Boston and Hyde Park continued to use metal detectors to keep weapons out of the schools and state and Boston police remained stationed at the two buildings.

No weapons were found during the metal searches Wednesday but on Tuesday eight knives were found in front of the two buildings as students apparently discarded them before they went into school.'

Calf slaughter spurs angry letters, calls

MADISON, Wis. [UPI] — Wisconsin Agriculture Department officials said yesterday protesters are flooding their office with letters, telegrams and phone calls because of the National Farmers Organization calf slaughter last week.

Wisconsin NFO members killed more than 600 animals in protest of rising feed costs and falling livestock prices.

One former Wisconsin resident living in Ohio said he was "completely ashamed and so damn mad at this ignorance that I can hardly steady my hand to write this."

Barbara E. Katz of Maryland said the persons doing the killing "are taking out the problem of inflation on defenseless animals."

A Michigan woman wrote, "I think I will not send my usual Christmas gift of Wisconsin cheese, etc., as my protest to the NFO and Buena Vista Beef Growers."

A California writer said he never thought "we would come to the day when we would see racketeers in the market place."

A Student Organizing Project (SOP), operating with about $40,000 of student senate money, has been working since last spring to attempt organizing students on campus into a collective bargaining unit.

Student unionizing is new in the field of higher education, and organizers feel the University may try to frustrate the attempt in order to retain authority over campus activities.

UMass President Robert C. Wood told a Collegian reporter several weeks ago he thinks a student union is "not appropriate for an institution of higher learning."

The Governance Units Convention also discussed the problems of student power as proposed by Rick Savini, president of S.G.A. and Cindy McGrath, speaker of the Senate.

McGrath said, "people don't question, but they have to start questioning. If we don't want to live in dorms, that decision has to be made by us. We have to ask who has the right to make decisions and I contend that you do, the administration contends that they do."

Savini further questioned "if student government is to be the arm of the administration, subordinate to the administration. The administration is here to work for our education. The student government is not very effective. I question that structure and I am asking student government to say to themselves what is my role? Am I here to take up the slack? Are we children or are we adults.

Savini asked for a list of resolutions that will set what direction student government will take.

Discussion from the floor centered around whether student government was representative of the majority of students, possible student organization, the question of apathy, dissatisfaction with communication, autonomous control of student monies, possible check off on bill to raise money, how to get students involved, ultimatum to the University that disregards the Gage memo as to its legality and authenticity, defining the University as a structure that oppresses peoples needs and how students can change that structure, possible litigation against the University to solve the matter of student constitutional rights, and that students must realize that they are dealing with an institutional system.

Positive action was voice by many of the students, and Savini noted the possibility of other meetings to focus around these issues.

Earlier at the student senate meeting, Savini told the new senate that "this was the year for change in student government, a new look at what our role is."

A proposal was clearly passed, after much discussion of one amendment to send an open letter to the Boston School Committee, Boston City Council, Mayor White and Governor Sargent. The letter supports the right of every child to quality integrated education.

Busing is an important step; the fight in South Boston and other white communities in Boston is against Black people.

The letter demands that federal troops be dispatched to Boston in order to safeguard the lives and rights of Black Children; the School Committee begin to actively enforce the Racial Imbalance Act.

The question of whether federal troops would cause more harm than good, whether or not White children were being hurt as much as Black children, whether the letter would have any effect and whether it was the Student's responsibility to take a stand, were all discussed following the proposal.

Syria distrusts U.S.

RABAT, Morocco [UPI] - Syria urged Arab states yesterday not to put too much trust in Washington's promises to help find a peaceful solution to the Middle East crisis but to set up a unified military command to prepare for the possibility of renewed war against Israel.

The command, Syria said, should include Egypt, Syria, Jordan and the Palestinian Liberation Organization, sources said.

BNS on the scene

Racism reaches epidemic proportions

Black community calls for protection, school control

Students propose community schools

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

"The most damaging thing a people in a colonial situation can do is to allow their children to attend any educational facility, organized by the dominant enemy culture." — George Jackson

The above statement has been proven again and again to be very correct. The most recent reflections of this philosophy can be seen in the actions which are being taken in Boston, at this very moment. This action which is referred to concerns the school desegregation court order which is now in effect.

Equal access to education has always been a sensitive and highly inflammatory topic when discussed in the interest of Black people. The call for "freedom of education," commonly called "Quality Education" has been echoed continuously throughout the struggle in Boston by the Black communities involved in desegregation.

When members of the Black News Serivce went into the troubled areas of Boston's Black communities, it was plainly demonstrated that there is a very immediate need for another system of learning as opposed to the present plan under implementation now. Alternative school systems were discussed both by the parents and students.

In a close session interview, held with students and parents of the Columbia Point Neighborhood, it was discovered that feelings concerning the tense situations in the Black community was shared collectively with the entire neighborhood. It was reiterated that, Black people have a very unique problem that can only be realistically solved when Black people work together sharing and pooling the community resources together in order to build and improve the living conditions of our people.

Community service centers such as Health and Educational facilities (only to name two services) must be designed, built and managed by the members of the various Black community in and around the Boston area. Community control must take a firm grip, penetrating deep into the souls of every person. Oppressed people must become aware of their potential and utilize all available resources in developing the tools and service centers that are necessary for our growth and progress.

The following is a few questions and answers that transpired during the community news conference held last week.

Q. What does community Alternative Schools mean to this neighborhood?

A. "A lot of people are talking about alternative schools — but we must start examining the need for quality education for our Brothers and Sisters.

Q. What does it take to receive quality education for the Black community?

A. "It is time for us to research the available resources that our communities produce. When we do this, we must then start educating our people to the need for community support of all positive community programs, especially the Alternative School programs.

We must keep the money that people spend in our community, in the community. Only through this can we build schools that have the necessary resources that will offer quality education."

Q. Are the Black politicians working in behalf of the total community's needs?

A. "It seems that the politicians are not seriously sensitive to the needs of the brothers and sisters who are out in the streets and on the buses going to school A considerable amount of them have been supporting the integrationist views, yet they themselves have not travelled the blood stained route of busing."

Q. Is there a student movement organization in the schools for the protection of the children?

A. "There's no student movement as such, but everybody has been voicing their opinion about what they feel.

Q. What do you feel about the violence that has been reoccuring in the schools?

A. "When the violence happened at Hyde Park High School, we were stoned and injured. Not any of the whites received as harsh brutality as we did. When we requested from the school officials to send in Federal Marshals for protection, nothing was done. It just shows that when we go to school and get attacked, it doesn't make any difference to the official."

An open letter to the community

An open letter to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, from the Collegiate Education of Black Students Organization (CCEBS).

The Board of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) at UMass-Amherst deplores the recent and continuing violence perpetrated against the Black Community of Boston. The CCEBS Board, which is composed of Black students, faculty and administrative personnel recognizes the relationship of historical background and general atmosphere in the commonwealth and the country to the present crisis. Nonetheless, we feel that we must address the immediate circumstances of this critical situation as well as the general issues. SPECIFICALLY:

We deplore the support given to the violence by the President of the United States;

We deplore the lack of courage of our elected leaders in responding to this situation. Equivocation and half-hearted denunciation of such overt violence itself suggest support for it;

We deplore the lack of imagination both in preparing the citizenry for the change and in meeting the crisis now existing;

We deplore the lack of interest shown by those in the Boston community who have the resources and skills for crisis intervention. We would particularly point out that the large academic community of the area has for the most part seen fit to look on passively;

The Black students on the UMass-Amherst campus have repeatedly expressed their interest and concern over the situation that exists in Boston and on this campus. The Black students on campus are trying to organize themselves into a meaningful coalition with some of the other community leaders in the five college area campuses. The Black students have approached their student representatives and have shown their concern over what is happening. The student representatives have reported that the energies in the Black community are high and it is obvious that what is happening in Boston. They want to put an end to the incidents of white aggression that is happening in the Amherst community.

It has been repeatedly shown that violence only leads to violence. The Black students have asked for a little direction of their energies. They have asked their representatives to help them attain this help because they don't want their energies to flow uncontrolled, uneven, or just undirected which could possibly lead to an outbreak of violence.

The main concern of the Black students on the UMass-Amherst campus is to deal with what is happening within the surroundings in which they live without the destructive use of violence. The Black students are trying to move toward a better understanding between themselves and white students and others in order to strive for a better understanding of the racial turmoil of living on a predominantly white campus. The students have asked their representatives to inform us of their feelings and concerns and as a Board of Directors of CCEBS, they have our full support in assisting them in their endeavors.

Historically, if one places the city of Boston in perspective, we find an "Urban Jungle" which has articulated a creed of equality while practicing discrimination. Boston is a city, which practices "cool conservatism" proud of the "proper Bostonian," which can be defined as an aura of "discrete oppression" for all who do not "Fit". This is a city which gives credance to the violent repression of young Blacks and sits quietly by while young people are becoming deprived of an education by the "Swords" of adults, not for "Peace" as the motto of the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts be-speaks, but for violent repression of young people.

One can easily classify these protagonists (seemingly free) as carbon copies of their fathers (slave owners) though they are unaware of the similarities.

Perhaps one must remember that all who are cut bleed and all who are frightened cower. Perhaps the leaders of this city, state and Nation are frightened, but must they bleed!!!

The erroneous assumption about north-south discrimination perpetrated in this country is being agrantly proven in Boston. If the Statesmen of this country can bring about peace in a large Nation in conflict, can they not bring about peace in a city the size of Boston?

We call upon every person and group in the Commonwealth and in the Country who have a potentially constructive role to become immediately active in the pursuit of justice and to insure the safety of the children whose physical and psychological well-being are being endangered.

IN PARTICULAR, WE CALL UPON:

1. The President of the United States to immediately and unequivocally disavow the former statements made by him in support of resistence to law. Only chaos results when the highest office of the land is the source of illegal definance;
2. The Governor to make clear that the law will be upheld and that he will make all resources of the Commonwealth available for the construction of a viable solution to the crisis;
3. The Mayor and elected officials of Boston to work at every level with the citizens of Boston to restore peace and work toward constructive solutions to the present situation;
4. SPECIFICALLY: We call upon Senator Edward Brooke to demonstrate the moral leadership and courage expected of his position as the senior senator from the Commonwealth of Mass.
5. Finally, we call upon the United Nations, which has historically concerned itself with instances of direct or indirect genocide, to place the recent Boston Massacre in their category and take whatever action it deems necessary.

Boston desegregation

For your information

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Now that the topic of busing is of current interest to people of Boston, (local and national communities), and realizing that many people know very little about desegregation, the following questions and answers have been selected from the booklet "Boston Desegregation: Questions and Answers", published by the Freedom House Institute on Schools and Education.

Q. What is the Racial Imbalance Law?

A. The Racial Imbalance Law, passed in 1965, provides for the elimination of imbalanced schools. An imbalanced school is defined by the law as any school with a non-white population over 50 per cent. Under the law, if a city is found to have imbalanced schools, the school committee is required to submit a plan to balance them.

Q. What is a desegregated school?

A. A desegregated school is a school with equal enrollment of white and non-white students.

Q. What is an integrated school?

A. An integrated school, on the other hand, is a school which reflects Black and White cultures equally. Not only is there a racially balanced student enrollment, but teachers and staff are racially balanced, books and classroom materials show both Black and White cultures and Black and White communities participate equally in making decisions about the education of their children.

Q. Why did the State Board of Education make up a racial balance plan for Boston?

A. Under the Racial Imbalance Law, it is the responsibility of local school officials (in Boston, the Boston School Committee) to draw up a plan to balance its schools. However, in Boston, the School Committee was not able to come up with a plan acceptable to the Supreme Judicial court. The result was that the State Board of Education was ordered by the Supreme Judicial Court to draw up a plan for Boston.

Q. Does the State Plan meet the requirements of the Racial Imbalance Law?

A. Not completely. There are still schools in Lower Roxbury, Washington Park, and Mattapan which are left unbalanced under the plan. However, the State Plan does reduce the number of non-white children in racially imbalanced schools from about 30,000 to about 10,000.

Q. Are all-white schools legal under the Racial Imbalance Law?

A. Yes. The Racial Imbalance Law only forbids schools over 50 per cent non-white.

Q. Why are schools in lower Roxbury, Washington Park and parts of Mattapan left imbalanced?

A. Because it was impossible for the State Board of Education to meet the above-mentioned guidelines of the Supreme Judicial Court in drawing school districts and still balance these schools. These schools are located in the center of the city so far from white neighborhoods that it was impossible to draw balanced school districts including these schools without making the districts too large and the travel distance of the children too great.

Q. Why do many school districts remain all white under the plan?

A. Because it was impossible to include Black children in these districts without making the districts too large or travel distance for the children too great.

Q. Why are they changing the grade structure in the schools?

A. In 1967, the Boston School Committee decided to change the grade structure from K-6 (Elementary), 7-9 (Intermediate) 10-12 (High School). They changed most of the schools in the Black Community to the new grading structure and then stopped. The result was a dual (double) structure. Recently, the federal government has found the Boston Schools in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 because of this dual grade structure by changing all schools to the new system originally adopted by the Boston School Committee in 1967.

Q. Why are elementary schools being closed?

A. Under the State Plan, elementary schools will go up only to the 5th grade and 6th graders will go into intermediate schools. This change from K-5 to K-6 has created extra space in the elementary schools and has made it possible to close several elementary schools and still accomodate all elementary pupils. Some elementary schools will be used as high school annexes this fall to accommodate the 9th graders who will be going to high school under the State Plan.

Q. What schools are unaffected by the plan?

A. The Latin Schools and Technical High School.

Q. What programs are unaffected by the plan?

A. Vocational Programs, bilingual programs and special education programs. If a student is in one of these programs now or plans to be in one next year, he will go to the school where that program is offered and not to his regular district school.

Q. Are Kindergarten children included in the racial balance plan?

A. No. Kindergarten children will attend the school nearest their home unless a parent chooses to have the child attend with older brothers or sisters.

Q. What is geocode?

A. A geocode is a small grouping of streets designated as a police reporting area. There are 800 geocoded areas in the city of Boston, and they are used for taking census and for identifying the location of fires, crimes and other emergencies. State Planners used geocoded information in drawing new school districts and assigned children to school according to their geocode areas.

Q. How many children are there in the Boston public schools?

A. 93,647 (W) 57,523 (NW) 36,024 38.5 per cent

Q. How many children will be bussed?

A. According to the Boston School Department, 17,400 children will need transportation to school for distance and safety reasons. Here is the breakdown: Elementary: 5472 Intermediate: 6006 High School: 5922

Q. How did the Boston School Department decide who would be assigned for transportation?

A. For grades 1 to 8, all chidren traveling over a mile to school will be provided with transportation. Some children within walking distance of school (less than one mile) were also assigned to transportation if it was considered unsafe for them to walk to school because of dangerous streets, railroad tracks, etc. All high school students traveling over one and one-half miles will be provided with transportation. In the past high school students have taken the MBTA to school. They have now been assigned to regular school buses for safety reasons, i.e. to avoid possible student trouble to MBTA transfer points.

Q. How far will elementary children be traveling?

A. No further than 2 miles. (1 per cent of elementary school children will travel farther than 2 miles).

Q. How do I apply for a job as a bus monitor or transitial aide?

A. Freedom House Institute is assisting the School Department by helping interested persons to make out applications for these jobs. (Applicants must be at least 21 years old). Interested persons may also contact the School Department directly or the City-Wide Education Coalition.

Q. If a parent has a child assigned to a segregated school under the plan and would like his child to go to a desegregated school, what can he do?

A. He should contact the principal or headmaster at the school his child now attends to find out about the Controlled Transfer Policy.

Q. What is controlled transfer?

A. Under controlled transfer a child may transfer from a school in which over half of the students are his same race, to a school in which the students of his race represent less than half of the total number of students in that school, provided that there is space available. For this year, the School Committee has said that they will not accept applications for controlled transfer until after school starts. The control transfer policy replaced the open enrollment policy in 1970, which allowed students to transfer into any school where there was extra space. Under open enrollment, many white students moved out of schools with Black populations, causing some of these schools to become imbalanced schools.

Q. What is Exodus?

A. Exodus, founded in 1965, is Roxbury's first grassroots education organization. Under the Exodus Program about 800 children are transported voluntarily out of schools in Roxbury and Mattapan and into schools in the City of Boston under the Controlled Transfer Policy. Exodus children attend schools in Hyde Park, Roslindale, West Roxbury, Brighton, Back Bay, and Doghester.

Q. The U.S. Congress has passed a bill banning bussing farther than the next nearest neighborhood school. Does this affect Boston's desegregation plan?

A. No, because this bill also says that a Judge, such as Judge Garrity, may order bussing if he thinks it is necessary in order to desegragate the schools.

Q. How many non-white teachers are there in the Boston School System?

A. Out of a total of 5,215 teachers, 462 are non-white (7.2 per cent).

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

It's been over a month now since the city of Boston was forced to desegregate its schools, as a result of the racial imbalance act passed in 1965 and which the racist school committee in Boston was able to avoid implementing for nine years.

Fact is the racial imbalance act is racist in itself as it, first, requires all black schools to desegregate but "all white" schools can legally remain. Secondly it stipulates that the reason for an equal education lies in the fact that the student body is all black. The quality education in any school depends on, the attitude of the teachers and students, the curriculum and activities, and the resources available to staff and students, not on racial makeup. Tuskegee, Howard and Morehouse are some of the all Black institutions with a long history of providing education for black people.

The Public school system in Boston is one of the worst in the nation. The 9th grade reading scores across the city are an example of this, (they are at least a full year behind). This is not just found in all black schools, but across the city.

Boston, one of the largest college centers in the country, sends a smaller percentage of its graduating classes on to colleges, than many other cities in the country. Statistics show that in 1973, South Boston High sent only 85 students out of 418, on to any form of higher education. Looking at Dorchester High, the statistics are unbelievably the same, 74 out of 365 went on to higher education. Forced integration will not in any way change these statistics.

So the black student finds himself being forced to leave his "home" school for one that is in no way better equipped to fulfill his needs. To make matters worse, he is stoned and scorned as if it is his desire to be there. The issue in Boston is whether the special demands of minorities and their democratic rights are going to be met; forced integration of students into white schools is a violation of the rights of minority students as it does not fulfill their educational needs.

The struggle that black students in the Columbia Point project wage is one for a system of controlling the mode of education which will best serve the people, and at this point the best control for black people is Community Control.

During the more violent times in South Boston, when the school was closed for a week, the residents of The Columbia Project set up an alternative school program. This is essentially what the black students desire, they have no wish to attend South Boston High. The alternative school program answers all the key needs of a basic high school education for Black children.

The children attended school every day at the community center where the curriculum consists of courses in swahili - in lieu of English, History, political education and the sciences. However in order to continue their plan of forced busing, and to make the appearance that school is returning to normal, the Boston School Committee forced the majority of students to return to school. This they did with threats to the parents of enforcing the Truancy act with a fine of $200.00 to parents who keep their children out of school.

This is done in order to make the appearance that school is returning to normal with increasing attendance. The fact is that even though there is this increase in attendance, with the tense atmosphere and an average of 60 policemen patrolling the corridors, there is little in the way of formal education being accomplished.

The majority of black students in the Columbia Point project do not attend school, neither do they attend the now voluntary alternative school program. There are however still a few students who at this point are trying to make the program work. They lack all the essentials to operate a school, no teachers, no books and no stationery. They assemble every day with the limited resources they have, the few residents of the community with some limited education help out the best they can, their efforts however are directed to the younger children, but the Juniors and Seniors must help themselves and each other. This they can do in the subjects such as swahili or History, but they have no help in the sciences.

The situation in Boston is by no means near to a close, attendance may be up but school has not yet started.

NO APPRECIATION FOR THE PAST? It would seem so, considering the report of the American Historical Assn. that says undergrad enrollments in history courses have dropped by more than 12 per cent over the last four years.

In addition, the number of undergrads majoring in history has declined more than six per cent since 1970-71.

Decreases were smaller in the New England area (2.68 per cent) and the South (1.09 per cent) than in the rest of the country.

Which proves that Columbus and the Boston Tea Party still live!

'ACADEMIC PROSTITUTION' is being charged by a department chairman at USoFla, according to a page one piece in The Oracle, there.

Albert Gessman of Classics and Ancient Studies says departments are forced to offer "below par" courses by a Board of Regents policy that sets a quota on the number of student credit hours a week and the number of students who are graduated each year.

He also points out that since universities have lost their "ivory tower" status and have stopped being the elite institutions they once were, they have become academic mediocrities.

So, what else is new?

MEANWHILE, APATHY HAS STRUCK at the Columbia campus, according to another page one piece in the Daily Spectator. Seems that a proposed legal aid service program for College students failed to receive the required approval of 25 per cent of the College.

Inflation strikes again.

Health advocates train tomorrow

Spurred by the soaring costs of health care, and the increased dangers they post to the health of needy children, the Western Massachusetts Welfare Coalition has announced a campaign to inform area residents of Federal and State programs which can help people pay their medical bills. The law also requires the State to provide total health care for needy children under 21.

The Coalition will sponsor a training session for persons who want to become health advocates at the Campus Center, Room 165-169 tomorrow from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

The session will cover the eligibility requirements and care under the Medicaid program in Massachusetts. Medicaid offers help to working families with children, and to aged and disabled people who have low incomes and high medical bills. Medicaid also serves people who receive welfare.

It can pay doctor, dentist, clinic and druggist bills for six month periods, or longer, depending on the needs of the family.

The Coalition is focusing on the Total Child Health Care Screening Program known as EPSDT. The program requires complete physical, mental, dental, eye, and hearing exams also blood lead, sickle cell, and TB testing, and all necessary follow up treatment for children ages 0-21. The State is required by Federal law to find doctors to treat all eligible children within 60 days of request.

More information, and assistance can be obtained from Atty. Jim Hammerschmidt, Western Mass. Legal Services, Pleasant St., Northampton, phone 584-4034.

New Armenian student club meets tonight

This fall, the Armenian students at UMass are getting together to form a new club for cultural and social activities. At the moment there is no organized Armenian society, despite the large number of students of Armenian descent at the University and the growing interest in the culture and civilization of Armenians.

This club will provide an opportunity for interested people to learn more about Armenian culture and civilization. There will be various professors and guest lecturers who will be invited to give lectures about the various aspects of Armenian language, literature, history, music and culture in general. In addition to the educational value of this club, various dances, parties, dinner and other events will be planned which will provide a chance for people to meet and get to know one another.

Professor Vartan Artinian, chairman of the Near Eastern Studies Department, has consented to be the advisor for this group.

The first meeting of this new Armenian Club will be tonight at 7 in the Hampden Resource Center at Southwest. All interested people are invited to attend and contribute ideas. Coffee and pakhlava (Armenian pastry) will be served. For more information, contact Carole Azadian at 546-7273.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, October 24 — Born today, you have been gifted with the rare ability to see yourself as others see you. This in combination with your innate sense of humor is enough to keep you from taking either yourself or life itself too seriously. You are ambitious — but you refuse to be overwhelmed should your ambitions be disappointed in any way. You are well aware of the approach of another day and you are quite willing to bide your time until the right moment comes to try again. Should the moment never come, you will be sad — but not disheartened.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You may well be asked to work harder and longer than usual today. Do so with a will—or risk losing out on unexpected advantages.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Another may ask you to take on his responsibilities. Unless you wish to be saddled with them for a very long time, refuse to do so.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You can hardly afford the luxury of working for nothing. At the same time, a bit of charity might be in order at this point. Try it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Fb. 18) — Know your own mind when it comes to choosing activities for the day. Don't be talked into a change of goal without a change of heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — It will not be possible for you to have precisely what you want precisely when you want it. Do yourself a favor; bide your time.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Put no price on friendship. Unless you can do another a favor willingly and with no expectation of reward, you might do better not to bother.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — This is a day for doing almost precisely what you please. At least one of your dreams should come true before the light fades.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Money is not a suitable measure of another's worth, nor of your own. Remember this when you go about the business of choosing a new partner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A day which should bring you the kind of results you've been wishing for—reassurance concerning your own intelligence and attractiveness.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Reject any policy which, if followed, would cause you to act in ways that go against the grain. Conscience is your best guide at the moment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 23) — A day with a very high success potential. Don't disappoint another by failing to appear in the right place and at the right time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Another's criticism of your work must not be taken to indicate that you are unloved or unwanted. Look at life more realistically!

Aquanauts warm up for New Englands

By SPORTS STAFF

It's been a busy week for the UMass Water-polo teams. After qualifying for the New England Championships the men's squad set out on a week of warm up games that upped their record to an impressive 13-3. Coach Bill McCafferty thinks the team is playing better now than it ever has and is drilling them hard in preparation for this weekend's tournament.

Warm up games began last Wednesday night in the Boyden pool where the men made short work of Amherst College and Mt. Hermon Academy, a newcomer to the polo ranks. Then on Thursday it was off to the city for the men and women to tangle with Northeastern.

The women, not playing their usual heads up game, came out on Northeastern is a Division I team. There, water-polo is a varsity sport. UMass is a division II team since they play the sport as a club only. UMass had never beaten Northeastern but they managed to come up with a well earned 14-12 overtime victory.

On Friday, the women were back to their winning ways with their second straight one point win over Wellesley, beating their rivals 7-6.

If you were up early on Saturday you might have caught the men's team taking off to Rensselear for a tournament with Queens, RPI, and Cobbleskill, respectively. They unfortunately yielded to a better team in the first game but responded by blowing RPI out of their own pool followed by Cobbleskill in the finale.

Amherst College to host UMass women's cross-country meet

By SPORTS STAFF

Why would Amherst College, an all male school host a women's cross-country meet? UMass teeming with 13,000 women has never considered the idea. Charlotte Lettis of UMass who was later to win the meet held Saturday on the fields and woods of Amherst College wondered about that same question. She wondered, "Is it a joke?" Why should this bastion non-coed education reach out and offer an invitational cross-country meet for women when they won't take women as students? Things were much different for Charlotte and other women runners several years ago when they were threatened and thrown out of open meets at Amherst.

As it turned out, and it turned out well, the innovators are Amherst men and cross-country runners who are sincere and direct. They conducted an orderly and serious athletic contest for women. Things have changed.

Twenty women responded to the invitations sent to Smith, Mt. Holyoke and the Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. which has been promoting women's running in the area for the past 3 years and is the active R.S.O. representative of women runners at UMass. Charlotte won the 3 mile race easily with UMass grad Merry Cushing second, Alda Cossi third.

The way they finished is important but not the real story here. You see it wasn't always this way. As Charlotte coasted to an easy finish amid the congratulations of the Amherst cross-country team and coach, she must have remembered the time a different coach banned her from competing in an open mile race because she was a woman.

Travelling to West Point, set in the beautiful area of the Hudson River valley, is an experience in itself. Returning with a victory makes it even better.

So this is exactly what the junior varsity football team did Friday afternoon, in a game which had been scheduled only two days earlier. The final score read Minutemen 28, Cadets 21, but the score only gave an indication that the game was a lot closer than it really was.

Overall, UMass had a total rushing yardage of over 400 yards, a "conservative" estimate at that. Finding the ground game wide open, the pass was used only twelve times.

"We just outspirited them" as Coach Bill Maxwell put it.

The Minutemen started quick, with fullback Steve Jacobs, who ran for over 200 yards in the game, scoring in the opening minutes from twelve yards out.

They didn't let up there either. Steve Cirella, a fullback, carried over for one score, and later in the first half, running back Bob Zawada snared a 20 yard pass from qb Joe Harrington, who split duties with John Czerapowicz.

The game was set out of reach for West Point by then, but they added two touchdowns late in the game to make it look close.

Booters hunt Tufts Jumbos

by BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

The UMass Soccer Minutemen travel to Medford today to take the Jumbos of Tufts University in a tough (no pun) non-conference battle.

Last year when these two teams met what transpired was what Coach Al Rufe termed "one of the best UMass games of the year, certainly one of our closest."

In that game, played at UMass, the Minutemen eked out a slim 1-0 victory in a low scoring, tight checking contest.

Coach Rufe also said that, "There are three things that we must worry about against this team. First of all we've got to realize that they are a good, solid squad with a fine 6-2 record to show for it. Secondly, we have to take into consideration the size of the Tufts playing field because it is a much smaller one than the fields we are used to playing on. This will hurt our short passing game by bunching up the play more than usual. It also promotes a kick and run type of game that is not our style of play. Thirdly, we have to avoid completely looking past this game and to our big Yankee Conference game on Saturday versus UConn."

Tufts is coming off a big 1-0 victory over Weslyan at Weslyan earlier this week. The Minutemen are also coming off a victory a week ago at Rhode Island where they just edged out the Rams 2-1 in the closing minutes of play. The team did not play well in that game but still managed to come out victorious because the breaks were really on their side.

High-scoring UMass forward Tom Coburn is a doubtful starter for this game. He will dress for the contest but Coach Rufe said he hopes that he will not have to use Coburn much so that he can rest him for the UConn game and not risk any further injury. Tom bruised his left knee in a hard collision with the Rhode Island goaltender near the end of last Friday's victory.

Senior co-captain Carl Vercollone will be starting in goal once again after looking impressive in his first start of the season against Rhode Island. The Rams kept the pressure on quite often in the game but only scored once largely due to the efforts of Vercollone and his fine fullback corps.

Team scoring leader Tom Coburn moves the ball downfield with two Boston University defenders and UMass fullback Dean Lungu in pursuit. The Minutemen may be without the services of Coburn today against Tufts but it is expected he will be ready to play against UConn on Saturday. That game will put the Yankee Conference title on the line when the Huskies and the Minutemen go at it at 11 a.m.

Linebacker
57 - Kiernan

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Sports Staff

Dennis Kiernan, is the 210 pound, six foot-two inch, all Yankee Conference, left-side linebacker in the Minutemen's 3-4 defense. The Collegian had the opportunity of interviewing the Massachusetts co-captain, and this is the way he looks at such events at the UConn game, Homecoming, and the season thus far.

Collegian: Do you have any added responsibilities now that co-captain, Ed McAleney, is out of action?

Kiernan: Ed is still with the team even if he's not on the field. Besides, being a captain isn't much of a responsibility; the guys here know what they have to do — they can take care of themselves. Sure, I like being a captain; you can talk to the officials and lead the team out onto the field. I like being part of the game.

Collegian: Will the big crowd at Alumni Stadium make any difference in the UConn match?

Kiernan: It doesn't mean that much when you're on the field, but standing on the sidelines and seeing all those people in the stands, I think to myself, "We have to win this ballgame."

Collegian: What do you think of the offense's inability to score when close to the goal-line?

Kiernan: If the offense can eat up about nine minutes of the clock, then even if they have to give the ball up on the ten yard line, they've given the defense a rest and our opponents bad field position.

Collegian: How would you rate the season thus far?

Kiernan: I think the team has done a good job. This is the best defensive outfit I've been associated with. We give up a lot of yardage, but not many points; last year we gave up a lot of yardage and a lot of points.

Collegian: What about UConn?

Kiernan: This is the biggest game of my career — bigger than either the Boston College game or the Boardwalk Bowl. You reach inside for a little something extra in a game like this. This is my senior year; the end of the line. I never knew how much the Beanpot meant until we lost it last year...and now we have the chance to get it back from the same people who took it away from us.

Collegian: What was the best moment of your career in a UMass uniform?

Kiernan: That's a tough one...I'd say my best moment was just being a part of the team that beat Boston College, but all that could change if we beat Connecticut this week....

Rally falls short as C's nipped, 108-107

BOSTON [UPI] - The Cleveland Cavaliers, led by Austin Carr's 28 points, dominated the Boston Celtics in the first half Wednesday night then held off a furious last-minute Celtic charge for a 108-107 win.

The Cavaliers, leading 108-103 with two minutes remaining, saw their lead shrink on a three-point play by Don Chaney and two free throws by Jo Jo White, but took their first victory of the year when a last-second, 30-foot jumper by John Havlicek hit the back rim and fell off. The Celtics had gotten the ball back with six seconds left when Havlicek stole it from Cleveland's Bob Smith.

It was the first win against three losses for the Cavs and only their sixth in 24 tries against the defending NBA champion Celtics since Cleveland entered the NBA in 1970.

Cleveland saw its 54-41 halftime margin evaporate to 66-65 with three minutes remaining in the third quarter, before baskets by Dwight Davis, Jim Cleamons and two by Carr gave it a 77-71 lead at the end of the third quarter.

From there, Carr, a former Notre Dame star, took over, scoring nine straight points as Cleveland built its lead back to double figures before the final Celtic onslaught.

Bobbie Smith, who finished with 19 points, was the whole show for Cleveland in the first half.

Bruins tie Pens, 5-5

PITTSBURGH [UPI] - Carol Vadnais chipped in Bobby Schmautz' shot with 32 seconds left and the Boston goaltender off the ice to give the Bruins a 5-5 tie with the Pittsburgh Penguins Wednesday night in a National Hockey League game.

Boston's Bobby Orr scored his first goals of the season and started the play that scored the fourth goal.

The Penguins seemed to have the game in hand when Ron Stackhouse and Bob Kelly scored goals within 14 seconds to break a 3-3 tie midway through the third period.

Williams to A's

CHICAGO [UPI] - The Chicago Cubs Wednesday night traded Billy Williams, their home run slugging leftfielder for the last 14 years, to the Oakland A's in exchange for two relief pitchers and second baseman Manny Trillo.

It was the second major deal in 24 hours for the world champion A's. Earlier Wednesday, they sent outfielder Dan Ford and pitcher Dennis Myers to the Minnesota Twins for first baseman Pat Bourque, a member of the A's at the start of last season.

In addition to Trillo, 23, the Cubs got relief pitchers Darold Knowles, 23, a left-hander, and Bob Locker, a right hander who spent 1972 with Chicago.

Quick shots

This Saturday's Soccer contest between our Minutemen and the University of Connecticut is for all or most of the beans in that famed Beanpot.

Dare I say this one at 11 a.m. will be bigger than the happenings over at Alumni Stadium later on in the day?

Regardless it is a "big one" as they say.

Who knows that the UConn soccer squad is rated 10th in the nation in major college standings?

If the stadium will have its audience doubled over the turn-outs of previous weeks (which it should) then the lower fields at Boyden should have their audience do the same when the whistle starts play of what will be the biggest soccer game to hit this campus in sometime.

Who knows that our own soccer Minutemen are rated 4th in the major college standings in New England?

Bad guys UConn are rated 2nd in these standings.

Quote notes — Senior co-cap. Carl "Vercy" Vercollone: "It was very frustrating watching the team play and not being able to contribute. But I was very glad that they were winning and it was very good to get back. I feel as if I'm ready."

Vercy sure seemed ready as he played tight goal against URI last week. He gets the call against Tufts today in what could prove to be a very interesting prelude to the UConn match on Saturday.

Tufts has been very "tough" the past three years with UMass having a 1-2 record against them.

The Soccer squad's record is a strong 6-1. The one loss coming at the hands (feet?) of a fine Keene State club that incidentally the Minutemen are now rated ahead of in New England.

"The Yankee Conference title is our first goal," Coach Al Rufe said earlier in the year.

Goal number one will be pursued in its entirety this weekend.

Quote note — Other co-cap. Jimmy Vollinger: "We've been fortunate that the breaks have been with us most of the year. With a lot of very different ball-players it is hard to work as a unit but we are doing as well as can be expected."

Jimmy has been doing as well as expected as he has led a halfback group that has started to come together well.

Everyone will have to be "together well" for all of the games for the rest of the season as none of them are pushover teams.

I repeat none, starting with today against the Jumbos of tiny T.U.

Soccer is a game of breaks. Stats do not tell the story. What wisdom?

Who said that anyway?

Because they are playing on a smaller field today at Tufts does that mean that the team that wins will get a smaller victory?

No, no, the team that loses gets a smaller loss.

Who said THAT anyway?

Quote note — Junior sweeper fullback "Danny O." Ouellette: "The 4th in New England rating has really got us psyched. Now we've got to prove ourselves. We've got to go into our games relaxes and just play our type of soccer. The only way we'll blow it is if we beat ourselves."

Danny O. hasn't blown it as he has led a very strong contingent of fullbacks that have been the backbone of the Minutemen's play thus far this season.

Can the weather please be nice this weekend?

Who SAID THAT anyway?

See you Saturday. Bring a fork. You may get to eat some of those beans.

Contrasts of Sound and Surroundings

Momentary Melting of Stone

In Concert:
Stevie Wonder
Boston Garden
October 19
by Reid Fishman

A dog barked and a siren sounded as a fire truck made its way down the street through the crowds of people pouring out of the catacombs of the Boston Garden. Patrolmen stared as the participants emerged, peaceful but tense, to walk along the harsh streets of crisis. The city that was once known as the haven of democracy, the hub of academia, the Athens of America, was experiencing perhaps its greatest challenge, and it was everpresent in the minds of all as they left the performance.

It might not have been there to begin with. There were many who just went to the concert to see and hear on of the greatest talents in rock music history, and most were waiting for that moment when Stevie Wonder would appear on stage and send those Wonder vibes flying across the hall.

The lights went out as Wonder Love finished their introduction, and a melodic charming voice floated through the applause in the cognizant form of "Bird of Beauty". Stevie was onstage, rocking and singing as he's done since childhood — since the days of "Fingertips" and "Shoo-be-doo-be-doo-be-doo-da-day". But that was all before Music of My Mind and Talking Book, and more importantly, that was before Inner Visions, which broke Stevie Wonder open, to his greatest degree, in the musical minds of the American public.

Stevie continued to live up to himself, a trace of togetherness began to circulate among the balanced aggregation. He finished his fourth song and paused uneasily, before asking his audience to allow him a few silent moments to make his peace. He spoke of the need for recognition of different cultures and understanding of those cultural differences within a society, and he asked for two children, one White and one Black, to stand by him on stage.

Within a few minutes, five children were gathered in a half-circle behind him, and Stevie asked the crowd to applaud his companions. As the chamber quieted, he talked about a song that means a great deal to him. He asked the members of the audience to reach out and hold the hands of those on either side, and he began, "People holding hands?... Have I lived to see the milk and honey land, where hate's a dream and love forever stands, or is this a vision in my mind?..."

During the applause that followed, the announcer of the program walked up to the microphone at the right of the stage. He waited for the noise to lower, and commenced to praise his guest and the importance of the performer's music to the city of Boston.

Rock Ornately Unobscured

In Concert:
Bonnie Raitt
Sanderson Theatre
October 18
by Tyla L. Michelove

Friday night was the opening of the Sanderson Theatre as Springfield's answer to the growing need to find an adequate place to hold rock concerts. The hall itself is ancient, complete with all the trimmings found in old buildings. It is ornately designed with columns, gold paint, interesting ceilings, doorways that require a second glance and almost more than the eyes can absorb in one visit. On top of all this, the building has what can only be described as character (the water spots not refinished, the carpet patches that clash with the existing carpet, the broken antique switchboard in the second floor lobby, the massive light in the entrance, and the faded mirrors). At first the contrast of having a modern, jeaned crowd come into a place like this to see a rock concert seems absurd, but once in the hall itself one realizes that the acoustics are great and that there are no bad seats, no obscured views. It has the promise of being one of the best places to see a concert in the area.

According to Freebo, Bonnie Raitt's bass player, the Sanderson is the fifth hall they have opened in this tour alone. Looking at Bonnie as she started "Rainy Day Man", a James Taylor tune, one would believe that opening halls was a tough business. She appeared ghostly pale under blue lights and the song was slow, differing little from her album version. The vocals improved through "Under The Falling Sky" and "Love Me Like A Man", but both guitars, Bonnie and the guitarist from Silverfish (her backup group), were playing the exact same thing. It seemed like a waste. When she got to the Paul Siebel song, she and the band reached a high. The band was tight and both Bonnie and Freebo's vocals were well done. This high lasted through "Kokomo Blues" and Mose Allison's "Everybody's Cryin' Mercy". Everything fell apart for her original from the Give it Up album only to get better for the Wilson Pickett tune. Freebo's backup vocals seemed to add tremendously to the song and to Bonnie's performance. Suddenly the other guitar player took off on his own for this one and "Feel the Same". He was worth waiting for.

"Big Lonesome Road" was marked by excellent solos on the parts of the drummer and Freebo (one of the best I've ever heard, fast and smooth).

This concert rode on this high until "Make Me Do..." when Bonnie's voice became a little hoarse (perhaps last year's problems haven't quite cleared up) and the piano player started getting into old boogie cliches that added nothing to the song. Then Bonnie put down her guitar. "Been in Love Too Long" was like a little girl at a party. The usually raucous Springfield audience didn't matter any more, her

Marilyn Chambers: A piece of the pie

by Marian Prokop

Q: What kind of men appeal to you? I mean besides Chuck.

MC: Dominant men. Women's Lib, I mean, just doesn't like me at all. You know, really, like I've tried in my life before to be a very independent person and, it doesn't work, for me. And I realize that I can function better being totally dependent upon a man and if I didn't depend on men, the choreographer, the music director, Chuck, they're all men, then I wouldn't be where I am.

Q: Did you happen to see "Sweet Eros"? Do you know the controversy over it?

MC: Was that with two people, and they simulated sex?

Q: What's you're opinion about it?

MC: I think it's ridiculous.

Q: What do you think constitutes obscenity?

MC: Well I don't know because I don't believe in censorship, so I really can't say what's obscene. I think if you're going to do it, you might as well do it. If you're going to be busted, you might as well be busted for the real thing.

Q: Do you think then that your status in pornography may be hurting your singing career?

C.T.: Well, I think it may hinder it a bit but, well, Marilyn has two record contracts, one with United Artists that we're probably going to sign and one with Warner... and then 90 per cent of the criticism Marilyn got in New York was all good... Some called her culmination of Ann Margaret and Juliet Prowse, just needs a little more time to stage the thing, and you know I think that's important, it's pretty hard nowadays, you know, it's so competitive that you know you're bumpin' heads, and Marily doesn't try to pass herself off as a singer or a dancer, but as an entertainer.

MC: Yeah, like in Vegas you can really get into some neat things. I was into gymnastics and diving when I was in high school. I competed all through high school, and so like in Vegas we can do neat things like back flips and back hand springs on the stage, and it just makes it a lot more exciting, there are a lot more dancers so that we have a Vegas type show, but I don't know if you've ever seen a show like that. Another thing that I thought interesting, I don't know if you've looked around, but you are a woman yourself, the women in the audience, the reaction I get from them, in the beginning it's usually bleh, like totally turned off, especially when they're with a man, they usually don't like me at all. But then, halfway in the thing, they start smiling, they start getting into it, and they change their attitude. And so, like that makes it all worth it, like when a chick will smile at you, and you can see she digs it.

Q: What kind of background do you have, Chuck?

C.T.: Well, I'm from Florida, I was a commercial pilot for Delta Airlines for five years, then I flew for IBS. My major at the University of Miami was cinematography and I worked with Ivan Tors on the Flipper series, and Gentle Ben series. I started out as a cameraman, then to production manager and lay-out supervisor when I finally left, and on the side I start doing my own X jobs and it was a very lucrative business and it kept growing and I got involved with "Deep Throat", "Deep Throat II". "Inga," a film I did with Joe Solsman was one of the first soft X films to make a million dollars. The management thing just sort of lunged up with Marilyn, you know, the ability, to eject into her what I think the audience wants to see. You know the image today, is what management is all about. You see we want within a year to elevate her name. In Hollywood, a name is gauged by box office draw and you know we had Newsweek, Playboy, and Esquire all in one month, and then we got Penthouse and Zoo magazine two European magazines plus the Sunday London Times, and then this DiLaurentis film and the records, we figure in 12 months Marilyn's worth about six million in box office, which is really what the business is about. I don't like to talk about Marilyn like she's a piece of pie, but it's a business, and the business is where it's at. Right now her box office is about four million, but we figure with the DiLaurentis film completed, it should be around six. That's the way it works, that's a projected figure of Marilyn's name on a marquis, what the film would gross, if it was distributed properly, that's pretty much how it works.

Problems and responsibilities of life she leaves to her manager, Chuck Traynor, whom she has permitted herself to become completely dependent on, and who is also aware of her growing success as a box office attraction as he was previously aware of the potential draw of his former sex star, Linda Lovelace, who doesn't seem to be around much anymore. For Marilyn's sake, let's hope the Chambers-Traynor partnership has a longer run.

Sokol Steeped in Shit?

Dear David Sokol,

Concerning your review of Late For The Sky — you stepped one foot in shit by saying Jackson Browne's song-writing skills "never went beyond the average", then immediately plunged the second by putting down Sky — if it suffers it's only by comparison to its predecessor, For Everyman, considered by many as the most complete album of 1973.

You sunk to your waist as you accused Browne of "stagnancy", and then disappeared altogether with the assertion that Sky was second rate stuff in light of Roger McGuinn and Jesse Winchester's new releases. I realize you can't please everyone, but this instance of perceptual paralysis, published as it was, is unforgivable. Enjoy your bath, David, you richly deserve it.

Respectfully yours,
—Jack Flynn,
Sunderland, Mass.

Jack—

With the tremendous number of records being released weekly, it's vital to be objective, especially with the work of established artists. Even working within his limited framework, Jackson Browne is too talented and has done too much in the past to stagnate, and musically, that's what's happening on Late For the Sky. If you read more carefully, you'll find that I never said that Jackson's writing skills "never went beyond the average."

If you get a chance, listen to the others discs I mentioned and to more ambitious and innovative forms of music and then judge for yourself. Also Jack, I don't try to please anyone.

Rally For Puerto Rico

BICENTENNIAL WITHOUT COLONIES: P.R.
by Miguel Rivera

George Washington's army was never of a great number, but they had a reason to fight freedom from an imperialist country, England. Among the Thirteen Colonies, two-thirds did not want to free themselves from the metropolitan power. The truth is that few knew why they should fight for such an abstract idea as freedom.

Those who knew what to be free meant had no words to tell the simple people, the workers, what it amounts to. A group of men dared to threaten the strongest military and economic power of the time. It would not be a mistake to say that seven hundred men made independence possible for today's United States of America.

Today it is Puerto Rico, the same story, the same struggle. Next Sunday, October 27, another battle will be fought for independence. Paradoxically speaking, the same country that gloriously once fought for its independence, today oppresses a people who fight for freedom, the same freedom they fought for back in the eighteenth century.

The United States of America is to Puerto Rico what the British Imperialists were to the Thirteen Colonies. No one in the world would negate Puerto Rico's right to its freedom. Will we be able to obtain it from Washington's offices?

In 1868, Puerto Rico rebelled against Spain; thus beginning a tradition for revolutionary responses when the peaceful methods work no longer. The metropolitan violence drives the people to realize the importance of an effective defense. It is the task of the people to select the method. The U.S.A. has the word.

The United States of America has been illegally occupying Puerto Rico since 1898. Having lost the abusive "Hispano-american" War, Spain gave Puerto Rico to the U.S.A. through the Paris Treatise. Spain had no right to give Puerto Rico away, nor had the U.S.A. any right to accept it.

No elections, no plebiscite is valid if it is to maintain a colonial status. The United Nations acknowledged Puerto Rico's independence struggle when the Decolonization Committee of the U.N. decided to apply the 1514 Resolution to Puerto Rico. But the U.S.A. is doing its best to counteract that decision.

At the present moment, the Washington hierarchy holds more than fifty of the most important powers of the Puerto Rican people. Eighty-five percent of the economy is controlled by the United States Capitalist enterprises. Puerto Rico can not buy from any country unless it is through the United States of America. The most important decisions to be obeyed by Puerto Ricans are made behind the Watergate curtains of Washington.

The Multinational Empire of the American inversionist want to make of Puerto Rico, once the enchanted island...now the polluted paradise, a gigantic oil tank; a superport.

The Puerto Rican students of this university appeal not only to our intellectual community but also to all the people of the United States, to back us in this crucial moment of our history. Let us all get together at the Madison Square Garden because this is OUR struggle against oppression, in general, and for the independence of Puerto Rico in particular.

Japanese Music — pt. 3

THE KOTO
Third in a series of articles on Japanese music, musicians and instruments.

If you were to ask people in this area to describe the sounds of Japanese music, they may have heard, they would probably describe the sound of the koto, a large, stringed instrument with moveable bridges.

Like the biwa which we discussed last week, the koto came into Japan from China, another of many influences from China which Japan adapted into her own culture. In China there were two varieties of koto, both a bridged and an unbridged model. It was the bridged koto that became adapted into Japanese culture.

The styles of koto playing as we know them today developed out of a court tradition and gradually gained popularity as a solo instrument in the homes of middle and upper-class Japanese families. In present-day Japan the koto has a position similar to the piano in a Western home. Ability to play the koto is considered one of the assets in preparing the Japanese woman for marriage.

The koto was supposedly brought into Japan sometime in the ninth century, but the early styles of playing have died out. The styles now played developed during the Edo period of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. During the seventeenth century the koto was introduced into use as an accompaniment for dance and in special ensembles. At the end of this century, a teacher by the name of Ikuta Kengyo founded a new style of music based primarily on shamisen forms, which will be discussed in a future article. In the past few centuries the koto has developed into an instrument with several diversified uses.

The koto used in Japan today is made from two pieces of paulownia wood, one being the top, which is hollowed out for the sound box, and the other being a plank to make up the bottom of the instrument. The two ends of the instrument are open to serve the dual purpose of sound holes and ease of stringing the instrument. The wood for the koto must be cut from the tree at a certain angle to give it the proper sound, and special patterns, ayasugi, are carved inside of the instrument to improve its tone.

The present-day koto has thirteen silk strings with moveable bridges of wood, ivory or plastic under each string. By moving these bridges, any thirteen-note scale can be played. Other pitches can be obtained by pressing down on the strings with the left hand, thus stretching the strings to produce the whole or half-steps needed for the piece being played. This is a well-known and much-used technique in koto-playing.

The strings are plucked with picks, usually ivory, attached to threehfingers of the right hand.

In more modern works the use of harmonics is incorporated into the music, similar to Western harp music.

The koto is the instrument that has been most accepted by Western listeners, partly because, being primarily a solo instrument, it has a softer, more pleasing sound to the Western ear trained in the Western classical forms.

Since the 1930's a seventeen-stringed koto has been in frequent use in Japan. This koto was the invention of the late Miyagi Michio, who used it in his compositions. He was, until his death in 1957, one of the few artists able to compose works for the koto as part of the new music in Japan today. Note: This Sunday night, and every Sunday night, from 7-10 p.m., we will be presenting a program of music from Japan on WMUA. Also, on Saturday, December 7, 1974, master Japanese musicians presently in this country will be giving a concert in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m.

Wonderlove vision vs. reality

Then, in true 1943 Christmas cinema style, the announcer proceeded to introduce a spokesman form the office of the illustrious Kevin White, mayor of Boston. The audience groaned as a Blackman in a grey flannel suit walked out onto stage, carrying an official looking something under his left arm. He thanked Stevie wonder for bringing "peace and love" to the city of Boston at such a critical time, and he told Stevie and his spectators that Mayor White had proclaimed October 19 to be "Stevie Wonder Day."

A stunned crowd sounded their uncertain approval of the political compliment, and after waiting again for the mood to settle, the mayor's representative continued, announcing that "any door in Boston is open to Stevie Wonder", and presenting him with some sort of seal, commemorating the event that such a concert had taken place at such a time. The children led Stevie to where the mayor's representative was standing. Stevie thanked the mayor for the honor saying, "Gee, I never thought there'd be a 'Stevie Wonder Day' in Boston." He said, he wanted the seal to remain somewhere in Boston, perhaps in a school somewhere.

"You know," said Stevie, "it's not hard to love, but it takes so much energy to hate." He then asked to be helped to the piano and the children provided the escort while Stevie thanked Boston for "making a dream come true", and began to bounce around to the tune of "Boogie on Reggae Woman".

Somewhere to the right of the stage in the Garden, I sat and watched, feeling myself involved with everything that was going on in the fantastic mind of the blind man at the front. I wondered how any person could be so emotionally brilliant, and about the amazing years that led to the development of such a musical genius. But my dreams were interrupted by the smell of mace and the pushing and shoving around me, and I stared to my left as four men were in the process of kicking another man in the head.

The guilty bystander of an abrupt crime, I watched quietly as the beaten man, bleeding, stumbled out of the auditorium. I couldn't help but flash to all that Stevie has written about love and freedom, about hope and dreams, about hatred and superstition.

There he was, singing about it all as only Stevie Wonder can do, while the four men continued their violent ways, surrounding a man and hoisting him over the rail into another section. Minutes later, two officers arrived and the four men slithered into the crowd, but the violence which had occurred only yards away had taken its toll on my evening.

I was scared, and the fact that all this had happened made it seem necessary to keep an eye on my surroundings. Consequently, the remainder of the concert seemed much less significant than had that momentary peak during "Visions." The paradoxical circumstance that someone as perfect as Stevie Wonder was performing live while others were allowing hatred to dominate their actions was too much of a shock to be overcome during the course of the night.

It seemed that those four ignorant men were using Stevie to their own purpose, just as Kevin White had only moments before. It was all contrived to us the words of a great man in a manner he'd never intended. The folks in my section spent a good part of the rest of the performance looking around them in paranoid glances.

Stevie played a number of oldies and went into such classics as "You and I" and "Superstition", and the concert was a musical and emotional success in all but a little section to the right of the stage, where fear had briefly gained control earlier in the performance. Incidents were few around the hall, and there was no argument that Stevie had played as brilliantly as had been anticipated.

As the audience streamed out onto the streets of Boston, the tension was evident on the stone faces of the city's visitors and inhabitants, and groups of people scurried to their methods of transportation. There was no way I could chase what had happened out of my mind, and as I walked with my friends back to the garage in which we had parked, my thoughts drifted to an earlier moment and a beautiful voice singing painfully, dreamingly,"But, Boston, what I'd like to know is, 'Could a place like this exist, so beautiful or do we have to take our wings and fly away into the visions in our minds?"

Throughout the week preceding the concert there had been numerous rumors of its cancellation. Marvin Gaye had been cancelled a few weeks earlier and what was happening in Boston seemed to warrant the same for Stevie.

But the man came. And he came with love and peace, and new and old music for all to hear and share as one. Mr. Wonder did most of his songs that everyone wanted to hear from his three most recent albums, Fulfillingness' First Finale, Innervisions, and Talking Book. He also reached back into his and our past and to times when Boston was probably better off when he did a medley of tunes that gained him much of his early fame.

Stevie came to play and to pacify. After three songs into the concert he asked for everyone's attention and silence. He then called on Black and White young children to come up onto the stage to share with him what he wanted to share with everyone. He spoke candidly about our children and what we must do to make this world have peace and love for all. Then after requesting that the crowd hold hands and the kids on stage help him sing his next song, he broke into "Visions", a song about the way he hopes the world may someday be from his Innervisions album.

This prince of peace and love said things that needed to be said and he said them well.

Raitt under the blue light

.... voice didn't matter any more, all that mattered was the song that she was obviously enjoying. It was probably the best song she did all night.

The encores were "Guilty" (She is not Randy Newman), and Aretha's "If You Want My Lovin' " which was for the guy who threw her the roses. Finally with the same blue light, she looked like a flaming blue torch, full of life, leaving us with "Love Has No Pride". Although this concert had more than its share of ups and downs, I was impressed with the quality of Bonnie Raitt's performance. The problems with the last album were apparently in the arrangements, because Bonnie proved in this concert that she is growing and moving within her own field. All that is needed is more of her own music.

Wine Chariot: Not a Vintage Year

WINE CHARIOT RESTAURANT REVIEW

by Lori Leiderman

Dining out is always an experience, but when you feel like you're participating in the Theater of the Absurd, it becomes an experience that you'd like to forget. This is the story of ten hungry people who made the mistake of dining at the Wine Chariot, on Route 9 in Hadley, on the wrong Saturday night.

We were seated promptly at 8 p.m. Twenty hungry eyes devoured a menu with entrees ranging from three to seven dollars. Our orders were taken quickly, and we relaxed, elbows on red and white checked plastic tablecloths in anticipation of things to come.

After being served cold loaves of bread and "salads" (actually cut lettuce, cores and all, smothered in bottled-type dressing), we settled down to wait for Godot. When topics of conversation ran out along with our patience, the decor became more and more noticeable. Chintzy travel posters, plastic fruit and wire-hung wine bottles provided no relief to our frustration — it was now 9:00.

It was about this time that we began to get petty, noticing that other tables were now being served a tomato with their salad. It sounds incredible, but we called the waiter over to ask about the problem. He tried his hardest to placate us, telling us that the wait was due to the $4.25 lobster special that none of us had ordered. He said that sometimes the tomato cutter got behind and if we wanted a plate of tomatoes, he would bring them — that petty we weren't.

At 9:15 our entrees arrived, and we must have looked like expectant children opening presents on Christmas morning. All of the entrees were luke-warm and some of them turned out to be the proverbial cinders in our stockings.

At $5, the Baked Stuffed Scallops were dry and overdone. The four Baked Stuffed Shrimp looked as unhappy to be there as we were. Chicken Cacciatore ($4) turned out to be the best bet with an ample portion laced with wine. Canelloni at $3 was good, but the portion was small. Filet Allitaliano ($6), looked and tasted as though it had just come over on the boat, consisting of a piece of fairly tender beef encrusted in mozzarella cheese and a nondescript glimmer of eggplant (cardboard?). Spaghetti or potatoes were served with each entree — nothing spectacular, especially the portion size.

Sometimes you just hit a restaurant on the wrong night. Believe it or not, we were told that two of the cooks had gone back to Italy that morning. Other people that I have talked to said that on previous visits, the wait wasn't long. But, as a whole, the food was overpriced and lacking in eye and taste appeal, the fish dishes being butchered the most by an overzealous oven.

We felt sorry for the waiter, who was being summoned to other tables by the sound of spoons banging on water glasses. The fault is largely due to poor management. We should not have been seated until we could be served properly.

One more thing, don't go to the Wine Chariot if you want separate checks — or in our case, one separate check. One of our group wanted to pay by credit card, but the management will only give one bill to a table. Our waiter was so intimidated by the policy, that he offered to loan the person the money, himself, so as not to confront the boss with this breach in procedure.

If you should decide to go to the Wine Chariot, wait until the replacement chef arrives. Make sure it's not a busy evening or try phoning your orders in a day ahead of time. Come with good company and small eaters, and keep your fingers crossed that the management has gotten it all together.

Jim Beatmen's Art & Technology

S. U. Gallery — October 21

by A. Hamburger

Jim Beatman, a first year M.F.A. student, set up a visual sculptural situation questioning the nature of art and technology. Four tape playing machines were located on pedestals in a manner indicative of traditional sculpture. These machines played previously recorded readings of published articles on art and technology as well as sounds of a toilet flushing, the traffic in front of his house, and clanging pipes. The most important visual element of the work was the magnetic tape flowing from the floor through the machine and pilling back onto the floor. In creating this visual format, Beatman stated that he was "presenting the machines with a nearly impossible task." Occasionally the machines jammed, but for the most part, ran without problems. The works main element and consideration was the contrast between the visual flow of the magnetic tape versus the task of the machine. The sound was primarily used as a reminder of the tape's function and the question at hand. Beatman was not making any clear value judgments on the nature of art and technology. His non-commitment creates confusion for the viewer developing from the contrast between the machine as a technological object as compared to the appealing visual elements of the flow of the tape upon the floor.

Roots & Ruts

Mo' Roots — Taj Mahal, Columbia KC 33501, Time: 33:35

This one's made in heaven. Let's take a look at an ad for this, which is unusually helpful in understanding Taj's new turns and let's look at the words: New Orleans, Scotland, Jamaica. Vastly varied? Taj just likes music. And to this end, Taj has a great new band, with electric guitar, bass, congas, trap drums, assorted percussion, sax, flute, a bit of keyboards and background vocals in addition to Taj's myriad of instruments.

Reggae has never sounded better, with Taj bringing a deep Southern Blues feel to this business while keeping enough Jamacian lilt to his voice to get that flowing feel the best reggae has. His version of "Johnny Too Bad", originally done by The Slickers in The Harder They Come is the album's zenith, with perfect understated production, arrangement and an especially scant, just-enough vocal by Taj.

Mo' Roots shimmers with deep root American musical beneath everything. I know there are those who dislike American music, but this is good enough to turn even such unfeeling souls around. What was the last album you knew that had lyrics in three languages on it? "Why Did You Have To Desert Me?" is a stone flyer, with haunting backup vocals and dynamics that provide an unending fine time line. "Cajun Waltz" is an old New Orleans waltz standard into which Taj brings the sweetness of soul and comes up with a lilting soulful dignity. "Desperate Lover" and "Slave Driver" are two other excellent reggae send-ups, and "Clara (St. Kitts Woman)" is a great blend of his natural horseness and a big calypso voice authentic enough to sound like it was recorded on the docks at Kingston.

Taj has been through a number of musical changes, and this is as good as any of those, and Mo' Roots is the solidest thing he's done since Happy Just To Be Like I Am. If you want to see what effect reggae will have on music, skip J.Geils, Paul Simon and Cat Stevens and check out the real makers like Taj.

Amherst College Cage

This one never had a chance. The real fans who came early (6:30) got to wait in the cold over an hour as Taj arrived late for his sound check. Once inside, they began the evening long choking dust-raising (the Cage has a dirt floor, and the Amherst College fellows forgot to water it down beforehand). Since the stage was five feet high, a certain portion of the crowd disdained sitting WAYBACK (100 feet), and sat right up in front, and since you can't see the stage from so close, they got up at the first excuse. Of course the people behind them couldn't see, they got up, etc., until the crowd of 1800 or so was on its feet for three hours. Which did more to kick up the dust than anything else. Thanks, dips.

Above the squirming masses loomed the looping roof to the Cage. While it didn't impair comic Ron "sunshine dispenser" Douglas from delivering his Normal high school — young guy funnies, it did swallow up almost all that is good about Taj — the subltles, the nuances, his ranges of feeling that make him so fine. It's his ability to get a crowd to appreciate a whisper as well as a shout that is perhaps his greatest gift. Add to all this his five-piece band that was obviously New, and the fact that he mistook our standing up for "wanting to release", what else could the man do but play 'jumpers' all night? It says the most about the evening when Taj got the crowd to sing along with him: "Yea yea, I'm in love again".

"Yeah yeah, I'm in love again" sang the people. We missed more than we know.

Did you get my donut?

IT'S ONLY ROCK 'N ROLL — THE ROLLING STONES (Rolling Stones Records COC 79101) time: 48:01

What are the Stones doing?! They chuck the brass, bring in Mick Taylor to replace Merry Clayton et al, and turn their backs on the blues. And what do we get? Only rock 'n roll. What for?! Since they entitled the album correctly, we assume they know it's limited. And that is the great disappointment. It is even more of a letdown because they really needed something much better after Goats Head Soup. It is further a bummer because, not only is it not a progression, but it is a digression. If the Stones can't maintain their integrity and are sucked in by the nostalgia thing, then I have to say goodbye. Who wants yesterday's papers?

Here are the gory details:

1) "If you can't rock me:" Definitely a good rocker with lyrics that stay with it. 2) "Ain't too proud to beg": Remake of an old rocker. Done well. 3) "It's only Rock 'n Roll": If Mick and Keith could have come up with a more profound chorus, and given it to us less often (the final chorus goes on for a minute with no hint of a "Goin' Home" type improv from Jagger), this tune could have been a tight rocker. 4) "Till the next goodbye": One of the few slower tunes on the album. But luckily, it's got enough of a beat to keep us from falling asleep to the droning of the same lyrics. 5) "Time waits for no one": The basic makeup of this song is A, B, chorus (repeat many times). If you can make it through the first 3 minutes you won't find anything different, but you'll be treated to some extended guitar work backed by the unmistakable Mr. Hopkins' building piano. 6) "Luxury": Sounds like it was recorded in a beer hall. Bill Wyman plays his two chords well. 7) "Dance little sister": Has some good guitar work, but it's been done before. 8) "If you really want to be my friend": Interesting, if not earpleasing, vocal combo of Taylor, Jagger, and Richard. 9) "Short and curlies": Decent rocker musically. Too bad there's only one verse for 2:44. 10) "Fingerprint file": Best cut on the album. An excellent Jagger bump and grinder with a few well placed interludes of The Rambler purring in our ears.

The Stones have never been a particularly progressive group, but they have maintained a level of sustained fine R & B. Now with the B booted, we are left with a hollow rock 'n roll, and I don't like it. I'm not going to store my Stones collection, they have too much good music behind them. But I'll definitely consider before shelling out good money for this kind of stuff.

—John Wassell

In Concert:
Jackson Browne-Wendy Waldman
Bushnell Auditorium, Hartford
October 17, 1974

It is surely the mark of an excellent performer when he or she is able to live up to and surpass all the pre-game expectations you enter a concert with. Jackson and his band were just so fine, it is difficult to reduce the feeling to a typewritten retelling. Opening with "Redneck Friend", tossing out "Rock Me On The Water" as a response to one woman's well-timed request, or adding insight to songs off his current (and under-rated) album, the man proved to have the crowd in his hands. Professional touches were evident throughout the entire show, as could be seen by the coordination between lyric cues and the lighting. These people had a good show and knew how to get it across.

David Lindley was an incredible standout on lead, lap steel and violin. When the much requested "Take It Easy" became the first encore, Lindley led an ever increasing tempo into a frenzied violin solo, and that in turn became a rousing version of Jackie Wilson's "Higher and Higher". Freebo, Bonnie Raitt's bass player, added what can only be called a distinctive touch, playing his tuba on "Walking Slow" from Late For The Sky. Jackson's voice, which I have heard described as faltering, was clear, strong, and facile. Perhaps the solid backing the band gives him is more than enough to bolster his confidence. "The Dancer" and "Fountain of Sorrow" and "Late for the Sky", all off the new record, were done superbly, as well as "For Everyman" and "Doctor My Eyes". The encore version of "Take It Easy-Higher and Higher" brought us to our feet and the crowd was rewarded with a second encore, just Jackson and David closing with "Song for Adam". This was one concert that all who attended will carry with us a long time.

NIGHTMARES—
J. GEILS BAND
(Atlantic Records)

When a band only plays one new song from their forth-coming album during a concert, you know something's gone sour. Which is just the case we find on the newest J. Geils Band lp, a disc chock full of riff music already hashed out on previous recordings, ever since Full House .

Nightmares isn't really that bad though. Certainly the musicianship of the band has improved — no longer do they sound like an out of tune amp; the sound of this album is very clean and slick. Too bad this does not make an album.

Of the nine numbers here, only two come off as being rather good. They are "Must Of Got Lost" (The only song from this lp to be played at their Providence gig this summer) and "Givin' It All Up". The rest is pretty much filler. "Funky Judge" is an exercise in bad taste, featuring one George Jessel. Thank God he didn't do his Al Jolson imitations.

Bloodshot , Ladies Invited and now Nightmares reprove that J. Geils is primirily a concert band, as originally shown with Full House . The energy they produce in concert is pretty much lost in the surdio. Save your money and see them live (C)

I'M GOIN' BACK TO THE COUNTRY — JUKE BOY BONNER (Arhoolie F 1036) Time 34:03

Some solo blues artists can be hard to listen to unless you're in the right mood, but this album of Juke Boy Bonner can be put on anytime. It's not all slow blues numbers, there's good boogie woogie, and that ain't easy when you're only one man.

There are several reasons why Juke Boy makes it on this re-issue of his first LP. First is what I call the "oh cum ohwn" syndrome, i.e., where the artist is cookin' so hard that he vocalizes his emotions with at least a few "oh yeahs" (Juke Boy don't stop there). I love listening to some one really dig playin' his music. Secondly, Juke Boy handles both the guitar and harp really well together; he doesn't slur the harp, something that's all too easy to do while playing guitar at the same time. His guitar playing is crisp as he lays down a solid rhythm, while keeping the melody clear.

Juke Boy's electric guitar and harp are a bit reminiscent of Jimmy Reed's sound, but similarities in lyrics fade in such contemporary (1968) songs as "Goin' Back to the Country". Now I'm not crazy about country living, — And it's really not my desire — But if I move back to the sticks, I don't have to worry about no sniper fire." It's the blues of a much wider scope than that of just one's personal troubles.

So you folks who have trouble with solo blues artists, try this one. Juke Boy Bonner's amazingly full sound and high spirits, not to mention his lyrics, will take you away. And that ain't no lie.

THE BEST OF LAMBERT, HENDRICKS AND ROSS Columbia Records

This trio of cool cats is once again represented on vinyl because the hip cats at Columbia records are taking the time to look behind the recent "pop" interest in "bop" influenced music. On this album, you'll find the very best in scat by a group that was scatting when the Pointer Sisters still thought it meant "get lost".

Certainly those of you who are enjoying the Pointers, Bette Midler, and to a lesser extent, Dan Hicks and Joni Mitchell will enjoy this album. If you liked the Pointers snappy cover of "Cloudburst", or either Joni Mitchell's or Bette Midler's "Twisted", then check this album out.

Be forewarned, however, that neither a 36-track tape recorder, the country's top studio musicians, nor even a producer who remembers when, could faithfully represent in Midler's, Mitchell's, or the Pointers' albums, what Lambert, Hendricks and Ross were. There are no elaborately voiced, Bacharach piano changes in L,H+R's "Cloudburst" as there are in the Pointers' version. There is no quasi-big band arrangement or over-dubbed harmonies as in Midler's "Twisted".

There, is however, superb scat music one step less detatched from "bop" jazz, which we should all have more of every day. And as long as I'm making value judgements, this album gets an A.

CHANGE UP THE GROOVE
ROY AYERS UBIQUITY
(Polydor PD 6032)

"Ubiquity" is the perfect name for a group like this, because they do indeed seem to be everywhere simultaneously. The musical places are as varied as musical styles, jazz, soul, rock or whatever.

What does Roy Ayers have in common with Lionel Hampton or Gary Burton? Nothing besides the fact that they all play vibes well. Which is a positive thing, of course. Perhaps art is measured by the degree of uniqueness it reveals.

Ayers seems to have an inborn ability to sustain a melody as well as improvise around the chord changes in a smooth and effortless kind of way. As for the other musicians, this album is a credit to their skills also. No shoddy solo work here.

While it's not a dazzling release, Change Up The Groove, at least has the overall quality I'd like to see every album have.

Walls & Bridges
John Lennon
time 45:16

1. Form is content. True? To a great extent. Thus Mr. Lennon's new disc will affect most listeners The Same Old Way, as his previous four conventional solo records. This is because John cloaks his new messages in his Usual musical forms played by the same folks, the Keltner-Voorman-Keys-Davis-Hopkins coterie. Stale stale stale. Their playing is stale enough (with the general exception of Jesse Ed's guitar) to render such potential rockers as "What You Got" impotent. It takes a 'fresh talent' like Elton John to provide the only new-sounding moments on the record ("Whatever Gets You Through The Night"), seeing as the —

is so low. We know John's-A-Genius, and he has as always, a few things to say. "Scared" transcends this Playing Problem, putting forth a heartbeat-deathbeat bass line, sensitive Jesse Davis guitar and mainline Lennon lyrics and vocal that come across fine:

"I'm scared, I'm scared, I'm scared — As the years roll away — And the price that I paid...

I'm tired, I'm tired, I'm tired — Of being so alone — no place to call my own — like a rolling stone"

"Dream No. 9" is a bit of a success, being an interesting collection of ideas and images, painted with an appropriate musical background, marred only by an uneasy resemblance to "My Sweet Lord" in the chorus.

Parts of "Surprise Surprise" (Sweet Bird Of Paradox)" and "Steel And Glass", two medium-tempoed love-hate songs, come through, but suffer from recycled ideas. Hooray for "Beef Jerky", a magnificent instrumental tribute to one of our most fun foods. The album's final sum-up, "Nobody Loves You (When You're Down And Out)" matches up some potentially interesting lyrics ("I've shown you everything, I got nothing to hide — But you still ask me what it is, what it is — All I can tell you is it's all show biz...Everybody loves you when you're six foot underground") within ill-defined melody line that almost drowns in a peculiar combination of self-pity and rock show biz blandness.

Which brings up the interesting subjects of — which John now apparently sees as one and the same. First Art. John's art with the Beatles, even when directly personal, was early on impersonal-appearing. We don't take "Help" or "A Hard Days Night" as direct cries from Lennon. No, they seem just universal cries, universal forms John wrote in. His later personal lyrics ("I'm So Tired") were certainly more identifiable, but the words went beyond direct, mundane problems into....Aha! a study of loneliness, 1969 rock & roll style. Penetrating.

The solo John Lennon has done a large amount of removing 'barriers' between himself and his art, and has come up with a series of Long Playing Steerio Postcards that give us JOHN AS ART. John is naked, John loves Yoko, Yoko is in the hospital, John hates Paul, John's ripped up inside, John imagines...,John supports thisthatandtheOther, John's a-no love Yoko...There's little subtlety, little work, little time put into the words — most are direct lines to us, simply stated for our information about his condition. Portraits of the ongoing artist, as it were. In doing so, John's negating the real reason for our interest. We're not concerned with the man who did Mind Games, but rather the human who did "I Am The Walrus" (fill in your own fave), and are very interested in his...development. Now if John has come to believe that these stereo postcards are Art, that's okay, but necessarily of limited interest since you or I could do much of what he is currently doing. This self-conscious Art About The Artist is a new category, a sort of non-entertainment, non-progression, non-real, non-non Art for which we can make few real judgements except personal ones (either you're interested or you're not). If you are then a real 'review' instead of a critique is about all humble reviewer — critic can give in remaining space is —

WORDS OF ART ADVICE FOR JOHN —

Bag those living strings along with Keltner, Keys (he really can't play for dookey), Voorman, & Hopkins, Get flexible. Record with Martin Mull, Gato Barbieri, James Brown, Pete Townshend and Beefheart's old Magic Band, and have Lowell George of Little Feat produce. You can still write to us anytime John, it's just that you can say 'Having lousy time, wish you were here' only so many $6.98 ways.

I read Mike's review (and I hope he won't mind my mentioning that his opinion of Lennon's album changed a fair amount prior to that writing), and want to add a couple of comments by way of appendix. Yes, John could profitably get rid of the use of strings in most cases, and could even more profitably get out and play with musicians outside of the Keltner Et Al stable — his work with Nilsson is a hopeful step in that direction. The lyrical postcard concept is basically a good one, but some things need to be noted. For one thing, Walls and Bridges contains none of Lennon's pseudopolitical lyrics (a most positive step), and while the album is basically inspired by his separation from Yoko, I feel that it generally manages to avoid the kind of slobbering sentimentality which such an event might well have produced. Of course, not all of the lyrics are crystalline — we really don't need to be told "I'm scared" eight times in a row — but the improvements are unmistakable.

I'm not sure I know what "stale playing" means in this context — I know what it means for Blood, Sweat, and Tears! I find the musicianship generally satisfying. My overall opinion is that Walls and Bridges is far superior to Mind Games, even if not totally satisfying, and so different from Some Time in New York City that the two are barely recognizable as products of the same artist. The key lyrics may be from "Scared" — "Hatred and jealousy, gonna be the death of me-I guess I knew it right from the start-Sing out about love and peace-Don't wanna see the red raw meat-The green eyed goddamn straight from your heart".

We can only hope that Walls and Bridges is part of an artistic trend upward, rather than the start of another cycle. Hold On John.

Gink Ginkdom or Gink Gunkdom?

SMILER — ROD STEWART
(Mercury SRM 1-1017)
Total playing time: 42:49

They should have called this one Sing It Again, Again Rod or Many a Dull Moment Vol. 2.

The long-awaited (?) Rod Stewart album is hardly the exciting event which the full page ads gloriously proclaim. Actually, Roderick is up to his old tricks, doing a couple of pop standards, a Sam Cooke medley, a token Dylan song, and a few original tunes. As has been the case with his past four solo endeavors, the Stewart songs come off the best, and here it is "Farewell", which besides sounding like "Maggie May '74", is the album's only real high point.

The most disheartening aspect of the latest phase of Stewart's recording career is his unmistakable lack of diversity. It's just that same old same old. Every song, be it a Chuck Berry up-tempo or a Dylan ballad, fits right into the Rod Stewart mold of the past four years, never recalling his amazingly emotional and sincere work with Jeff Beck or the early Faces.

Both Elton John and Paul McCartney (possibly rock's two most consistent sellers) wrote a song for Smiler, but Rod brings almost nothing of himself to the songs, singing them but not feeling them.

Two years. Nothing new. Smiler sounds so familiar that after one listen, you'll feel like you've heard it all before. You have.

HAPPY DAZE — LINDISFARNE
(Elektra 7E 1018)
Total playing time: 39:05

One of those soft spoken but eloquent pub-turned-concert bands, Lindisfarne is unfortunately better known around these parts as a warm up band to big name groups like Traffic and Little Feat than as respectable-in-their-own-right musicians.

Led by singer and writer Alan Hull, the 'Farne has usually been able to say a great deal with their music, which is a unique blend of English sounding folk and rock. In the past, Hull's songs have reflected a humour, a synicism, and a political awareness which goes far beyond so much of the half-assed lyrics which are so abundant in today's rock-biz.

LINDISFARNE
HAPPY DAZE

After a rumored break-up and subsequent reformation earlier this year, the group released its fourth album, Roll On, Ruby, a record which saw Hull lessening his writing output and allowing the other band members to share in the spotlight. The affect was a disappointing and weak album with only two songs, both written by Hull, shining through.

While a definite improvement over Roll On, Ruby, Happy Daze is too commercial to bring it up to the more subtle Lindisfarne excellence of old. It's sad, but Hull seems to be losing his touch, or maybe he's just selling out — in search for the lost fame. Lindisfarne for the masses is a dismal thought. Anyway, "Nellie" and "Tomorrow", the album's best tracks, weren't written by Hull.

Overall, Happy Daze is Lindisfarne's most schizoid album to date, featuring some of their best and worst ("Tonight" sounds like the fucking Grass Roots and "Dealer's Choice" comes over the radio sounding like the Bachman-Turner Overdrive) material. It's just to spotty and lax-a-daze-ical to be satisfying in the same way that their earlier recordings were.

DAVID LIVE — DAVID BOWIE
(RCA CPL 2-0771)
Total playing time: 81:06

Featuring most of the songs which have made Bowie the cultist phenomenon which he is, the two record David Live also shows a definite lack of the musical substance which made Hunky Dory, Ziggy Stardust and Aladdin Sane such charismatic recordings. The music is here, the essence isn't.

On Live, Bowie moves mechanically from song to song, never speaking to the audience and only rarely (on "Jean Genie" and "Width of a Circle") equalling his studio performances of the same material. Without the aid of a studio, much of the production and sound here is thin or hollow, with even Bowie's voice being occasionally lost in the totality.

It is interesting to note that Michael Kamen, once of the New York Rock and Roll Ensemble, plays keyboards and oboe with the Bowie entourage which also includes guitar, bass, drums, percussion, additional keyboards, two horns, and two often silly background vocalists.

All tolled and told, this just isn't the exciting musical event which could and should have come from this dynamic performer.

—David "heaven on wheels" Sokol

I'VE GOT MY OWN ALBUM TO DO — RON WOOD
(Warner Bros. BS 2819)

Question: What happens when a band becomes successful?

Answer: We get solo albums from one or more of the band's members, as evidenced by groups such as The Who, The Allmans, The Grateful Dead, The Rolling Stones, et al. Now, stepping front and center to continue this tradition is Ron Wood, one of Rod Stewart's ace Faces. Along with playing lead guitar for the group, he has, in the past, co-written several Faces tunes along with Rod.

I've Got My Own Album To Do is in no way a one-man venture on the part of Mr. Wood. On the album's various cuts, he has gotten a little help from his friends: R. Stewart, Mick Jagger, Keith Richard, Mick Taylor, George Harrison and Ian McLagan (Faces' keyboardsman), just to name a few. But this is still Wood's own, with him holding the forefront and blending the others into the background (difficult as it may be to imagine). And through it all, the music comes off rather well. Wood displays a fine singing style which many people had previously thought as a non-existing quality in him. A few of the cuts which caught my fancy were: "I Can Feel The Fire," the album's opener, on which Jagger does some excellent back-up vocals, "Take A Look At The Guy," one of the disc's more rockin' numbers which moves right into "Act Together," a Jagger-Richard composition. On side two, "Sure The One You Need," another Jagger-Richard collaboration turns into a rather effective four minutes and eleven seconds of good Stones' type rock.

To be sure, this is an album with unlimited potential. It proves to all the world that Rod Stewart is not the only star in The Faces' band. I've Got My Own Album To Do is a definite indication that Ron Wood, a new star, is beginning to shine.

FELIX CAVALIERE
(Bearsville BR6955)

Felix Cavaliere, the former lead singer and co-writer (along with Eddie Brigati) of the now defunct Rascals, has made a solo album aptly named Felix Cavaliere. The originality doesn't stop here. Anyone wishing to hear what the Rascals sounded like in the 60's can listen here.

Carmen Moore takes Eddie Brigati's co-writer spot and gives Felix a little Latin-American twist (especially in "Summer in El Barrio" — ¡Comprende usted?). Any Rascal follower will testify that, at times, the Rascals were slightly ahead of the musical world in the early sixties. Unfortunately, taking music concepts which were slightly ahead of the time ten or twelve years ago makes this effort a little more suited for the latter sixties.

Felix Cavaliere will be worth listening to for any Rascal followers or anyone wanting a kind of "easy-going" rock with a hint of Latin-America. So get a glass of Santiba, put your sombrero on the table, and reminisce with Felix Cavaliere.

Heller's Latest a Disappointing Encore!

Reviewed by Don Aucoin

SOMETHING HAPPENED
Knopf Publishers
by Joseph Heller
p. 569, $10.00

Don't let the title fool you. Nothing happens. Or at least next to nothing happens. Or happened. Or is likely to happen, for that matter. It is a stagnant, deteriorating world in which Heller's protagonist, Bob Slocum, moves (or does not move). And here's the catch (ha-ha): How to keep it interesting?

Bob Slocum is a middle-level corporate executive working for a huge company which remains nameless (psst — It's Time, Inc.), doing things which he does not specify, having lots of sex both in and out of his marriage, worrying about his son, having verbal jousts with his daughter, regretting those women he could have had but didn't, regretting those women he shouldn't have had but did, and in general having a jolly old neurotic time. Slocum shuns all responsibility for anything ("A friend in need is no friend of mine"), and lives in terror of having to perform those awful, existential acts, whether it be killing a mouse with a rolled-up magazine, or sending his brain-damaged child away forever. Yes, Slocum has a retarded child, but he doesn't speak of him much, and when he does, he lays bare all the innate goodness and sensitivity of his soul ("I've got this idiot child of mine I don't want and don't know what to do with"). Oh, Slocum is a pretty rotten person all right, and it's hard to laugh at his jokes because he is such a louse, but that's the way Heller wants it.

Slocum loves "his boy" with a tender passion rarely seen in his relationships with others. (His healthy son is always referred to as "my boy", and his retarded child as "Derek", which is his name. We never learn the names of Slocum's son, daughter, or wife). The boy is a sort of reluctant Jack Armstrong, with external forces prodding him towards the realization of "The American Dream". His father, who has already realized "it", secretly hopes that his son will retain his non-competitive ways, but is powerless to affect the situation in any way. Slocum is often uncomfortable and angry with his teen-age daughter, and is embarrassed about her developing body. (Neuroses' fans take note: Not only does Slocum battle against subliminal incestuous impulses, but he also experiences "homosexual panic" now and then.) Slocum's wife can still turn him on sexually, but he periodically experiences a strong desire to divorce her. He has always wanted to divorce her, it seems, even before they were married. Bob Slocum is a strange man.

He's a racist, and a sexist, but no more than the gang down at the office. This is where Something Happened is at its most interesting, amusing, and insightful; as Heller delivers a devasting indictment of the business world. All the executives are afraid of someone else, and that someone else is afraid of someone else, and this absurd chain of fear stretches on into infinity (or at least up to the president of the company, but then, he's probably afraid of his wife.) The lower-level execs go to prostitutes in the afternoon. The upper-level execs go to prostitutes in the evening. If a corporate "heavy" scores a success at the annual convention wearing a red blazer, why then there's sure to be a lot of red blazers at the next convention.

A man knows his importance by the length of the speech he is allowed to make at these conventions, and there is much infighting and backstabbing to garner an extra minute or two. Wives are coldly analyzed, measured, compared, summed-up, and dismissed. Older men who have outlived their usefulness are shunted aside without a thought. In all, a grim picture or fear and loathing in the corporate structure. The American Dream has gotten twisted somewhere.

Something Happened is a very long book, one of nearly unrelieved depression, and bound to sink your spirits. I often found myself desperately clawing through murky jungles oo verbiage. Heller is sometimes witty, sometimes cute, sometimes complicated as we travel through the lower depths of Bob Slocum's muddled mind. I sense that this book is going to disappoint a lot of people.

My mind travels wistfully back a couple of years. I am in a bus station in Boston. Some little twerp is declaiming loudly, "The Bible is the greatest book ever written." I turn and rivet him to the floor with steely gaze, and with calm conviction I say quietly, persuasively, "Nonsense, Catch-22 is the greatest book ever written."

I don't think I'd go out on a limb like that for Something Happened. It is certainly not fair to compare the two with regard to subject matter since there are such vast differences (though the attack on bureaucracy is one constant uniting the different works), but a comparison based on quality is inevitable. The latter book does not, I think, measure up to the former. For one thing, though Heller spends much more time detailing Bob Slocum than he did with his spiritual counterpart in Catch-22, that businessman's businessman, Milo Minderbinder, I find Milo a whole lot more intriguing. But now I'm lapsing into comparisons. My suggestion to anyone reading Something Happened is: Be patient, and don't expect another masterpiece.

Rats! I wish Heller could have slipped in a mention as to whether Yossarian ever made it to Sweden.

Rare Beauty

The Wild Places, A Photographic Celebration of Unspoiled America Commentary by Ann and Myron Sutton
Photographs by Tom Algire.....(a dozen or so others) through Michael Wotton Harper & Row

Reviewed by Frederic Charles Weiss

There are times that you walk through a bookstore and a book, THE book catches your eye. Last year, the Wild Places; A Celebration of Unspoiled America came out, and quite simply from a pictorial sense sense it is the most impressive book that I've ever seen. First of all, every page is filled with bursting sunsets, shining valleys, colorful mountains, thirst clear water. Every page gives off the type of impression that National Geographic magazine used to try so hard to bring home: The rugged outdoors, where nature, undisturbed by civilization (except of course for the N.G. photographer) lived in peace and harmony. Quite simply, the Wild Places makes National Geographic look like Pop Art.

The commentary running though the book by Ann and Myron Sutton is pleasant but basically insignificant. Nobody will buy the book to read their commentary, and so it must be dismissed as incidental. On the other hand, the pictures are stunning. For the book, 40,000 pictures, from some of the finest nature photographers in the world were sifted through. The book consists of 166 of these shots, 131 of which are in color. Not even the Admission standards at Harvard Law School are made of sterner stuff.

Photographers are a funny breed. When they cover wars they seem to have the spunk to get up to the front lines. Some never return, leaving a legacy of creative courage in order to capture the reality of the topic. The photographers of the Wild Places have displayed the qualities of subtlety and sensitivity so vital in the field of capturing nature on film. From a fading orangy blue sunset to a white birch tree breaking open at the seams in curls of bark, the photographers of the Wild Places display a rare beauty. Quite simply in fact, this book is the most beautiful pictorial collection that I have ever seen. Unfortunately, like all things that seem to be this well put together, the price of the book is steep, way beyond twenty bills in some places. However, there is a chance that it will be out in paperback someday. Till then tour through old bookshops, or ask new ones if they want to sell their "display copy" (usually these finger smudged veterans can be had for at least half price).

However, if you aren't willing to go through any of these routes, but you are still interested in seeing what I consider to be the most beautiful book in the world, there is The Wild Places calander, with just a few of these pictures that sells for around five dollars. Perhaps such a calander is just an excercise in frustration: When you see a couple of these pictures, you want to see more and more of them. However, if you are the kind of person who feels that some beauty is better than nothing, you'd really like the calander (which is available at the University bookstore). But in any case, check out this book somewhere, sometime. Even if it means having to thumb through it in some bookstore, and risk the angry looks from petty store clerks. The Wild Places is entitled A Photographic Celebration of Unspoiled America. The book is a monument to the things that are left in America worth keeping. A reminder about how beautiful things once were. And a warning to preserve what natural lands we have left.

I'm not trained in the skills of photography. Yet I feel that a wonderful book is not necessarily one that photographers can evaluate and appreciate. Rather, it is one that all people can look at with joy and understanding. The Wild Places is this kind of book, filled with the warmth of nature, the natural wonder, or what is left of it, of our land.

Return of the Dragon

Return of the Dragon: Bruce Lee is back starring, written and directed by Bruce Lee.

by Stuart Sojcher

"Bruce Lee is back" the ads proclaim, and with gate receipts rolling in as they have been, the movie industry is wishing that Lee quite literally was back from the dead, that is. Anyone familiar with kung-fu flicks will instantly recognize the name of Bruce Lee and his contributions to the kung-fu genre.

In the spring of 1973, the kung-fu craze hit the U.S. with the success of The Five Fingers of Death. Other films such as Deep Thrust, Queen Boxer, The Hammer of God and Karado soon followed. Most were produced in Hong Kong studios by either Run Run Shaw or Raymond Chow on low budgets and within a week's time. Even then the plot line is extremely thin and repeated with little variation in other films. But kung-fu freaks couldn't care less; their only concern is action and most of the films supply that quite nicely.

Violence is at a premium with gouged eyes, slashed bodies — deadly chops and socks. The kung-fu masters make such incredible jumps, leaps and kicks that David Carradine wouldn't even qualify for the preliminary bouts.

In terms of action, quality and production the kung-fu genre bears a direct similarity to the spaghetti western, excepting the films of Sergio Leone. The dubbing is atrocious and the dialogue is even worse. Can you imagine a 13th century setting and such inane lines like: "Hi Dad", "Hey Baby" and "Hey Man?" If one looks carefully, one can always spot a microphone carelessly hanging down and the photography is consistently poor. The shoddiness contributes to the films' humor as one can't help but laugh at such ineptness. But again who really cares. As long as Bruce Lee or some other good guy vanquishes twenty odd opponents at once with exquisite style and grace, one's appetite is satisfied. Overamplified sounds of broken bones, kick blows to the head, crashing fists and flying leaps add to the action, excitement and violence.

In the past year the kung-fu craze has died down considerably, the reason being the death of Lee. Shortly after the release of his last film, Enter The Dragon, Lee died. The cause of death ranged from drugs and poisoning to murder. Circumstances surrounding his death were mysterious as the two aforementioned Hong Kong studios were vying for the number one position in the production of kung-fu films in which Lee played a key role. Supposedly he was contracted to one studio while about to go to work for another, so the former had him knocked off. A later autopsy ruled that the actual cause of death could be attributed to the many blows to the head that Lee received in his films.

Had Lee not died, he very well could have been the number one film star in the world as evidenced by the box office success of Enter The Dragon, financed and produced by an American company, Warner Brothers. In terms of quality, plot and acting, Enter The Dragon was far and away the best of the kung-fu lot and it received decent critical acclaim. Of all the kung-fu films, it was the most popular and most discussed. Dragon was an Oriental James Bond film, and was the perfect vehicle for reaching the mass audience as it incorporated the elements of a good action film: action, suspense, mystery, romance and a charismatic leading man. Without Lee, the genre lacks a dominant personality that can attract the masses. However, it was his expertise in the martial arts that was most important. His prowess was unsurpassed in his films, and the final battle with the villain was usually anti-climactic as Lee has already defeated thirty-odd accomplished martial artists at once leaving the audience gaping in awe.

Audiences are usually quite active while watching a kung-fu flick either laughing at the ludicrous dialogue, cheering for their heroes or yelling "what a move." Not surprisingly, the audience is mainly composed of young minority groups: Blacks, Chinese, etc. Identification is probably the major reason as Bruce LEE represents a glamorous minority hero that has never been shown on the screen, excepting the various "Shaft" and "Superfly" characters.

As in other kung-fu films, the plot is silly. Lee plays a backwards country boy who travels to Italy in order to assist his relatives who operate a Chinese restaurant that has little business because a group of thugs constantly harass the place. The pretty young girl owning the restaurant refuses to give up the place to the thugs' boss. Lee teaches the employees a bit of kung-fu but must still handle the thugs by himself which makes for fun as Lee pulverizes this motley group which includes a few Hell's Angel's characters and someone who resembles "Wolfman Jack." An American martial arts champion is sent for to battle Lee, and this final duel takes place in the old Roman Coliseum.

The fight scenes are well choreographed, arranged by Lee, as he does in most films, and contain some good action, especially when Lee uses some wooden darts to disarm a few of the thugs carrying guns. There are some funny scenes in which Lee displays his lack of sophistication and a trace of social commentary as Lee compares Roman ruins to the slums of Hong Kong. But again, who really cares? Bruce Lee is back and on top again.

It will be interesting to see what lies ahead for the kung-fu genre. There is still one Bruce Lee film waiting to be released, and in current filming is an Oriental-Italian effort in which Lee Van Cleef, star of many spaghetti westerns, tangles with the star of The Five Fingers of Death, set in the old West. What will the movie industry think of next?

••Compiled by Jim Paulin

SLEEPER — now playing at MF 4. Woody Allen wakes up from a long sleep in suspended animation capsule and finds himself in a futuristic world dominated by stainless steel and formica. Woody has difficulty fitting into this sterile society and infects it with disrespectful antics, knee slapping chase scenes and characteristic Woody Allen disorder. +++

EVERYTHING YOU WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK. Double feature with Sleeper at MF 4. An uproarious, hilarious spoof on the book which was the educational alternative to the bathroom wall. Consists of seven skits — four of which are riotous and three of which are downright sickening. Woody plays the role of a court jester attempting to penetrate a royal chastity belt with a male sperm, and various other perverts. +++

A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE — now playing at the Amherst Cinema with Last Tango. A tragedy about conflict of mores in a Southern town. Brando classic which helped build his career. +++

ANIMAL CRACKERS (1930) Not my favorite Marx Brothers flick, but of course there has never been a bad one. Groucho is Captain Spaulding (horray!) and if you're fortunate to catch a decent print, you might be able to hear some of his best vibes with the various stuffed-shirts. Harpo is insane; running around in his underwear, goosing the guests, and sitting in on an incredibly ludicrous poker game with Chico. Zeppo is in his only funny scene, but still takes the rap from Groucho, who is dictating a letter to him. The only flaw in the film is the direction, as you feel you are watching a dress rehearsal of the Broadway play it was based on. Now playing at MF 4 and the Calvin Theater in Northampton. +++

SUMMER OF '42 — double feature with CLASS OF '44 at MF 4 and Academy of Music in Northampton. A saccarine poorly done study of adolescent sexuality, specifically about a 15 year old boy who can't make it with his peers, so he gets it on with a 25 year old widow in a touching finale. Overly sentimental, soap opera music, merits two handkerchiefs. ++

LAST TANGO IN PARIS. The controversial soft-sex film lost its image when the hands of over-ambitious editors who tore the film into fragments. I think it is impossible to catch one of the original prints of the film, and the copies out now are chopped to the point of not worth seeing. At the Amherst Cinema, along with Streetcar named desire. +

CLASS OF 44 — double feature with Summer of 42 at MF 4 and Academy of Music in Northampton. Gang from Summer of 42 graduates from high school. Two members go onto college and join a fraternity. The initiation rights provided inspiration for last year's UMass hell night. Another member marches off to war and becomes a casualty. Fair sequel to Summer of 42. ++

BUTTERFLIES ARE FREE — Fine performances by Goldie Hawn and Edward Albert in this romantic comedy about a blind man struggling to live alone in the city. Friday, October 25, CCA, 7:30 and 10. +++

DIANNE McINTYRE DANCE CO. — SOUNDS IN MOTION — Modern Dance performance in Bowker Auditorium, Friday, October 25, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $2.50 for UMass students, $3.00 for all others.

GONE WITH THE WIND. The old classic which has stirred up the legions of decency in the Thirties. The big breakthrough in color film. It won a slew of Oscars. Showcase Cinemas, W. Sprin~field. ++++

ODESSA FILE. John Voight leads in this video adaptation of Frederick Forsyth's spy novel. The director of this and of The Poseidon Adventure is one in the same — Ronald Neame. Chilling and mysterious, at the Showcase. +++

THE LONGEST YARD. A fleeting macho action flick where Burt Reynolds shows his cell block how fun it is to be in prison. Eddie Albert acts as warden, for all you Eddie Albert fans. Robert Aldrich directed. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

AIRPORT '75. No better, no worse than Airport 72. Starts this weekend at the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

Twist of lemon peel or juice of ¼ lime (optional) • sparkling water
Pour S.C. over ice cubes; add lime or lemon. Fill with sparkling water; stir.

You'll be amazed at how easy it is, and how much better your drinks are. One of the most valuable tips is right here on this page . . .

How to improve your favorite mixed drinks

The taste of any mixed drink is controlled by the flavor of the liquor you use as a base. Therefore, you can improve many drinks simply by "switching" the basic liquor called for in a recipe—to one with a more satisfying taste. To understand why this improves your drinks . . .

MAKE THIS SIMPLE TASTE TEST

Pour a jigger of Bourbon or Scotch over cracked ice in a short glass. Sip it. Then do the same with Southern Comfort. Sip it . . . and you've found a completely different basic liquor, one that tastes good with nothing added.

No wonder many experts "switch" to Southern Comfort to improve their drink recipes. It adds a deliciousness no other basic liquor can. S.C. tastes great straight, like a "cocktail" right out of the bottle (many prefer it that way, or on-the-rocks). That's why it makes most mixed drinks taste better, too (even tall drinks like a Collins or Julep).

Prove it to yourself. Try any of the popular drinks shown at right. First make one the ordinary way; then make the same drink with Southern Comfort. Compare them. The improvement in taste will surprise you . . . and please you.

Back-bar secrets: mixology practiced by the "pros"

Never guess, measure — to assure the best results. Basic measures are: jigger=1½ oz.; pony=1 oz.; dash=4-6 drops.

Shake or stir? In general, stir drinks made with clear liquors. Shake those made with hard-to-blend ingredients like fruit juice. For "frothy collar" on drinks like a Sour, add tbspn. egg white before shaking.

Which comes first? As a rule, add sugar, fruit juice, other ingredients, then liquor. But in carbonated drinks, add ice, liquor, then the mix.

Ice is important! Use fresh ice; change for each round; don't skimp. For best results, buy packaged ice, free of chemicals, air bubbles and impurities. It's crystal clear, slower melting; drinks taste and look better.

How much liquor? Figure each guest for four 1-jigger drinks (total, 6 oz.); it will average out. See the chart for how much you'll need. 1 pint=16 oz.; 1 fifth=25.6 oz.; 1 quart=32 oz.

No. of Persons*	4	6	10	12

Bromery thinks senate moving to unionization

By HILLARY MARTICK AND KATHLEEN SHEEHAN
MDC Staff

Chancellor Randolph Bromery has described the resolutions passed by the Student Government Association (SGA) Wednesday night as one step in the movement away from student government and student unionization. He said the resolutions are an attempt to justify a move toward unionization and these problems should be discussed outside of the framework of the Student Organizing Project.

"I look upon the whole sequence of events from the beginning of this year as all part of a movement from the SGA to unionization," he said.

Bromery was referring to disagreements between the administration and the SGA over the definition of services offered by the Legal Service Office (LSO); Residential Life (mandatory requirements for living in dorms, and improvement of food services); and input into academic affairs.

Bromery added the student's call for independence was unrealistic because it is "utopian" to think any University body could have total independence. Furthermore, Bromery said, "I don't see students as being dependent on the administration."

He said that, in fact, the students the ones who initially empowered the Trustees to collect Student Activity Fees (SATF). "I'm sure that the Board would be happy if the SGA petitioned them not to collect SAT fees. But, if it's voluntary, you would be lucky if you end up with a $100,000 budget," he said.

"I would dearly like to have the students take over the responsibilities for the dorms if I could dump the debt problem on them," he said. However, the Chancellor made it clear that he could not abdicate or share his fiscal responsibilities to the state.

Bromery said he sees the whole problem of student dissatisfaction as being one of mixing efficiency with legal and other constraints.

The SGA has demanded control over their own budget. But Bromery contends the SGA has always had control over the development of the SATF budget.

Student power questioned

President of the Student Senate, Richard Savini

By CINDY ROGERS and HUGH OWENS
Staff Reporters

Student leaders interviewed by The Collegian yesterday expressed satisfaction at Wednesday's Student Government resolution asserting autonomy for UMass students from the administration, but said they are waiting for reaction from Whitmore. Among the six resolutions passed was that Students have primary determination concerning all facets of the University directly affecting students.

"The Student Government Association (SGA) wants clarification of where we stand and what our role is in connection with the decision making processes which involve the students at UMass," SGA president Rick Savini said about Wednesday's governance meeting.

"I'm excited that people are activated," he added.

The SGA is working on a petition drive that will support the list of demands to the Board of Trustees. They are also working on the organization of a UMass students's town meeting to be held within the next three weeks.

"The town meeting will be open for all undergraduate and graduate students," Cindy McGrath, speaker of the Student Senate said. "We are asking the governance units to be responsible for going back to their areas and widely publicizing the town meeting."

This is the first time a town meeting will be held at UMass.

McGrath said the purpose of the meeting and the petition is to show the administration the SGA has the backing of the student body and to let the students know what is happening.

"If thousands of students become involved, task force groups can actively pursue what students want," she said. "The basic issue is whether or not students have power to make decisions that directly affect their lives as student members of the UMass community."

The Student Senate next week will discuss ways to inform their constituents directly. Methods may include petitions, dorm meetings and letter campaigns.

Bill Dorsch, lawyer for Legal Services Organization (LSO) declined to comment on the legality of the SGA's demands. "I would have to look at them and study them, first," he said.

The LSO had its funds frozen earlier this year when Vice-Chancellor Gage did not approve the LSO contract the SGA proposed. The freeze was lifted when the administration forced the LSO to agree not to pursue criminal cases or litigation against the University.

Married student tenants assn. meets privately with Gage, Dean

By DEBBIE SHAFER
Staff Reporter

Representatives of the Married Students Tenant Association met for two hours in a closed meeting with University officials yesterday to discuss the outcome of the rent strike at Lincoln and University Apartments. Both the tenants and the administrators were accompanied by legal counsel.

"I don't think we were able to resolve anything at the meeting," said Acting Director of Residential Life Ken Dean, who was present at the meeting. "We tried our best to make it a problem solving meeting," he said.

Patrick Walker, Tenant Association member, said "This meeting was just to present our point of view; and we did not expect to come out of it with any concrete results."

Both students and administrators seemed to express disappointment with the outcome of the meeting.

Dean said he hoped the married students would work with the Married Student Housing Committee in resolving the rent strike. He said the administration was willing to help "reorganize and restructure" the committee in a way "that all the residents of the apartments thought best."

Chairperson of the Tenant Association Rosemary Whittaker and others do not feel the Married Student Housing Committee provides adequate representation. Patrick Walker called the suggestion to work through the committee an "attempt to re-bureaucratize us." He added, "most likely we will continue to work outside of the University structure."

The present Tenant's Association was created by members of the strike to provide an alternative to the Married Student Housing Committee. The Tenant's Association was formed approximately two weeks ago in response to 15-39 per cent rent increases levied on married students by the University in September.

> 'I don't think we were able to resolve anything . . . '

No further meetings between the tenants and the University have been scheduled at this time. "We haven't really decided what to do next," said Walker. "We have to discuss the situation with the tenant's group as a whole."

Dean said the administration is waiting for students to make the next move. "Not knowing what the Tenant's Association is going to decide, none of us left the meeting with a very clear understanding." But he also said he is "more than willing to continue to talk" with the married students.

Officials estimate that only 38 families are involved in the rent strike, but the Tenant Association anticipates an increased involvement soon. Walker stated that many of the foreign students residing at Lincoln and University apartments "dare not complain for fear that their visas will be denied."

Dean claims that the rent increase is "for the welfare of the total married student housing situation, to make it a financially sound operation and to generate funds to make improvements."

Tenant representatives said the officials "showed no willingness" to change their viewpoint at yesterday's meeting." They're treating us like a bunch of children," was one reaction.

At this time, none of the persons involved in the rent dispute seem to know what the next action will be. "We just have to find out more, get a greater breakdown of the budget," said Walker.

Gage citesstudent misunderstanding

Vice Chancellor Gage

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

In response to the SGA resolution and demands passed Wednesday night, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert W. Gage declared he feels the cause of student frustration is that a small number of students don't understand the dynamics of decision-making.

"Because they're not making final decisions, they're frustrated," said Gage. "I accept the actions taken by the SGA as an expression of their frustration. However, I feel the student leaders of the SGA are failing to recognize the fact that there is a difference between saying their decisions don't carry any weight and saying their decisions are not regarded as final by the administration."

In Gage's eyes, the only power any governance unit on campus has is initiating the recommendation of policy. The Faculty Senate is also limited by this recommendatory capacity.

Gage said, "I don't believe any university body is sovereign in any area of much importance." According to the Vice-Chancellor, the SGA call for sovereignty suggests that students are no longer interested in discussing their concerns with the administration. He said this position on the part of the SGA tends to separate the administration from the students and prevents them from trying to solve University problems together.

He added students don't seem to understand that the administration runs into the same level of frustration in dealing with President Wood's office as students have in dealing with the administration. "Students don't understand the restraints and pressures that are placed on us."

"It is my personal feeling that one of the major flaws in the Wellman governance document is that it emphasizes separateness concerning areas of primary responsibility. The Wellman document defines the areas of concern of all university governance bodies. It implies there can be a separation. I have a conceptual difficulty with this insofar as I feel there are many more areas of common concern and responsibility than separate ones."

Gage said he feels it is counterproductive for any university governance body to claim to be sovereign. In his opinion, the leaders of the SGA complain whenever any form of restraint is suggested.

Gage described his view of the major problem of legal services to be the reluctance on the part of students to state exactly what they wanted in terms of the expansion of services that should be offered by the Legal Services Office (LSO).

According to Gage, his office has been eager to help define the powers of LSO. "If we knew what students wanted, we could help advocate their position. But they don't want us to be their advocate. They want to do it themselves," said Gage.

Grad student president reacts

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

Jim Lindsey, Graduate Student Senate (GSS) President, in response to the SGA resolutions calling for independence from the administration, remarked, "I feel that the gauntlet has been thrown down. The movement toward change has now become more obvious to everybody."

"The movement of the SGA in terms of trying to define the limits of their power is going to be a hell of a lot different than what it has been," Lindsey said.

Lindsey said he feels the role of the graduate students regarding a redefinition of the limits of student power should be the same as the undergraduates. "Their feelings and philosophies ought to be put together," he said. This is a good chance for people to discover they are the same. I hope graduate students will be eager to participate in this process of change. I don't know how they are going to feel. But I think they need to be asked."

Lindsey said: "I want to see things change. I want to see people begin to take more of an interest in their own environment."

Lindsey said he feels that the GSS is more cautious than the SGA. The GSS president said graduate students are the ones who are caught in the middle. "Graduate students on this campus are the meat of the sandwich. They get despised by undergraduates as well as looked down on by the faculty."

In Lindsey's opinion graduate students have the toughest decision to make in terms of how they should act. But he feels that they have the right to act as if they see fit.

Lindsey views the move of the SGA as asking for control over the issues on campus that affect their lives as students. He said he feels whatever change comes about, if there is any change, will have to go to a referendum before both the graduate and undergraduate bodies.

His impression is that "Gage threw the gauntlet down, and the students finally threw it back." He sees Gage's memo last week regarding his response to the actions of the SGA as the "final blow."

Wood's spokesman

White declines comment

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

A spokesman for UMass President Robert Wood yesterday declined to comment "at this time" on the six point resolution adopted yesterday by the Student Senate.

Howard White, speaking on behalf of Wood, said that, "In a normal course of events, anything from the Amherst campus should come to us from the Chancellor's office. President Wood has been trying to get through to Chancellor Bromery on this but hasn't yet been able to."

White felt that it was "inappropriate to comment at this time" because Wood had not yet received the document in question.

Of the UMass trustees the Collegian attempted to contact, most were unavailable for comment. Trustee Betty Knowles and ex-officio Board member Michael Sullivan were asked to comment on the resolution. Both felt they could not comment until they had studied the document.

Senate receives responses

Bill Dorsch said the "University didn't have the right to freeze funds. The trustees only have the power to oversee where the Student Activities TAx Fund (SATF) money is expended but cannot go into the SGA and say they don't approve how the money is being spent." This follows from a Massachusetts Court decision Antonelli v Hammond which decided the constitutionality of student rights.

John Pepi, of the Student Organizing Project (SOP), expressed his concern over what the administration's reaction will be to the proposed action.

"The trustees may ignore it and hope students will settle down and become 'rational'. Whichever administration group does respond, Gage or Bromery, it would be a repressive response to put people in their place," he said.

The most dangerous position the administration could take, according to Pepi, is to "fuzz over the issues. If they build up an unrealistic picture in our minds of our actual role here, then it will become harder for us to know where we stand."

Bromery hopes to avert communications break

The Chancellor cited frustration as the main reason for the SGA resolutions. The students are demanding a greater say in all facets of University life. He said the major bone of contention this semester between his office and the student government was the redefining of the scope of the LSO office.

Bromery said the role of the LSO office was changing, and he was responsible for investigating any legal problems with UMass President Robert Wood.

Student leaders have charged the administration wasn't fast enough in responding to their objectives for the LSO; but Bromery noted Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage did not receive any kind of description for the LSO from the SGA until last Friday.

"It looks to me like what's happening is that paranoia is building. Once that happens, people get further apart," Bromery said.

The Chancellor said he hopes to avoid a breakdown in communication. He said, before, the administration was able to sit down and resolve major issues in student government. "I can't understand why they're not being resolved now," he said.

In an effort to avoid any more problems, the Chancellor said he is charging the Vice-Chancellor with resolving these problems. "I think it would be good if the SGA took 8-10 representatives that are very aware of frustrations in various areas and get them and Gage to discuss problems in communication."

However, Bromery cautioned that the University will never have a 50-50 share of responsibility because the administration stays here while the students are transient.

Eastern Standard Time will go into effect Sunday night. Clocks in most parts of the country will be turned back one hour, marking the end of Daylight Saving Time (DST).

Year-round DST went into effect January 6, 1974 in an effort to conserve energy during the Energy Crisis. However, the Department of Transportation reported there was only a one per cent saving in electricity-generating fuel; so Standard Time is returning.

$400 increase seen

Holyoke tuition soars

By DANA FIELDS
Mt. Holyoke Choragos

David B. Truman, president of Mt. Holyoke College has recently announced a $400 dollar hike in tuition at that school. This is the first in a short series of articles by various five college reporters on the financial situation at their respective institutions.

The effects of the stock market decline are beginning to hit home. Every few weeks, the newspapers contain another disheartening story about some mammoth foundation that has announced a cutback in its grants. In the last six weeks alone, the Ford, Carnegie, and Mellon Foundations have announced such cuts; and among the casualties are — guess who? — the colleges.

As if that weren't enough, the colleges are suffering from the financial crunch in another way. Along with the Dow Jones Industrial Average, the colleges' investments are declining in value. Mount Holyoke is not exempt from the trend.

"The accurate statement is that our portfolio has declined in value as anyone's has," said President Truman in discussing the issue with Choragos. "But our decline has been somewhat less dramatic than at other institutions." Not a cause for optimism, perhaps, but we can at least thank God for small favors.

The relative stability of Mount Holyoke's financial situation has to do with the nature of the College's investment program.
am.

For students at Mt. Holyoke, the upshot of the financial squeeze is a $400 increase in the total cost of tuition and room and board for 1975-76. This figure far exceeds past year-to-year increases, but Truman said it is "not out of line with what other institutions are doing."

"If costs are going up, and even if we're being as economical as we can, something has to give," Truman stated. "We've held down our costs as much as we dared, quite frankly. This year's tuition increase ($100) was quite a bit lower than we've had in past years."

That "low" figure for the 1974-75 increase is a major contributor to next year's hike. The College is now playing catch-up in an effort to compensate for the underestimation in the $100 increase. And at that, the $400 increase for next year may still be too low.

"The $400 increase is based on the assumption that the inflation rate will be down," Truman continued. "If it isn't — well, there will be considerable difficulty."

If it seems only logical that a decline in the rate of inflation, should it ever occur, would bring a decline in tuition, think again.

"Our own cost rises would not directly follow a decline in inflation, because those costs have actually lagged behind inflation," Truman explained. "We haven't been able to maintain an increase in faculty salaries equal to the rise in the cost of living, and in another year we would want to push those salaries up to close the gap if a decline in inflation should occur."

Truman gave a tentative "yes" to the question of whether he could foresee a time when tuition costs would level off and year-to-year increases decline or even disappear.

"That might happen if we should return to a modest increase in the cost of living, like the 2—2½ per cent rate of increase that was normal six or eight years ago. Or, if we succeeded in securing substantial additional sources of income — endowments, dividends on endowments, gifts, or help from the federal or state government." At the moment, the prospects for neither of these possibilities are very bright.

Rape report line unit being formed

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

A confidential rape line is now mandatory in every police department in the state, said Diana White, special assistant at the UMass Department of Public Safety.

According to a new state law, every police department must install the line on a twenty-four hour basis. The department must also widely publicize its access to the public. Failure of the department to do this can result in a one year prison sentence, and-or a fine not exceeding $1,000.00, she said.

In addition, continued White, every police department must form special rape investigation units, comprised of well-trained members of the department. She added that the unit must have female police officers, whenever possible.

UMass is now in the process of forming its unit. Three of the department's members are receiving training at the Boston College Rape Crisis Center. The training should be completed by January 1975, said White.

In an attempt to extend its rape services, police departments must now work in conjunction with attorneys, medical health services, and mental health services.

According to another new law, the meaning of rape has also been redefined. Previously, rape was defined as an act of sexual intercourse or unnatural intercourse by a person, to a woman, who was compelled to submit by force, or, against her will.

The new law does not restrict itself to rape. It also adds a new clause protecting victims in the case of a threat of bodily injury if the victim does not comply.

Dorms to be closed for Jan semester

By LISA SAMMET
Staff Reporter

UMass acting associate Provost for Special programs, John Hunt announced recently that dorms will be closed during the January break. As a result there will be a few regular courses. Emphasis will be on individual study, he said.

Hunt added there was the "usual conflict between a severe need to create something good with the extended break."

Dorms will be closed from the last day of classes, through Jan. 12 in an effort to save energy. A few special buildings will be open: some laboratories, certain academic facilities, and also the library. Library hours during the January break will be from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily, but it will be closed on weekends.

Very few regular classes for which students can enroll will be offered. However, Hunt said there will be opportunities for travel and study projects, plus opportunities within the five college system." Students at UMass are encouraged to look into the five college offerings to see how they might work out," Hunt added.

The January break as Hunt sees it can "furnish an occasion for individual groups to discuss their issues." It can be productive time for department committees, clubs, student government, but more importantly a time for individual study.

The Legal Studies department will be holding its Third Annual January Law Conference during the semester break. It will include people from areas in the legal systems personnel.

In addition there will be people from community action groups, and prison groups, a spokesman said.

Credit will be given on a modular basis.

"It can be a period for two things," explained Hunt, "individual projects, concentrated, not disturbed by other classes, and a good time for backing off and assessing what you are doing." Moreover, he feels it will be a time for majors to deal with their own departments for more in-depth study.

Special projects are individually negotiated with a sponsoring instructor. The policy on the amount of credit hours is: no more than three credits unless you receive permission from Hunt.

The "combination of individual work and the five college program will be about it," said Hunt. However, he feels that his is academically very worthwhile to have a period for in-depth, individualized study.

Concerned about athletic finances

FSen unanimous in demand

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

By a nearly unanimous vote, the Faculty Senate demanded the revision of the Athletic Council's special report on the status of athletics at UMass, because the council failed to provide specific proposals for the resolution of financial problems facing the Athletic Department.

Senator Stevenson Fletcher, Senate Delegate to the Board of Trustees, said "the report did not respond to the Senate motion passed last spring," and moved that the report be revised

Last spring the Senate requested that the Athletic Council prepare a special report that would outline proposals to alleviate the budget problems faced by the Athletic Department. Fletcher said, "the Council failed to provide specific solutions to the problems facing them!

The report drew controversy from Senator Rayna Green who criticized the treatment of the problem of providing equity for women's athletic programs. Green said, "the report merely said equity has been achieved...it provided no specifics."

Athletic Council President, Arthur Elkins, replied that the women's faculty requested $24,000 and that's what they received.

The report was also criticized by Senator Patricia Griffin for its failure to indicate how the Athletic Department planned to comply with the Affirmative Action Plan passed by Congress. This act states that any educational institution which discriminates against sex would be ineligible for federal aid.

Griffin, who's been a member of the Athletic Department for four years, said although she feels that the Athletic Dept. is "making good progress in providing equity for women's athletic programs," she has seen no evidence of the formulation of any plan in response to the Affirmative Action Plan on the part of the Athletic Dept.

Several Senators also expressed disappointment with the Council's failure to reveal how state monies are allotted in the Athletic Dept. budget. In the report, the allottment of the Athletic Trust Fund which comes from the Student Athletic Tax and which comprises only 30 per cent of the deparment's total budget, was outlined. The other 70 per cent which comes from the state wasn't.

Athletic Council president, Arthur Elkins, replied "this is discrimination...If we have to disclose the breakdown of state funds....I respectfully submit that other departments do the same."

Fletcher, however, pointed out the Senate had not requested the Athletic Council to provide a breakdown of state funds in this report, and repeated that the Senate's only objection with the report was its failure to indicate specific proposals for the alleviation of budgetary problems.

Petition seeks abolishment of mandatory dorm living

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

A petition calling for the abolishment of mandatory dormitory living and meal tickets is currently being circulated by the Revolutionary Student Brigade in the Campus Center Concourse.

The group hopes to show there is strong student support for abolishing these regulations since the legal age has been lowered, and to show strong support for student rights in general.

Johara Chapman, president of the newly formed Amherst chapter of this national student organization, said the group feels "monopoly capitalism is an enemy of the people in this country and that the Revolutionary Student Brigade is fighting for the rights of students and of all oppressed people."

Other issues they have taken up are tuition hikes, and financial aid cutbacks.

This is the first semester that this group, formerly known as the Attica Brigade, has been active in the Amherst area. A forthcoming meeting introducing the campus to the group will be announced soon, organizers say.

Campaign in Corn Belt

Ford blames problems on Democratic Congress

DES MOINES, Iowa [UPI] — President Ford, returning to his attack on the Democrats, yesterday accused the congressional majority of running wild on spending and contributing to many of the nation's problems.

Ford was out on a campaign swing through Iowa and Illinois, pleading with Corn Belt voters to send Republicans to Washington in the Nov. 5 elections.

He told 1,500 persons at a $50-a-plate GOP fund raising affair that "it was heavy Democratic majorities over the years which helped to create most of the problems we are faced with today."

Departing from his text through most of the speech and toughening his partisan line as he went, the President also said he wants an end to "undermining of our foreign relations with handcuff-like restrictions on the policies of the president and the secretary of state."

"I except the members of the Democratic leadership of the House and Senate," Ford said.

"They have tried — but their troops run wild.

"They have called my anti-inflation program a marshmallow. Well, if mine is a marshmallow, their's was a lemon."

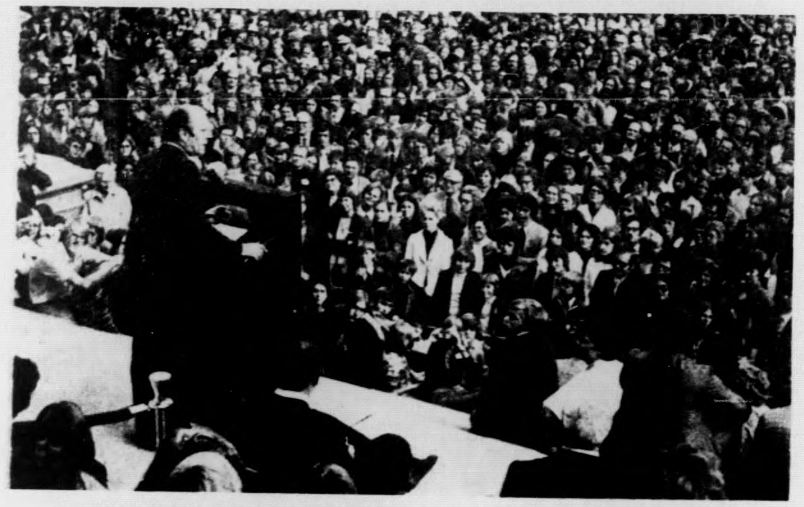
Ford stressed repeatedly the problems of inflation and the need to hold down the government spending. He vowed, "Next year we are going to hold the lid on — unless the next Congress blows it off."

Ford warmed to his Midwest reception, shucking his jacket and moving into the crowd at the Val Air Ballroom to pump hands. Women shouted "he's handsome" and "love you, love you...thank you, Mr. President."

At the end of the luncheon, topped off appropriately with cherry pie, Ford got a 35-second standing ovation.

In blaming Democrats for much of the nation's woe, Ford said:

"That is why you need — why I need — in Washington members of Congress who will join me in making decisions — decisions to cut spending, to cut the budget, to cut red tape — and, as I have said before, to cut the mustard," Ford said.



President Ford speaks to a crowd of some 8 to 10 thousand in front of the Iowa Capitol on behalf of Republican candidates in this fall's elections.

Doctor says surgery for Nixon possible

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard M. Nixon's physician said yesterday that surgery was a "real possibility" unless clotting which has almost totally blocked the blood flow in Nixon's left leg can be controlled.

The 61-year-old Nixon, who re-entered Long Beach Memorial Hospital unexpectedly Wednesday evening, was reported to be receiving "intensive" doses of anticoagulants intravenously and orally.

Dr. John Lungren, personal physician to the former chief executive, said in the latest medical bulletin that special studies were being conducted to see if Nixon is in the small group of people for whom anticoagulation cannot be maintained by drugs.

newsmen but instead his brief statement was read by a hospital spokesman so there was no immediate indication how long the drug treatment might go on before a decision is reached on whether to conduct an operation.

Lungren said a "venogram" of Nixon's left leg had shown that the deep femoral vein was almost totally obstructed and that there were "new or old clots" in the deep veinous system of the left thigh.

One medical source at the hospital, noting that Nixon himself is shown in the press bulletins before they are released, said the language of yesterday's statement indicated surgery was more a likelihood than a possibility.

There was no information from Lungren on what type of "surgical intervention" might be performed.

A heart specialist at the University of Chicago, Dr. Constantine Anagnostopoulos, said in such cases doctors would want to see whether any large clots are lodged in the vena cava — the large vein where the two leg veins join and run through the abdomen to the lungs and heart.

Sirica warns against quarreling as trial lawyers' tempers rise

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, cracking down on quarreling lawyers, warned yesterday he will not let the Watergate cover-up trial deteriorate into "a carnival atmosphere."

"I mean it," he told attorneys for both the prosecution and the defense with the jury out of the courtroom. "If I don't get your cooperation I will have to do something about it."

Emotions ran high and tempers flared frequently on the 18th day of the trial as lawyers leaped to their feet with objections to questions asked the only witness heard thus far — former White House counsel John W. Dean III.

At mid-afternoon, Sirica called a recess and came back with a statement he said he was "sorry to have to make."

Sirica's warning came after defense attorneys, cross-examining Dean, failed to trip him up on any major inconsistencies in the story that has made him the government's star witness against five former White House or election aides to Richard M. Nixon.

"I think frankly that this is a very serious case," Sirica said. "It is serious not only for the defendants but for members of their families — their wives, their children, their friends. I consider this a serious case and I don't want this case to have what they call a carnival atmosphere to it. We ought to try it just like any other type of case."

He said he realized there was "a lot of tension, stress and strain" in such a major trial. But he said he could not continue to permit such frequent arguments and wisecracks in front of the jury.

"I enjoy a little bit of levity from time to time but let's not overdo it," the judge said.

With Dean's stint on the witness stand nearly over, government attorneys said they would next like to call bugging conspirator E. Howard Hunt Jr. But they asked that he be called as a court witness — a procedure whereby both sides could cross-examine him.

The prosecution claimed in a legal brief that Hunt, despite his guilty plea to the Watergate bugging and a subsequent grant of immunity from further prosecution, had not been "entirely candid" in his testimony before the grand jury.

"In short, even after being granted immunity, Mr. Hunt cooperated with the investigation only grudgingly and, we believe incompletely," the brief said.

The government argued it would be "manifestly unfair" to require that Hunt be called as a prosecution witness since that would severely limit the line of questioning the government could pursue. Sirica said he would study the request before ruling on it.

Admitting freely to his own crimes for which he is now in prison and conceding he helped lure others into criminal acts, Dean remained unruffled as defense lawyers tried to prove him a liar during cross-examination.

Says Ford seeks same policy

Kissinger meets Brezhnev to reaffirm detente

MOSCOW [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger opened three days of talks with Communist party General Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev yesterday and pledged President Ford's determination to keep detente alive.

Kissinger said a "few disappointments" had arisen in recent relations between Moscow and Washington, but that the danger of war between the two nuclear super-powers "has been reduced to neglibible proportions."

"When I came to Washington, the Soviet Union was a permanent adversary. Today one can already say that the possibilities of war between our two countries have been reduced to negligible proportions and the tensions of earlier periods have largely been stemmed," Kissinger said in a toast at a lunch in his honor.

Kissinger met for three hours with Brezhnev at the Kremlin during the morning and then drove through a driving rain for another round of talks with the Soviet leader after the lunch.

It was the first meeting between Kissinger and a top Soviet leader since President Ford assumed office Aug. 9. The talks included American-Soviet relations, the Arab-Israeli crisis and other issues.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko welcomed Kissinger to Moscow with the glittering lunch at the government's opulent Lenin Hills guest house overlooking the heart of the Soviet capital.

Gromyko said Brezhnev was pleased with the morning session of talks. But he said it was too early "to speak or even hint at the outcome of these meetings."

"It has been a firm and continuing principle of American policy that the United States and the Soviet Union have a very special responsibility for preserving peace in the world and for contributing to the positive aspirations of mankind," Kissinger said in his lunchtime remarks.

Ray's prosecutor met with Justice Dept.

MEMPHIS, TENN. [UPI] — The man responsible for the prosecution of James Earl Ray, confessed assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., said yesterday he talked with the U.S. Justice Department and an attorney for Mrs. King before agreeing to accept Ray's guilty plea in the case.

Phil M. Canale Jr., who retired this year after two decades as Shelby County district attorney general, testified at a federal court evidentiary hearing that could lead to a new trial for Ray.

Ray now denies the slaying and contends he was pressured into entering a guilty plea by his attorney at the time, famed Texas criminal lawyer Percy Foreman.

"The first indication I had that there might be a plea was back in December of 1968," Canale said.

Canale said Hugh Stanton Sr., the local public defender assigned to assist defense attorney Foreman, asked him if he would entertain a guilty plea, and Canale said he told Stanton he would give him an answer later.

"During the course of these discussions about a plea, I did contact the Department of Justice," the prosecutor said in answer to a question from James Lesar, one of Ray's three lawyers. "I also contacted Gov. Buford Ellington of Tennessee and I contacted the attorney for Mrs. Martin Luther King."

OPEC recommends price system to limit oil company profits

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Representatives of the world's major oil exporting nations yesterday recommended a new pricing system designed to limit the profits of international oil companies.

The action came in Vienna as more major U.S. oil companies reported skyrocking profits — nearly 300 per cent in one instance — for the third quarter of the in year. Oil executives defended the higher profits as necessary to find new supplies of oil and gas to meet worldwide energy demands.

The new crude oil pricing formula, based primarily on supply and demand, was announced at the conclusion of a two-day meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, whose 12 members produce 85 per cent of the world's oil exports.

"The new system will clarify crude oil prices and safeguard the consumer," an OPEC spokesman said.

"Oil has become too important for its price to be manipulated," he said.

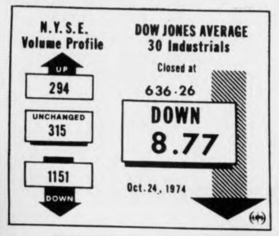
OPEC officials said the plan, to be submitted to member nations for approval, would have no immediate effect on crude oil prices.

Crude oil prices are presently worked out by a complex system of taxes and royalties from a so-called posted price from $11.65 dollars a barrel.

DST ends

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Most of the nation turns the clock back one hour on Sunday, returning to standard time and ending the emergency year round daylight saving time spawned by the energy crisis.

Congress passed on Sept. 30 and President Ford signed on Oct. 5 partial repeal of the 1973 emergency act that took effect last January and was due to expire anyway on April 27, 1975.



Nixon, in tape, called Trudeau an obscenity

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Two of the Watergate cover-up defendants have attributed to President Richard M. Nixon an obscene remark about Canadian Prime Minister Pierre E. Trudeau during a 1973 meeting with aides, it was disclosed yesterday.

The contention was made by H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, who were Nixon's top two assistants, in a conference with cover-up trial Judge John J. Sirica concerning a White House tape played in court Monday.

In that whispered conversation at Sirica's bench, it was reported yesterday, Haldeman and Ehrlichman told the judge it was Nixon who made the remark: "That asshole Trudeau is something else."

Although the tape contained that statement, a transcript prepared by the prosecution attributed the obscenity to Haldeman and did not identify Trudeau as the subject of the characterization.

Attorneys for Haldeman and Ehrlichman insisted the voice was Nixon's and demanded the record be corrected, but Sirica took no immediate action.

In Brussels, Trudaau spokesman Pierre O'Neil said "there is not the slightest chance whatsoever of a comment" from the prime minister regarding the remark.

Twelve jurors picked for Kent State trial

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Selection of the 12-member jury was completed yesterday in the trial of eight former Ohio National Guardsmen charged in connection with the 1970 fatal shootings of four Kent State University students.

Opening arguments were expected to begin as soon as six alternate jury members were chosen, possibly by yesterday's evening's recess.

It still was not determined whether chief U.S. District Judge Frank J. Battisti, who planned to conduct the trial four days a week, would continue through today, if necessary, to complete the jury.

Earlier yesterday, three more prospective jurors were dismissed, one on a peremptory defense challenge and two others by Battisti, before the panel finally was set.

One of the two dismissed by Battisti, Mrs. Barbara J. Reid of Mansfield, has a cousin whose husband was a member of the Guard at Kent State during the May 4, 1970 anti-war rally in which the four students were shot and nine others wounded. Carl P. Wagner of surburban Lakewood, said he had definite feelings about the case.

After the jury is set and opening arguments are completed, the jurors are expected to be taken to the Kent State campus where the guardsmen fired for 13 seconds into a mass of students demonstrating against the U.S. incursions into Cambodia.

Oregon dams closed

PORTLAND, Ore. [UPI] — Unescorted visitors were barred yesterday from three Columbia River dams until the threat of damage to Northwest power facilities by an extortionist has ended.

The extortionist has threatened to black out Portland if he is not paid $1 million. He claims responsibility for dynamite damage to 11 towers on Bonneville Power Administration high voltage transmission lines in Oregon in the past three weeks.

Edward N. Sanchez, public affairs officer for the Army Corps of Engineers, said the corps closed Bonneville, The Dalles and John Day dams east of here because of "the temper of the times." He said there had been no threat to the dams, which produce the electric power carried on the BPA transmission lines.

The FBI, meanwhile, continued to follow a number of leads but said no arrests had been made.

Italy foils plot

ROME [UPI] — Military intelligence has foiled a rightist plot to pollute water supplies with radioactive material to trigger panic in Italy, Defense Minister Giulio Andreotti said yesterday.

"The Defense Intelligence Service delivered a report to the judiciary Oct. 1, mentioning the terrible threat of terroristic use of radioactive material, including pollution of aqueducts," Andreotti told the Chamber of Deputies Defense Committee.

He said the plan was "analytically studied and was to be carried out by means of the theft of said material in a north Italian nuclear center."

'Happy' goes home

NEW YORK [UPI] — Margaretta "Happy" Rockefeller, smiling and waving, yesterday left the hospital a week after undergoing surgery for removal of a cancerous breast.

Stopping briefly before a tangle of microphones set up in the lobby of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center, the 48-year-old wife of vice president-designate Nelson A. Rockefeller was obviously pleased to be going home.

"I feel great," she said in a voice that betrayed a touch of uneasiness with the crush of newsmen and photographers pressed against police barricades. "Thanks a lot."

ACLU says police using dum-dum bullets

BOSTON [UPI] — Police departments in at least eight states are shifting without public knowledge to the use of hollow nosed bullets, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) said yesterday.

"In no case so far was the decision made after public scrutiny," said ACLU Executive Director Aryeh Neier. He said the switches were made in a manner that was "at best casual."

Soft point bullets are designed to expand upon contact, leaving a large wound. "By the use of this annunition, the police become judge, jury and prosecutor. There is no due process for a dead man," said Massachusetts ACLU chapter director John Roberts.

Neier said a still incomplete ACLU study shows hollow nosed ammunition is being used by police departments in Massachusetts, California, Connecticut, Hawaii, Pennsylvania, Texas, Virginia and Washington.

Roberts said suits would be filed soon to prevent the use of such ammunition in Massachusetts. He said legislation also would be introduced to set statewide standards on police ammunition.

"We are not advocating that police be disarmed, but there is no evidence that police are seeking other means to stop criminals," said Joan Tuttle of the state chapter. "You're developing ammunition that will cause massive wounds and probably death."

The ACLU study showed 20 per cent of the communities responding now use hollow nosed bullets. Such ammunition was called "dum dum bullets" after being made in a town by that name in India.

Tuttle said the study, made by the Massachusetts Research Center, noted police could use larger bullets "which would remain intact and pass through the body." She said the hollow point shells "literally explode" in the body, causing extensive damage. She said the report shows other ammunition is available that could "knock down" any assailant.

Six of 18 cities surveyed nationwide were using hollow point bullets which are banned in warfare by international law, according to a report issued Wednesday by the Massachusetts Research Center.

"A definite trend towards more powerful bullets and weapons capable of shooting higher volocity bullets was apparent," the report stated.

The center's survey and study was prompted by the recent controversy in Connecticut where the state police are using 357 magnum, hollow point ammunition. Massachusetts state police are using 38 caliber, hollow point bullets.

The center report also said use of the bullets may be unconstitutional.

Researchers were critical of the defense given by Connecticut officials for the use of hollow point bullets, who said state police used their guns only to kill.

"Shooting to kill is tantamount to summary execution which has long been recognized as a war crime," the report stated.

The center said ammunition has been developed which has greater stopping power than the traditional 38 caliber police bullets but which will not cause the extensive injury of hollow points.

The center said it was unable to find any evidence to back up other claims of police officials that hollow point ammunition has a lesser tendency to ricochet.

Three Nazis arrested in Boston for attempting to incite riot

BOSTON [UPI] — Three members of the American Nazi Party were arrested yesterday in racially troubled South Boston on charges of attempting to incite a riot on the 30th day of court ordered Boston school desegregation.

Racial fights at Hyde Park and Jamaica Plain High Schools resulted in suspension of seven students, officials said, and a 17 year old black student enroute to English High School was sprayed in the face by whites with a chemical. City wide attendance dipped 0.2 to 76.6 per cent.

Attendance at high schools in South Boston and Roxbury, areas most affected by the federal order to bus 18,235 students to racially balance schools, increased slightly but remained low at 32 per cent.

Officials said 181 of the 358 blacks scheduled to be bused to previously all White South Boston High School showed up for classes yesterday. Only 25 of 535 whites assigned to be bused to previously all black Roxbury High went to classes and 313 of 1,094 whites assigned to South Boston High went to school as a classroom boycott continued.

Police issued a warrant yesterday for the arrest of a white South Boston man in on a charge of assault and battery with a deadly weapon, a pool cue, in connection with the beating of a black delivery man Wednesday in South Boston by six whites.

The Nazi members were arrested at 600 Broadway, Main Street in South Boston where opposition to busing is centered. City Hall officials said the men had been under surveillance for some time and were arrested while they were handing out anti black literature and urging people to refuse to obey the busing order.

Among those arrested was Harold Mantius III, 26, of Arlington, Va., self-styled leader of a group calling itself the Revolutionary Voice of National Socialism.

Also arrested were Jerry Lee McGhee, 22, and Mark Graes, 18, both of Arlington, Va. The three men were scheduled to be arraigned in South Boston District Court.

The Nazis, who oppose integration, appeared in Boston twice during the first week of classes under the busing order.

Three members of the American Nazi Party are led from the police station in Boston after having been arrested on charges of attempting to incite a riot.

Dukakis says Sargent agrees on spending

BOSTON [UPI] — Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday Gov. Francis W. Sargent agrees with him that Bay State residents will "be hit hard by an increase in state taxes," unless government spending is cut.

"Apparently the governor now agrees with what I have been saying for months," Dukakis said, that "unless state government makes a serious effort to cut expenses, the people of the Commonwealth will be hit hard by an increase in state taxes next year."

Dukakis noted a special directive sent to all state agency heads on Tuesday Oct. 15 by the Secretary of Administration and Finance which, he said, "imposes sweeping cuts in new hiring and in the oh three account."

Campus Comments

By JIM PAULIN

Two nights ago, the UMass Student Government Association voted to sever ties with the administration and set out on their own, making their own decisions.

Also, a group of concerned students in the Student Organizing Project are trying to create a student union which would have the same collective bargaining powers as a labor union.

The questions — Do students have enough power? — Should students unionize? — What do you think of the SGA's action?

Jim Walsh—Freshman from Westport living in Kennedy and majoring in Natural Resources. "I read about it in the Collegian...I really don't know what to think about it...I don't know what the administration's going to do about it...It depends on what they're going to do at that meeting that's coming up...I agree with them that if you're under the shadow, you're going to be overruled every time...It will take a combined effort of all the state schools to make a change in the system."

Diane Mango—Junior from West Springfield living in Easthampton majoring in Education. "I think there's enough of them that if they get together they could get all the power they want, but there's so many people it's going to be hard to get them together. That's the problem with numbers. It's so good to be together and when they're apart, it's hard to get them together."

Donny Whitney—Freshman from Springfield living in Amherst and majoring in Business. "I think they should have more power, especially about the increase in the rents. That definitely should be a student concern. Students have very little rights here, that's my understanding. Yes, students should definitely unionize. From what I've heard, out on the West Coast students are trying to unionize."

Fred Rolon—Sophomore from NYC living in Brandywine apartments in North Amherst. "No, I don't think students have much power here...It's like a monopoly. You do a day of work and that's it...It's hard... Well, you know, I'm not too familiar with what's happening...I haven't been following it lately...but if they could get away with it, if they could do it, then it would be cool."

Dianne Bunker—Junior from Nahant living in Moore and majoring in Physical Education. "I think the students should use a lot more power than they have now...they should be able to get off campus before they're 21 if they want to and the same with the meal ticket...I think a union would be a good idea, because that's the way labor gets things done and I think that's the only way students will..."

Nancy Swanson—Sophomore from Westwood living in Pierpont and majoring in Natural Resources. "I'm just sort of an apathetic student studying away...I don't know how the Student Government works but I think students should unionize...Collective bargaining sounds good to me...I don't even think about the Student Government, I just live here...It's sort of the feeling all around campus that it's not worth it...I'm sick of the whole set-up."

Letters to the editor

No tears for Joyce

To the Editor:

My heart bleeds for Joyce Kosofsky: to hear how all her painstaking efforts to go to the Stevie Wonder concert might be undone by the unthinking masses of South Boston really brought forth a waterfall of tears streaming down my cheeks. To be sure, I am violently overcome with angry passion every time I picture her possibly having to sit, depressed, in her dreary room in the absence of the concert. Heartbreaking.

Examining the reverse side of the coin, however [I believe that there is a positive side to everything], how refreshing it was to see an individual [Dear Joyce, bless her little heart] finally view the racial situation in S. Boston objectively, not allowing her mind to become clouded with emotion for the mistreated blacks or non-racist whites [I am, of course assuming that such exists in Southie, having read such adamant objection from the "innocent" whites who are horrified to find themselves classed with their barbaric neighbors]. How easy it is for so many of us to permit ourselves the luxury of experiencing sorrow for the downtrodden of South Boston, instead of viewing the situation for what it is and coming to grips with the true injustice: closing down the concert! Thank God that Joyce can rise above the emotional hysteria gripping most of us, cooly perceiving the gross lack of consideration for music lovers that is largely overlooked whenever one normally looks at conditions in Southie; Joyce sees the issues for what they really are!

Thank you, Joyce, for revealing to us your true sensitivity and compassion for the problems that beset society; one can only pray that they do not go unappreciated.

Sincerely,
Richard L. Manugian

Administration-yes - Senate-no

To the Editor:

The combined Student Senate and area governments voted on Oct. 23 to declare themselves free of administration control. This move was impotent, childish and without the smallest degree of foresight. The student government has little student interest and few students know very much, if anything about attempts to unionize students and the related struggle with the administration [even though these issues have been in the Collegian*].*

Without large student support and backing the administration does not have to listen to anything student government says. The move of that government to declare itself autonomous without student backing can only result in the administration impounding funds that could be used for student unionization and related projects. This act is impotent not only because it is based on the unfounded assumption that student government has the backing of the students but also because it cripples potential for more realistic action such as financially supporting student unionization. By irresponsibly venting their frustration, the student government may have given the administration the excuse it needs to sabotage the movement for student rights.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

To the Editor:

Admittedly, I'm new here. I've got a lot to learn about how things get done and what to think of certain things but, listen, there's a particularly disturbing silence here that's really getting in my way.

I transferred to the School of Ed with a whole set of ideas, feelings, and impressions which have, even after a month and a half, remained pretty stable. "Commitment To Combat Institutional Racism", "Viable Urban Alternatives", "Social Change Through Education", mere rhetoric? Maybe, but really exciting concepts for a person like me to be exposed to. The whole scene at the School of Ed has given me an enthusiasm for learning which I've never experienced before.

But the whole thing is starting to fade; it's being slowly eroded through thoughts provoked by the lack of action on the part of the school to take a stand on the issues involved in South Boston. Why aren't we doing anything? We're avoiding the situation, in our classrooms, in our publications, in the halls, and it doesn't make sense. How can this institution ask its students to sit through the lectures, participate in the seminars, classes, believe in the things we're told to read, when it has been outstandingly silent on an issue which the system itself has supposedly made us sensitive to? The inconsistencies of walking out of an intro to urban ed course and into the campus center to read who and how many have been hurt today are just too obvious, and painfully so. There must be others who are similarly confused, who feel this, who are concerned enough to want to do something but frustrated by the lack of organized action.

I feel we must address ourselves to the immediate problem in Boston — the use of violence. If we can't, maybe shouldn't, concern ourselves with the streets, then certainly the schools themselves are our legitimate domain. Our own opinions of busing, desegregation, community control must take second place to our unified belief in peace as the only condition under which solutions to these problems can be sought.

I charge the School of Ed with the responsibility of providing channels through which honest concerns such as this can be implicated to effect change. We have more resources at our disposal here than at least 90 percent of the world, people concerned about racism, knowledgeable about the real situation in our cities, experienced in the transmission of attitudes. There must be something we can do.

Misadventures in DC

"We had heard (from Outreach) that the people who lived here last semester were kind of a bunch of assholes."

—An Outreach intern living in UMass' Washington house

It wasn't enough that they lied to students. It wasn't enough that students were systematically excluded from decisions that affected their lives, and were forced to live with dirt and a legion of cockroaches. It wasn't enough that student's decisions were subverted by them and twisted by the time they got to Whitmore. But the people who run the Outreach program are still, after six months, denying that any of it ever happened.

The story of what happened to the students who were interns in Washington, D.C. last spring on the Outreach program is one that has never been fully told, and is in danger of never coming out unless exposed here. I'm familiar with the story because I was one of those students.

It all started with the house we lived in, an old apartment building on 16th Street in the Northwest section of town. The day the students moved in they had to literally clean their way into the place, it was so filthy. According to the lease that the University had signed the house was supposed to be ready to move into by the time we got there.

There was also the problem of cockroaches, which were present in all apartments in fairly large numbers and in some apartments in droves. Getting the landlord to spray was hassle enough, but when even spraying didn't have much effect and the students turned to Outreach for help we got little more than a loud argument between the landlord and Outreach Director Bill Burke — held in the lobby of the house for maximum "see, I'm doing something" effect, or so it would seem, since very little was done.

All of which led to the students in the house voting to ask the University, which is the legal tenant of the apartment, to sue the landlord for breach of contract. Bill Burke, who was in Amherst and had asked to be informed of the decision, was phoned shortly after the vote and told that the students had decided to ask the University to sue. When one of the students called the University's attorney the next day to ask him to take action for them, he asked, being already suspicious of Burke, if the attorney had spoken to Burke that day. It just so happened that Burke had spoken to the attorney that morning, and by strange coincidence the attorney proceeded to inform the student that there was no way that the University would sue the landlord.

There were a few meetings held in the house that semester with Burke (one of them included the landlord) to see what could be done, and after all was said and done very little was achieved. In frustration, the students drafted and sent to UMass President Robert Wood a letter detailing their grievances and asking for some satisfaction in the case. It was too late in the semester for the students to benefit from the action themselves, but most people were so frustrated with Burke's actions, which were inept and unresponsive when they did exist, that they wanted to see some justice done.

What has Outreach's reaction to all of this been? Simple. As of this semester Burke is no longer in charge of the Washington segment of the program, it is being run by Rich Sokol, the number two man in the organization. At the mass meeting for Washington interns shortly before they left this September, Burke told them that the letter to Wood was one of the worst things that could have been done to the program, especially since he hadn't been consulted about the problems first. It makes one wonder if he was listening at all those meetings held last Spring. But it has always been convenient for Burke to equate something which questions his ability, like the Wood letter, to an attack on the program. It's one way to save a worthless ass.

Enter Rich Sokol, who told this columnist in early September that he was running the program and there'd be no more problems like those under Burke. Granted, there is a substantial reduction in the problems of the house this semester, but was it really necessary for Sokol to tell the current Washington students (and I heard this directly from them while in Washington last week) that the people who were in Washington last spring were little more than a bunch of crybaby children who couldn't deal with the realities of the outside world? Why won't anyone admit they were wrong, and say that they are trying to iron out the wrinkles the second time around, especially since they're doing so much better this semester? Must everything be covered up for eternity, or is dishonesty just "takin' care of business" at Outreach?

And the shame of it all is people like that somehow manage to thrive at this place.

The time has come

The timing was perfect. Dr. Gage knew when he had the best opportunity to usurp the most power and he took it.

At a time when students have returned to the silent state and obviously aren't particularly interested in the politics of the powers that be in college administration, Vice Chancellor Gage bestowed upon himself the ultimate voice in all Student Senate matters.

The act was incredible. And even more incredible is the fact that he may get away with it. It all gets back to what I was saying before about a sense of timing. At no time in the past ten years has such an action been possible, has such control been so ripe for picking from the students. Lately there really hasn't been an organized student voice. The Senate is plagued with apathy and the Collegian and WMUA are facing internal difficulties which makes policy decision almost impossible. All over campus it seems that different groups are pitted against each other, i.e. the feminists versus the fraternities, the studious versus the socializers, and the activists versus the apathetic. Dr. Gage saw this from Mount Whitmore and sent down the four point memo thinking it would be looked at, nodded and filed under procedure in Rick Savini's office.

But it can't be that way, for surrendering the right to make decisions about student activities and student tax at this point would certainly mean the complete destruction of the Senate itself. And even though the Senate is often ineffective it is there, and it has the power and the influence when it is needed. Take it away from the student body and this place will turn into a 23,000 student high school.

UMass is a city. We pay for it, it is ours, we live here. There is no reason why we as adults have to be dictated to as to what we may and may not do by a small group of paternalistic trustees.

Yes, there always is the argument as has been expounded by certain student senators that maybe the Senate is incapable, due to the small amount of student interest, to take on the responsibility of spending student monies.

Baloney. Responsibility only occurs when it is given a chance to. If people are treated like they are children then they will behave as such. Proof of this can easily be seen in the dormitories — you force people to live in such structures they will behave accordingly — but that in itself is neither here nor there. Responsibility is learned from experience and no other way. If the administration wishes to protect us from ourselves they are only reinforcing the unreal Oz this place is rapidly becoming.

The senate isn't all that ineffective or incapable either. There are some people involved who are working hard, not in their own interest, to insure that students of the University have their interests met. Of course all interests have not been completely satisfactorily met, they never will be — but people are trying. And if Dr. Gage gets his way much of the incentive created by student government will be lost.

There are a few different ways that this whole affair could turn out. There may be no student action, no student support and the Administration could walk out of this with complete control of every cent you pay to go here. Or students could really get involved and prevent such a thing from happening. It may not be that great of a confrontation, I am sure that Dr. Gage can sense that students are concerned and that he will be able to be reasoned with.

But if Dr. Gage takes any quick, irrational steps like freezing the Senate funds right before the long weekend (a la Saturday Night Massacre style) he could be inviting trouble.

We all have a responsibility now, no matter what interest or non interest we represent to insure that students maintain control of at least the activities and have at least a voice in academics.

The university is ours.

SGA gets tough

The Student Senate has finally asserted itself by voting to demand the Administration to quit acting, as quasi-parents to the 23,000 undergraduates at UMass. The vote was a result of indignation over a recent memorandum sent by Vice Chancellor Robert W. Gage to Speaker of the Senate, Cindy McGrath.

The memorandum, prefaced by the statement that Dr. Gage would be providing feedback to all senate legislation passed, listed four "alternatives" with which he would respond. The first, labeled "noted", would indicate acknowledgement, with no judgement one way or the other. Evidently, the senate would be able to assume from this response that there are some things that they, the only elected officials representative of all students, could do without interference.

The second, labeled "accepted", would indicate approval by the divine magistrate of the general principles of the action, but not necessarily any of the details of the action.

The third, labeled "returned for correction-reconsideration", would indicate that his eminence had detected an error of some sort, or that he had simply found it necessary to compel the senate to reconsider the matter-apparently on general principles.

The fourth response which the good Doctor could levy, labeled "rejected", would indicate the conviction that the action could not be accepted.

Such power must be envied, if not for its totality, then for its moral propriety. This state of affairs must necessarily prompt one to wonder why, in a democratic society, one man -- an appointee -- can have been vested with far more power than the governing body which has been elected by the constituents: the students of the university. Can there be fairness in a situation where one man possesses the power such as is evidenced in the memo above?

Of course not. Such an injustice is an affront to the democratic concepts which we have all been taught. Indeed, any advice or assistance given the senate should and would at all times be gladly accepted and appreciated...but absolute power such as that which is exhibited in the memorandum only reminds one of blatant totalitarianism.

Fortunately the Student Senate has stood up to Gage's arrogant and repressive paternalism. Right on.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment to the constitution summarized below, which was approved by the General Court in a joint session of the two branches held August 25, 1971, received 212 votes in the affirmative and 39 in the negative, and in a joint session of the two branches held June 6, 1973, received 235 votes in the affirmative and 19 in the negative?

YES ☐
NO ☐

SUMMARY

The proposed constitutional amendment, if approved, would replace the present Article 52 of the Articles of Amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth and would empower the General Court, by concurrent vote of the two houses, to take a recess or recesses amounting to not more than thirty days. The present Article 52 permits such recesses but provides that "no such recess shall extend beyond the sixtieth day" from the beginning of the legislative session.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment to the constitution summarized below, which was approved by the General Court in a joint session of the two branches held August 25, 1971, received 177 votes in the affirmative and 65 in the negative, and in a joint session of the two branches held June 6, 1973, received 166 votes in the affirmative and 93 in the negative?

YES ☐
NO ☐

SUMMARY

The proposed constitutional amendment, if approved, would provide for a census in the year 1975 and every tenth year thereafter of the inhabitants of each city and town as a basis for determining the representative, senatorial and councillor districts for the ten year period beginning with the first Wednesday in the fourth January following the taking of the census, provided that the districts as established based on the 1971 census shall terminate on the first Wednesday in January, 1979. The census shall specify the number of inhabitants residing in each precinct of a town and each precinct and ward of a city.

Under the proposed amendment, the House of Representatives would consist of 160 members, in contrast to the present membership of 240, and the Senate of 40 members. The General Court would, at its first regular session after the year in which the census is taken, divide the Commonwealth into 160 representative districts and 40 senatorial districts of contiguous territory so that each representative and each senator will represent an equal number of inhabitants as nearly as may be; and such districts shall be formed, as nearly as may be, without uniting two counties or parts of two or more counties and, with respect to representative districts, without uniting, as nearly as may be, two towns or parts of two or more towns, two cities or parts of two or more cities, or a city and a town, or parts of cities and towns, into one district, and without dividing any town containing less than 2500 inhabitants. The General Court would be permitted to pass laws to limit the time within which judicial proceedings may be instituted calling in question any such division. The proposed amendment further provides that every representative, for one year at least immediately preceding his election, shall have been an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen, and every senator shall be an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for five years at least preceding his election and at the time of his election shall be an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen. Every representative and senator shall cease to represent his district when he shall cease to be an inhabitant of the Commonwealth. The manner of calling and conducting the elections for representatives and for senators and councillors, and of ascertaining their election, shall be prescribed by law. The amendment vests original jurisdiction in the Supreme Judicial Court, upon petition of any voter of the Commonwealth, filed with the clerk of said court, for judicial relief relative to the establishment of House of Representatives, councillor and senatorial districts.

SUMMARY

The proposed constitutional amendment would repeal section 2 of Article 46 of the Articles of Amendments to the Constitution of the Commonwealth (the "anti-aid amendment", so-called), and replace it with a new section 2, for the purpose of allowing grants in aid to private higher educational institutions or to students, or parents or guardians of students, attending such institutions.

The proposed amendment would delete the first clause of the present section 2, which requires that all moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities for the support of public schools, and all moneys appropriated by the Commonwealth for the support of common schools shall be applied to or expended in only those schools conducted according to law under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is expended. The effect of the deletion of the first clause of section 2 would be to remove the constitutional prohibition against the use of public moneys, which have been raised by taxation or appropriated for support of public schools, for grants in aid to private higher educational institutions or to students, or parents or guardians of students, attending such institutions.

The proposed amendment would also alter the second clause of the present section 2 by removing the prohibition against a grant, appropriation or use of public money or property or loan of public credit by the Commonwealth or any political subdivision for the purpose of founding, maintaining or aiding any school or institution of learning, whether under public control or otherwise, wherein any denominational doctrine is inculcated, or any other school or any college which is not publicly owned and under the exclusive control, order and superintendence of public officers or public agents. In place of the foregoing, the proposed amendment would prohibit the grant, appropriation or use of public money or property or loan of credit by the Commonwealth or any political subdivision for the purpose of founding, maintaining or aiding any primary or secondary school which is not publicly owned and under the exclusive control, order and superintendence of public officers or public agents.

The proposed amendment would also add to the present section 2 a provision that nothing therein shall be construed to prohibit grants in aid to private higher educational institutions or to students, or parents or guardians of students, attending such institutions.

SUMMARY

The proposed constitutional amendment would revise Article 78 of the Articles of Amendment to the Constitution to permit the expenditure of money from the highway fund for mass transportation lines and other mass transportation purposes in such manner as the Legislature may direct. The highway fund includes receipts from fees, duties, excises and license taxes relating to registration, operation or use of motor vehicles and taxes from the sale of motor vehicle fuels. SUMMARY

Provisions of the act establish an independent Corrupt Practices Commission, with five members to be appointed by the Governor to staggered five year terms. The Commission has subpoena powers and is to investigate, by means of secret hearings, candidates' compliance with all state and federal laws relating to political campaign contributions and expenditures and corrupt practices. If probable cause is shown, the Commission is required to direct the Attorney General to take further action in the proper form and is required to make public a report of such action. In cases involving the campaign practices of the Attorney General himself, a special attorney is to be appointed. If no probable cause is shown, the Commission is to state so publicly.

Further, the proposed act extends the application of the current statute regarding the disclosure of campaign expenditures and contributions, to all candidates for office above the town and city level, with the exception of President and Vice President of the United States. The act requires all such candidates to receive and disburse all amounts greater than $25 by check, and makes it a crime to knowingly receive cash payment from a candidate or his committee for a service costing more than $25. The act also requires candidates to designate a single bank as depository of funds and as recordkeeper, with records of receipts and expenditures to be open to public scrutiny.

Provisions of the act extend present campaign spending limits to cover all media expenses and require all media firms (including: television, radio, newspaper, billboard, magazine, advertising, public relations, printing, opinion polling, computer, telephone, telegraph) to report the purchase of media services by candidates. Media expenses of candidates for the offices of district attorney, clerk of court, register of probate and insolvency, register of deeds, county commissioner, county treasurer and sheriff are limited to $.07 for each resident of the respective electoral district. Other provisions of the act require candidates, upon official announcement or filing of nomination papers, to report all political receipts and expenditures since the date of the last general election for the office sought, and count such expenditures toward spending limits. The act also limits candidates to one political committee.

The act establishes a maximum penalty of one year imprisonment and/or $10,000 fine for individuals engaged in corrupt practices, and a $50,000 fine for corporations so involved. In addition, the Attorney General is permitted to bring an action for the removal of a candidate whose election was materially aided by corrupt practices on the part of the candidate or one acting in his behalf, where such removal is otherwise authorized by law.

UMies back looser drug laws

By MARTIN J. WATERS
Staff Reporter

A survey of UMass students shows strong support for creation of an independent review mechanism for the Amherst police department and for liberalization of marihuana laws, but little sentiment for disarming the police.

A large majority of the one hundred eleven students polled by telephone on Oct. 9 said they favor establishment of a "police policy advisory board" or a "civilian review board."

The items about law enforcement and treatment of the public by town police on the list of 27 questions brought "don't know, no opinion" replies from more than half the students.

When asked if a police policy advisory board composed of the Amherst police chief and "a broad section of voting citizens" should be formed, 80 per cent said yes, and the same percentage favored a civilian review board made up of a cross-section of residents to consider complaints of police misconduct.

Support for mandatory review of and decision on such complaints by Amherst selectmen came from 56 per cent.

The opinion survey was conducted at the request of the Amherst law enforcement study committee (LESC) by "Project PULSE," a student opinion survey project operating at Whitmore administration building.

The survey data introduction says the percentage results are believed accurate to within nine points either way, with a figure of 50 per cent supposedly indicating the entire UMass student body would generate a response between 41 and 59 per cent.

Of those surveyed, 65 per cent expressed no opinion about the sensitivity of the Amherst police regarding civil liberties. Fifty-six per cent had no opinion when asked whether the police enforced the laws too strictly, properly, or too leniently.

More than 90 per cent said a pamphlet called "Rights and Procedures for Arrested Citizens" should be printed and given out to all persons held by the police and made available to the public.

Adoption of a town ordinance making marihuana possession a non-criminal offense with a small fine as penalty was favored by 74 per cent, and by all seniors questioned.

Seniors split with members of other classes on the question of police carrying guns on routine patrol. Seventy-five per cent of the seniors favored continued arming of police officers, while juniors and sophomores were about evenly split and freshmen opposed police with guns (46 per cent to 34 peer cent for the weapons).

Over 85 per cent of the students said the Amherst police department should increase active recruitment of qualified women and minority group members.

Coolidge resident robbed at gunpoint

By KATHLEEN SHEEHAN
M.D.C. Staff

A resident of the 20th floor of Coolidge dormitory in Southwest was robbed of his wallet last night by two male assailants, one of whom held a hand gun, UMass police report.

The unidentified student victim reported he had money in his wallet. The incident occurred about 8:30 p.m.

UMass Police Officer Michael Bozek told the Collegian the police searched the dorm for the two men. Failing to find them, the search was extended to include the entire campus. The suspects still had not been apprehended at midnight.

Bozek, who was the shift commander when the incident occurred, said the police are making a composite drawing of the men from descriptions received.

Residents of the dorm, however, denied the incident occurred. Gail Davis, head of residence of Coolidge Upper said "Nothing's going on here," when she was asked why the police were in the dorm at 8:30.

The campus police would not give out any more details of the incident until an officer had written up an official report.

Faculty members respond to motions

By LARRY CARPMAN
Staff Reporter

Cadwell Ray, a member of the Economics Department and once active in the fight to unionize faculty on campus, said the resolutions passed by the Governance Units Convention (GUC) of the Student Senate is an improvement in organization technique for the students.

"Some faculty may look upon it (the resolution) as a threat to faculty power; I don't look at it that way," Cadwell said.

The resolution, passed by a 60-24 vote Wednesday night outlines five specific areas of contention between the administration and the Student Senate. "We demand the right to freely organize around our interests and collectively bargain with the administration over all matters affecting students," the resolution states.

"The resolution is consistent with faculty unionization," said Ray.

Meanwhile David Booth, a member of the Political Science Department and once a member of a "committee to oppose the establishment of collective bargaining" and faculty unionization, said: "I think the University is made up of more than one group. There is the faculty, the students and the administration. Therefore it is impossible to act in a unilateral manner."

Booth, saying he had not had enough time to study the list of demands made by the GUC, said: "I'm sure that it represents a significant point of view on campus."

Also, with this new development in student organization Ray said he is still unclear as to why students opposed faculty unionization when it first was proposed.

"They are really separate issues (student unionization and faculty unionization), but I think it is good from the faculty viewpoint," Ray said speaking about the student resolution.

The Martyrdom of Peter Ohey

Fine moments, but flaws mar play

By MARIAN PROKOP
Below the Salt Staff

The Matyrdom of Peter Ohey, the most recent production by the Roister Doisters, has some fine moments by individual actors but all in all, the production is flawed with acting and technical difficulties that spoil any sense of wholeness the play may have had.

The plot deals with an innocent citizen, Peter Ohey, who, after being informed by a government official that a tiger lurks in his bathroom, is forced to submit to the inane forces that surround him.

Written in 1959 by Polish dramatist, Slawomir Mrozek, a member of the theater of the absurd movement, the play depicts man as weak and devoid of will, doomed to defeat by an absurd society.

The current production, directed by Tom Flynn undergraduate drama major see man's loss of freedom as a tragic farce but is also up-staged by technical faults and fine acting performances.

The play begins with the very tacky chords of Roger Williams' "Born Free", followed by the sound of a toilet flushing. Very heavy. The lights go up revealing a very small, drab, bourgeois flat. The set itself works well, especially considering it's in Hampden Dining Commons, providing an intimate and crowded atmosphere.

The lights were the major technical problem. A blown fuse resulted in three scene-destroying black-outs.

Individual performances were the play's strong points. In absurd theater, performers can easily get away with ham acting and in this production the best performances were by the best hams. Charles V. Michaud's performance as the mad scientist sent to study the tiger was quick and had just enough ham and his roving, lascivious eyes had just the right absurd madness.

Review

Also very appropriate was Bob Wooten's colorful portrayal of the circus manager as an ambitious talkative, song and dance man.

Gerald Fitzpaul's performance as the dull, drab, gullible Peter Ohey was an exercise in what not to do when ad-libbing. Attempting to reply to Wooten's ad-lib about one of the black-outs, he cracked up laughing and tried to cover it by pounding on the living room couch. To fall out of character like that is not only amateurish but inexcusable.

Judy Leamon's portrayal of Mrs Ohey began weakly but gradually gained strength as she released the passion from her heart that was beating from the tom-toms. The only problem was she became too absorbed in her character; and in a scene with Ohey and an office representative, played by Kathy Lyon, completely up-staged them both.

Director Flynn added an excellent touch with a circus ensemble of clowns that ran around doing real acrobatic acts.

The Matyrdom of Peter Ohey is a decent attempt at Mrozek's comic absurdity marred by technical flaws, but still fun to watch. Final performances are tonight and Saturday night at 8:30 in Hampden Dining Commons.

Teaching abroad highlights off-campus teacher program

By DAN LABONTE
Staff Correspondent

"Kids are kids, they're the same all over. These just spoke with an accent, that's all", is the way senior elementary education major Jeffrey LeBlanc described his impressions of 5th grade students in Bristol, England.

Along with 17 other students, LeBlanc lived and taught abroad last semester, through the Off Campus Teacher Education Preparation (OCTEP) program.

"There were nine of us in England and quite a few went to Italy, Belgium, Germany, and Spain," he explained in an innerview recently.

OCTEP is offered by the School of Education and not only gives a student a full semester's worth of credits along with their teaching certificate, but also a chance to live and work with the people of another country.

"People were really very friendly, especially in stores and restaurants," LeBlanc said, ""thank you, luv' and 'dear' are very common expressions when the exchange of money is involved. It's not like that over here."

Although some students in the program chose to stay in the states, they taught in schools as far west as California; some even taught in Canada.

The idea of teaching someone from another country was strange to him at first, he said, but it didn't take long to develop a rapport with the students. "They were both interesting and interested; they even had me point out on a map whereabouts in America I was from."

The fact that the students talked with an accent didn't bother him though, because, after all, he sounded strange to them. "It provided a tremendous learning experience for both teacher and student," he said.

He felt the teaching situation was good because it allowed time for him to go out and meet other people. After preparation for the next day was done, "we'd go out to some of the local pubs and occasionally on weekends to some of the discotheques," he said. Night life was a lot cheaper, he noted, since the beer in England is more potent and "you get a lot more for your money".

Bilingual program established

A Bilingual Collegiate Program designed to make a college education possible for students whose native language is not English has been established this semester at the UMass.

It combines recruitment of Spanish-speaking high school students with personal and academic counseling once the students reach campus.

This semester, 168 students are enrolled in the program, and some 230 are expected for the spring semester.

Director Benjamin Rodriguez says the program grew out of a study of the educational needs of the Spanish-speaking communities in the area by Spanish-speaking students, faculty, and staff.

The study revealed a "very alarming situation" in these communities, Rodriguez says. Among the estimated 28,000 Spanish-speaking people in Springfield, Chicopee, and Holyoke (an estimate Rodriguez considers low), some 42 per cent had no education beyond junior high school, and almost 94 per cent did not complete 12 years of schooling.

The program is funded through grants from the federal oofice of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) and has additional support from the provost's office and the Student Senate. The total budget is $60,000.

So far, 15 courses are available to BCP students, taught once in English and then repeated in Spanish. Bilingual sections in mathematics, economics, history, and rhetoric, among others, are currently available. Eight graduate student tutors each work in the program an average of 10 hours a week.

Rodriguez is now organizing a program to bring Spanish-speaking high school students to UMass on a twice-weekly basis.

At present a doctoral candidate in the school of Education, Rodriguez received an M.A. in education from Catholic University of Puerto Rico in 1965 and later received special training in bilingual-bicultural education at Fordham University. Before coming to UMass, he served as a consultant for bilingual education projects in Minnesota and as an assistant principal at Public School No. 155 in Brooklyn.

Full information is available from the Bilingual Collegiate Program, 225 Middlesex House, UMass Amherst 01002.

Edwards packs Hideaway

By BERNICE E. BLATT
Below the Salt Staff

The question is: can an old star make it back with a new girlfriend? The answer is debatable.

Jonathan Edwards played Wed. night at the Hideaway in Granby. He pulled in the biggest crowd the Hideaway's seen yet. By 10:00, all that was left was warm Schlitz. The place was so jammed, you couldn't move.

To get a table or chair, you had to be at the door by 7 p.m. They let people in at 7:30, and by the time we got music, we were pretty rowdy.

The cover charge was a stiff three bucks, so I didn't expect to see as many people as there were at the Hatch. I saw few UMie faces there. It appears they stayed away after his disappointing performance at the Hatch. On the other hand, the place was crowded with people from the surrounding areas. Most of the ones I talked to didn't know he had played so recently at UMass. It's a good thing too, because if they had been there they might have felt ripped off.

Edwards played all the same things in almost the same exact order. Of course, the acoustics and the smaller room gave the sound a quality that was lacking when he played at the Hatch. (Considering that I spent the entire first set that night trying to persuade the bouncer to take my dollar, my acoustics were pretty null.) Edwards shined his first set. He started out with "Athen's County," and kept the crowd rocking and singing along, word for word. He did almost all his oldies in the first set. He did a parody on the Chi-Lite's "Have You seen Her?" and it came off really well.

Towards the middle of the set, he brought on Linnie Dahl. You all remember her from the Hatch? Last night, it seemed he wasn't quite as intent on having her steal the show. Maybe ne knew that a three dollar audience is not a bunch of dollar UMies who will have to listen to anything.

Linnie was lovely, and we were treated to an adequate amount of her harmonies and their love songs (all accompanied by lots of tender mushy looks and smiles). I almost felt bad for Stu Shulman and Al Henderson, sitting in the background of this blooming love affair. After all, they were only making the music. Anyway, Linnie played her 12 string and only sang 2 solos.

The second set was at least better than the second set at the Hatch. Edwards blew it by starting out with a song he had already played in the first set. During the course of this set, he repeated three songs. Kinda' makes you wonder. Everybody loved his old stuff though. His guitar player, Al Henderson, has a fantastic country twang. Stu Shulman was great, and as versatile as ever.

I don't think it's Edward's talent as a musician that has fallen by the wayside, it's his songwriting. The lyrics to his new stuff are trite. He's still living in the sixties, crying for freedom and endless blue skies. The stuff he wrote then is still good, but the new stuff is too repetitive. If he's gonna go anywhere from here, he'll have to feed us more than a few burnt out lyrics, tunes, and sarcastic quips.

I guess he's gonna still keep trying, cause Linnie says he's got a new album coming out (even if you can buy all his old albums at Soundscope for $1.99). Maybe he'll surprise us. At any rate, we'll just have to let the Honky Tonk Stardust Cowboy keep on singing.

Candidate Atkins advocates for garden-plot legislation

William C. Atkins, candidate for State Representative in the 4th Hampshire District of Amherst and South Hadley pledged to introduce and support legislation designed to encourage food production in the Commonwealth, particularly at the individual garden-plot level.

More land should be made available for intensive agriculture to help people help themselves in face of rising prices in food and food shortages as well as to help the overall import-export balance of the State, he said.

Atkins said he would approach the problem in several ways:

1.) State owned lands would be made available for private use on the model of the WW II Victory Gardens, starting with the 1975 season.

2.) Private land owners would be encouraged to make land available for individuals to garden with the help of advice of the University of Mass and other State agencies in developing and demonstrating workable procedures. If necessary, tax incentives would be considered to encourage such land use.

3.) The farm land tax laws would be reviewed and if necessary liberalized so as to keep farm land in production for both small scale gardens and larger commercial farms.

4.) Legislation would be developed to encourage greater development of co-operatives and other local freezer facilities in which individuals could store their produce.

Atkins said he felt his program would be of great value to citizens everywhere, but will be especially important to lower income citizens in urban areas.

Head of Residence submits resignation

By MARK BACKER
Staff Correspondent

McNamara's Head of Residence, Dr. Lockwood Rush, turned in his resignation on Oct. 17.

Dr. Rush, who has his PhD in Psychology of Religion, said in an interview today he made his decision after receiving some adverse feed-back concerning his "supposed" inaccessibility to students.

He said he was often in his apartment-office, but that his closed door must have appeared as an insulating barrier between students and himself.

"Lately, I've been leaving the door open and surprisingly there is a constant new influx of students through my office. Knocking must have been the deterrent."

After coming to an understanding of the job and its obligations, Dr. Rush decided upon his action.

"My attempt to disperse some of the more menial duties of the job among the assistant heads of residence was partially successful, however my desire to serve as more than a psuedo-parent still cannot be fulfilled with the remaining requirements of the job."

Upon his resignation, which will become effective sometime next week, Dr. Rush is planning on traveling with a spiritual leader across the country.

"I need to devote more time to my spiritual self," he said.

Puerto Rico solidarity day backs struggle

BY MIGUEL RIVERA
Staff Correspondent

This coming Sunday, October 27, will be the Solidarity Day with Puerto Rico's Independence. The activity is important not only because it marks another step in the liberation struggle, but also because this is the first time so many liberation movements will come together in the United States to celebrate a massive act for the independence of a Third World Country

news analysis

The tremendous enthusiasm shown by students, workers, and the people in general becomes symptomatic of the latent unrest. Probably this Sunday will demonstrate to the world that the people of the United States have not forgotten the days of their own struggle for freedom from England.

For Puerto Ricans, this solidarity becomes a turning point in the way to see the potentiality of unity for all liberation forces. These times are characterized by the desire of colonial territories to get their independence. It has been, paradoxically speaking, the backing demonstrations in the metropolis, an important force in the success gained until now.

More than 20,000 people will gather together at Madison Square Garden. Thousands of other sympathizers will not be able to attend because there are no tickets left. Here, at UMass more than 80 Latin students and hundreds of American backers haven't been able to obtain tickets. This is a very important factor to be analyzed. It shows the growth in concern for the independence and liberation of all peoples of the world.

At this time, the administration of the United States government in Puerto Rico, Colonial Governor Rafael Hernandez Colon, is crazy looking for arguments to rationalize their colonialism. No serious country will ever listen to them.

In the coming weeks, the Puerto Rican situation will be discussed once more at the United Nations. It is important that the free nations of the world see without any doubt whatsoever that the cause of Puerto Rico's independence, being right now the only case in the world of a classical colony, is stronger than ever.

Group sponsors equipment exchange

The annual Sports Equipment Exchange is being held on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 12 noon at the Amherst College Cage. Skis and skates, in addition to hockey gloves, basketballs, sleds, bikes, trikes, etc., will be sold at reasonable prices. Those wishing to sell items should bring them to the Cage today, from 6-8 p.m.

This event is open to all and sponsored by the Amherst College Women to benefit the Amherst ABC (A Better Chance) program. SCULPTURE? well maybe

By JUDITH ZORFAS
Staff Reporter

"People don't see space because they don't pay attention", said Anne Hamburger, a senior sculpture major at UMass. She presented a 'Sculpture Event' outside the library on Tuesday.

The event began at 8:00 a.m. when civil engineering students surveyed the floor plan of the library onto the grass beside it. Then at 12:30 some men from the physical plant came with a machine which painted a three inch wide, white, latex line outlining a space equal to the space of the library.

Hamburger explained the event, "My main concern and intention is the difference between a hollow and a solid form, and how it is perceived."

Two 'Entrance' signs showed where to enter the two dimensional library.

"You can walk through to get a feeling of the space and size of the library without the books and stairways. It's an unfilled library", said Hamburger.

She had photographers filming the event. Hamburger talked to passing observers and recorded their reactions in a tape recorder.

Hamburger explained that her project was what is known as Conceptual Art.

Here is how some UMass students reacted to the Sculpture

"What the hell is going on here?" asked Richard Vose, a SBA major.

"Somebody is going through an awful lot of trouble for something", said Randy White, a Math major. "It amazed me when I finally figured out what it was."

Jonathan Palley, an Economics major added, "Seems like a waste of time. There's two UMass employees getting $3.75 an hour for that."

And finally a disappointed Debbie Boyd, said, "Oh, I thought maybe it would be an ice skating rink."

By 3 o'clock the excitement was over. Students walked over Hamburger's project as though they were walking through space.

Liberation Corridor: A sense of community

By ELLEN GAVIN
Progressive Media Service

The Progressive Media Service has recently been started to act as a channel through which community groups working on various social change projects can feed information and current news to the UMASS community. It is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular basis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, whether feature, commentary or report, for the Collegian or WMUA please submit them to the Progressive Media Service, c/o Veteran's Coalition in the Student Union, second floor.

Liberation. For some, it's the first beer at the Bluewall after a hard day of classes, relief replacing tension after the third or fourth refill. For others it's a personal escape into the country for a weekend, or forever, with the hope that if the world is only left alone, it will all work out. For others, it's reciting Marx or Jesus, verbal masturbation not tied to the concrete reality of action. Liberation. Some of us are confused as to its meaning, some of us feel certain. The former instance can lead to a numbing sense of alienation, the latter can send us on a missionary trip bent on mental imperialism.

There is a corridor in Dickinson House on Orchard Hill whose residents have been so audacious as to call it and themselves the Liberation Corridor. They claim that they are providing a supportive atmosphere which nurtures their individual and collective growth. They believe that they have a feel for what "liberation" is about, liberation on a personal political level. They have even gone as far as to assert that their membership, which consists of men and women who are Black, white, Spanish-speaking; gay, bisexual, heterosexual; feminist, socialist, communist, uncommitted, and many combinations of the above, can live together and attain a sense of real community. After a visit up to the fourth floor of Dickinson, I must concur. I think that they are on to something.

The perspectives are many, but the members of the Liberation Corridor seem to have a unity of purpose. All share the feeling that there is a better way to live, a more human non-oppressive way to relate to each other as men and women. On the Liberation Corridor the personal becomes the political, with social change coming down to the nuts and bolts of day-to-day interactions. They are a community of people who care for each other and "accept people as they are" yet they have the good sense to allow each other room to grow.

The Liberation Corridor is not the only floor or dormitory for that matter, that offers a sense of community to its residents. But it does have some features that set it apart.

First of all, after speaking with them it was my impression that the members of the Liberation Corridor are in the process of redefining who they are, in terms of their lifestyles, values, and for some, their sexuality. Each is involved, at different degrees, in questioning the society in which they live and the socialization process which affected their development.

Secondly, many of them have taken political awareness to the stage of political activism, attempting to work toward social change by acting on issues which they consider to be of importance. The groups to which individuals belong are many: Student Homophile League, Gay Women's Caucus, Gay Community News, United Farmworker—Juan Dela Cruz Boycott Committee, the Organizing Project, CCEBS, Spanish Speaking Student Organization, Attica and Wounded Knee Defense Committees, and the NAARPR.

Members of the corridor are developing colloquia for the Orchard Hill Area, some of the topics covered will be: Cuba (two members of the floor have recently returned from Cuba), Youth and Students in Socialism, UFW History and Contemporary News, as well as a workshop on South Africa. The corridor is also capable of providing resources as well as speakers on a variety of issues.

The corridor's collective endeavors are not limited to specifically political activities. Communal meals and parties are commonplace, as well as slide shows and an occasional History Night to fill people in on the history of the corridor. Just recently the floor held a People's Song Festival, a get-together to sing old and new movement songs.

Surprisingly, there does not seem to be a lot of tension between the "politicos" and those who choose to limit their scope to a personal level. One man who was placed on the floor without choice by Whitmore, articulated his own experience. Coming from a "closed background", he was somewhat apprehensive at first; but he decided to give the corridor a chance. He compared the Liberation Corridor with his prior experience in Southwest where he felt the atmosphere was alienating, and "lacked a sense of community". When asked if he was now politically involved he replied, "to separate politics from life is impossible, and for me, right now, learning from others is my primary political activity.

Conflicts of any nature are not considered to be avoidable or unhealthy; they are a sure sign that "growing is going on". Usually, individual conflicts are handled on a person-to-person level. Minor conflicts (excessive noise, etc.) may be resolved by notes on the bathroom mirror. In the case of a major group hassle, the floor has dealt with it in the past by having a whole day of discussion aimed at the resolution of the conflict.

After spending some time with members of the Liberation Corridor, I must say that I'm impressed. They are not just rapping sisterhood and brotherhood, they are trying to live it. They are searching for a sense of community; a sense of liberation.

Liberation. It's contagious.

Beyond the scoreboard

It's the sideline that shines

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Writer

A crowd attracted to a football game is not exclusively enticed by the combat and skullduggery of the playing field. There is music and entertainment provided by the band, the cheerleaders, the baton tossers and the drunk next to you.

Your nose and tastebuds are aroused and gratified by the call of the vendor, the drift of hot dogs, the fresh, hot, greasy litter from the refreshment stand blowing across the field.

A football game is a collection of supporting side shows, which even though they don't receive publicity on the scoreboards, are big men in the universities' financial records.

The marching band strode to the stadium in a magnetic procession, drawing crowds of spectators from dorms shaken by its brass and percussion and flanked by an honor guard of little kids on bikes with banana seats and highrise handlebars.

Up in the sky, slightly higher than the range of a punt, was a banner advertising an automobile dealer fluttering horizontally from the tail fin of a single engined propeller plane, which was attempting to take commercial advantage of the largest outdoor crowd at UMass since the Guru Maharaji's divine appearance in July.

In the stands, bottles of wine were more common than programs and the stench pot was thicker than the volume of the cheers.

The band was directed by a floating white hand with articulate aggressive fingers. The band worked in unison with the cheerleaders, those bouncy, smiley, males and females with bullhorns, cartwheels and baby trampoline.

The referees were decisive and certain as usual, dressed in disciplined cut and dried black and white striped shirts with no grey areas, the only disorderly intrusions possible being bloodstains. The attendance was decent. The seats in the West stands between the press box and playing field were kept as warm as the lights of the scoreboard.

During the Star Spangled Banner, the field was a shining spread of clean, harmonious blades of grass. But by the end of the first quarter, it was mangled and disheveled from dutifully submitting to the violent punctures and slices of grasping, clinging cleats.

Even standing for the Star Spangled Banner before the start of a game can become as much of a habit as washing your hands before you eat.

These distractions may be superfluous to the compulsive, passionate football junky, but the football junkies are only a small but intense minority of a Saturday audience.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, October 25 — Born today, you are not one who easily shows — or even speaks of — your emotions. For this reason, though you may know very well how you feel about things, you may leave others completely in the dark on this score. Thus it is that the fulfillment of your heart's desire could escape you, for you will find it exceedingly difficult to let the man or woman of your dreams know of the place he or she holds in your affections.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — An exciting and unique day. If you can succeed in telling another just how much his or her friendship means to you, you will gain much worth while.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If and when you are given advice today, consider the source. If the singer is inadequate, very likely the song is too. Think twice!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Make your contribution to the day's events on something more than a superficial level. Reconsider a recent decision concerning an old friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Attitudes displayed at this time may be enough to mark you for success or failure in the near future. Try to impress others with your competence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Not all signs of success are of a material nature. Be satisfied if you can gain on a moral or spiritual level. Today may mark a turning point.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Accept a gift with grace — even though it may not be precisely what you want or from precisely whom you would wish it. Be patient in the afternoon.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take special care when dealing with partners, whether of a business, professional, or marital nature. Don't take acquiescence for granted.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — When imparting knowledge to children, take care that you don't talk down to them. Otherwise you may never get your information across!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you allow your emotions to guide you, you may well land in difficulties before day's end. Accept an opportunity for advancement—if it is honorable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — So long as you have a clear conscience, you must not allow guilt be to influential in your dealings with others. Live and let live in the afternoon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take the initiative early in the day or you may find the way to success barred later on. Realize the importance of the present situation at home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A sudden loss of energy during afternoon hours could cause a delay in the attainment of your goal. Don't allow disappointment to mar the day.

TEP, BKP, Pines and Buckeyes in IM grid semis next week

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

TEP, the Pines, BKP and the Buckeyes each won last night to advance to the semi-finals of the intramural football playoffs, to be held Tuesday.

TEP, the Pines and the Buckeyes each defeated their opponents rather handily with BKP being involved in the only close game of the night.

TEP, campus IM football champs for the past 2 years, creamed the Over-the-hill-gang, 30-0. Pete Backstrom caught three Bruce MacNamara touchdown passes and also returned an interception for another TD. The Over-the-hill-gang, an off campus team, had the edge in size but the TEP squad passed them to death. John Plante had four interceptions to lead the TEP defense.

The Gorman Pines, led by QB Randy Wright's two touchdowns, thrashed the James Sackers, 20-2. A long touchdown pass to Bill Elias early in the second half broke it open for the Pines. The Sackers lived up to their name as Brian Kelly sacked the Pine QB in the end zone for their only score.

The James Buckeyes, third place finishers last year and winner of last year's overall campus championship, shutout Squif 17-0. The Buckeyes seemed to be a one man team as Dave Schoen scored all the game's points.

Pizzaro a Charlie

Schoen caught two touchdown passes, and kicked both extra points and a field goal. He also had two interceptions on defense.

BKP, a quarter finalist of a year ago, edged the Cance Killers, 15-6, in one of the most physical IM games played this year. Neil Pitchel threw two touchdown passes, one to Rob Moodie and the other to Jim Palermo. Jim Keeren kicked a field goal to complete the BKP scoring. Mick Pridham scored the Killers' only touchdown late in the game.

TEP will meet the Pines and BKP will meet the Buckeyes in Tuesday's games. The Pines and BKP seem to be the underdogs, but they shouldn't be counted out. The Pines have outscored their opponents by an average score of 35-5 but TEP, the two-time defending champs, has to be favored. The TEP squad has mostly three year veterans who have experienced playoff pressure.

BKP had to survive a three team playoff in its own division to earn the right to even reach the post-season tournament. BKP plays a physical game but again because of previous playoff experience and Dave Schoen, the Buckeyes should also be favored.

The winners of Tuesday's games will mmet each other Wednesday for the campus championship, with the losers meeting also Wednesday for third place.

Women stickers end loss skein, 1-1

The UMass field hockey team brought a halt to its losing streak yesterday by playing to a 1-1 tie with visiting Northeastern. The Boston girls struck early in the first stanza when UMass goalie Jean Kentfield made a fine play on a beautifully executed flick into the goal, only to have Northeastern's Cindy Casey convert the rebound to account for her team's only tally. The UMass team repeatedly brought the ball downfield only to have its scoring attempts thwarted by a stalwart defense. Persistent play by senior forward Elaine Senosk resulted in her third goal of the season as she steered in Judy Kennedy's assist with 12 minutes left in the first half.

While UMass again had more shots on goal than their opponents in the first half, getting off 15 shots to NU's 7, the second half featured predominantly mid-field play with both teams getting a few shots on goal. UMass was severely tested in the last minutes of the game, however, when they had to survive consecutive penalty corners.

The junior varsity team continued its winning ways and impressive play tumbling Northeastern's unit 2-0 on goals by Nancy Rider and Keren Gipps. Like their varsity counterparts, all the JV scoring came in the first half, with UMass coming up empty on 7 attempts in the darkness-shortened last period.

The varsity is now 3-4-1 on the season and the JV team is 6-1-1 with 2 games remaining. UMass will host Plymouth State on Tuesday at 3:00 for their last home game of the season.

Oarsmen go to Charles

UPI Telephoto

The UMass oarsmen will be in Boston this Sunday to compete in the Head of the Charles Regatta. The Head is the largest regatta in the country, involving over 1,000 competitors from over 140 schools, colleges, clubs and foreign countries.

The format of the race, which is against the clock over a 3-mile course with boats starting 10 seconds apart, allows this large number of participants, and turns the Charles River (from the BU boathouse to Gerry's landing) into a 5-hour continuous parade of hard-rowing shells.

The crew will race in the Elite Four, Elite Eight, Lighweight Four, and Elite Pair competitions. The Elite Four lineups are as follows: 1) Coxswain John Barrett, Jim Bouzianis, Bill Vose, Rob Hipkins, and Bruce MacLean. "Number one is a very smooth rowing team," says Coach Bill Mahoney. 2) Cox Anoy Burton, Peter Berg, Kevin Connor, Dick Seuss, and Tony Santoro. 3) Cox Gary Paul Steve Coomer, Peter Flood, Paul Gowen, and Bill Fitzpatrick. 4) Cox Mark Lyle, Ted Mone, Dave Burke, Paul Shea, and Dave Furgusen. "This is a tough sophomore combination" says Mahoney.

The Lightweight Four includes sophs Bob "Hank" Cullen, Jim Tilley, Walt Berger and Alan Seagal. The Captains — Gowen and Fitzpatrick — are the Elite Pair, while the Elite Eight consists of Paul, Loomer, Mike Melvin, Bouzianis, Connor, Seuss, Santoro, Vose and Berg.

Jim Torrance: Backbone of balanced rushing attack

By RON ARENA
Sports Staff

What a difference a year makes. Last year, the UMass offense resembled that of the Oakland Raiders, with the passing combination of Peil Pennington to Tim Berra chewing up most of the yardage. As for the running game, well, it was somewhat less than productive with only 749 total yards for the season. Compare this to a team like Oklahoma, currently averaging 482 yards rushing per game, and the absence of the Minutemen ground attack could easily be detected.

But this year Pennington and Berra are gone, and with quarterback Fred Kelliher injured in the opening game, the aerial attack has suffered. In its place has arrived the running game, which to last year's fan may seem as some new alien-like dimension of offense from a foreign country.

In mentioning this year's ground attack, Rich Jessamy and Keith Lang usually come to mind. Overshadowed by these two fine backs has been junior fullback Jim Torrance. Although not playing much until the end of last season, Torrance has that key experience under his belt. From Rye, New York, where he played fullback in high school (All-Westchester County), Torrance has added depth and balance to a splendid corps of backs.

Against Villanova, Jessamy and Lang proved their ability. John Romboli added depth with his performance vs. Maine. But last week at Kingston, Rhode Island, it was Torrance who made his name heard with a sparkling 147-yard performance in 28 carries including the only UMass touchdown of the game, Torrance's fourth this year. His running also set up an important field goal in the fourth quarter.

Torrance revealed the difference in this year's rushing display as opposed to last year's in one word: "balance." With a backfield always containing two fine runners, the defense cannot possibly key on one back without being burned by the other. An example of this balance? Jessamy has gained 351 yards, Lang, 307, and Torrance, 279. Each has carried the ball over 60 times. With balance like this, Coach MacPherson must dream of opposing defenses keying on one back.

Like any unselfish back, Torrance gives credit to his offensive line. "Without them you can't do anything", he insisted. "They deserve all the credit."

As good as the UMass running attack has been, it has been victimized by the enemy of any ballcarrier, the fumble. Combined with pass interceptions, many a Minuteman drive has been thwarted by a turnover. Miscues contributed substantially in their only Yankee Conference loss, to Vermont. Torrance revealed that throughout this week's practicing, Coach MacPherson has stressed the importance of abandoning these mistakes in tomorrow's do-or-die game vs. UConn. Torrance also felt that in order to beat the Huskies, UMass can ill-afford these turnovers.

As for the importance of tomorrow's battle, he said "They are definitely the team to beat. This game means the Yankee Conference. If we win it, we're in." Actually with a win against UConn, the worst UMass can finish is a tie for the YanCon title. Clearly, as Torrance says, this is "the game."

The importance of Jim Torrance in this must game can be summed up in the words of Coach MacPherson: "He's somebody they'll have to worry about." So keep an eye on number 30 tomorrow. If Torrance and his fellow running mates can continue their success and avoid miscues, the Beanpot should come home.

Martin top mentor

NEW YORK [AP] — Brash Billy Martin, who magically turned the Texas Rangers from a loser into a winner in one year, was named the Associated Press' American League Manager of the Year Thursday.

Martin, who drove a last place team into pennant contention overnight, won a hot race with Bill Virdon of the New York Yankees.

Scott Hayes

Peerless palmistry

Craig Morton in a New York Giants' uniform? Norm Snead wearing the red and gold of the San Francisco 49ers? John Hadl donning the traditional colors of the Green Bay Packers? Or can you imagine Joe Reed as a Detroit Lion? These somewhat shocking changes are the results of three trades involving four quarterbacks that took place just before the NLF trade deadline of three o'clock Tuesday afternoon. I'll stay with my original picks, however, hoping that it takes the QB's a few games to get used to their new teams. Here's another collection of reliable picks for this, the seventh week and midway mark of the NFL season:

UMASS 16; CONNECTICUT 14

One thing is certain, and that's the fact that this sportswriter will be at Alumni Stadium on Saturday afternoon pulling for UMass. I'll have to take the Minutemen, who due to newfound Jim Torrance and the toe of Greg Sprout will edge the Huskies and go on to recapture the Beanpot.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 21; BALTIMORE COLTS 13

Lydell Mitchell will have more trouble running against the Dolphins than he did against the porous Jet defense. Mitchell rushed 40 times for 156 yards, and has been the only bright spot in the Colts' dismal season so far. Miami should win, and will be waiting for New England or Buffalo to slip from the AFC Eastern Division perch.

BUFFALO BILLS 27; CHICAGO BEARS 21

The Bills will defeat Huff-led Bears, as McKenzie and linemates make Sunday afternoon an enjoyable one for Ferguson, Simpson and Braxton.

DALLAS COWBOYS 28; NEW YORK GIANTS 7

Cowboys, led by Calvin Hill, are on the way back, having snapped a four-game losing streak versus Eagles. Spiritless Giants won't be able to stop Dallas again, much to the dismay of another less than capacity Yale Bowl crowd.

DENVER BRONCOS 35; CLEVELAND BROWNS 31

Floyd Little is healthy again, although Mike Phipps could make this one closer than expected.

DETROIT LIONS 20; GREEN BAY PACKERS 16

Detroit has found the winning combination, and although Packers now have John Hadl, they'll have to wait a few weeks.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 34; HOUSTON OILERS 24

Bengals played well last Sunday against Raiders, only to be beaten with eight seconds to play. Oilers pose no serious problems for Cincinnati.

SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 24; KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 23

No particular reasons, just my upset of the week.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 28; NEW YORK JETS 10

Not much can be said about Jets, who were outplayed by Baltimore, except that they're playing the Rams in what may well turn out to be a rout.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 27; NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 21

Patriots will have to play an excellent brand of football just to stay in the game, as Vikings return to their winning ways.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 35; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 10

Raiders are in top form and 49ers are having a terrible year. It's as simple as that!

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 20; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 13

Philadelphia gave Dallas a good fight, and even though the Saints were victorious against the inconsistent Falcons, any team with Bobby Scott as its quarterback has a long way to go.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 17; WASHINGTON REDSKINS 14

The Cards will lose sooner or later, but not before screaming fans at Busch Stadium.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 21; ATLANTA FALCONS 14

The Steelers have managed to win (a 4-1-1 record) but haven't been playing that well. Who knows what's wrong with Atlanta? This contest will be the least exciting of the Monday night games yet this year.

CUSTER 31½; INDIANS 14

Last but not least, a correction for the miniscule number of Steve Saraceno readers: I'm picking Custer by 17½ over the Indians, not 14 points.

Maxwell-Men meet Rhody Rams

By DAVE OSTRANDER
Sports Staff

After their first victory of the year, a game which the coaching staff called "the biggest win ever for a UMass subvarsity team", the little Minutemen may find it tough getting mentally prepared for the Rhode Island Rams sub-varsity, a game which originally scheduled for today, will now be Monday at Kingston.

Having only a six game schedule, though, every game is important, especially to the players in the process of trying to prove worthy for varsity competition next year.

The Rams, known for their "physical" style of play, will be looking to run right at UMass hoping to establish a ground game, something the Minutemen proved so effective at in last week's game at West Point.

The UMass defense will be put to the test against this Ram team, and right in the line of fire will be defensive captain Jim Penta, and hard hitting linebacker Phil Puopolo, who played an outstanding game against the Cadets.

UM seeks revenge, Beanpot

By STEVE DeCOSTA
Sports Staff

A matter of pride. That's what it really boils down to.

The Minutemen, with bitter memories of last year, host Connecticut tomorrow in a game that goes a long way toward deciding who gets the coveted Beanpot, a time-worn symbol of Yankee Conference supremacy.

Of course it would be nice to see another Beanpot in the Boyden trophy case. But there is also a matter of revenge involved.

Homecoming was on the other side of the fence last year, and so was the revenge. In '72 (otherwise known as the year of Boardwalk) the Minutemen had destroyed any semblance of football played by the Huskies 49-16. In '73, revenge was sweet with UConn giving up only two, yes I said two yards rushing in 40 attempts in capturing the contest 28-6.

This year, it's Homecoming in Amherst. All the ingredients are there. But there is a difference.

UMass has not even begun to approach the form it displayed in '72 and UConn is nowhere near the dominating force they were last year.

The biggest common problem of tomorrow's opponents is their almost uncanny knack of giving up the football.

UMass has fumbled seventeen times in its last three games, a remarkable figure considering only one has ended in a loss. The Huskies have given the ball away on ten occasions in their last two encounters, the big factor in losses to Delaware and Maine.

UConn sports the same pair of quarterbacks who last year, as freshman, sparked the Jusky Blitz. Bernie Palmer, who looms as the starter, is better suited to the running, while Lou Mancari can make things happen via the air. A third variable is BC transfer Brad Rock, a sort of middle man who combines the talents of the two sophomores.

Gone from last year is Eric Torkelson, a bruising runner ran over the Minutemen. But the Huskies still have a good ground game, led by another sophomore, Russ Clarke, who currently leads the conference in rushing.

If the Huskies throw, chances are the tosses will be aimed at Al MacLellan, an all-New England tight end.

The Minutemen are going out on a limb. Coach Dick MacPherson has elected to go into the season's most important game with an inexperienced quarterback, Brian McNally.

McNally showed poise last week, as he replaced Mark Tripucka in the second period at Kingston, and led the Minutemen to their only touchdown. Perhaps more important in the mind of MacPherson, is the fact that late in the game, with his back to the wall and the outcome still in doubt, McNally led his mates on a 90-yard drive that ate up nine minutes of the clock and produced three insurance points.

But McNally's poise is offset by his lack of experience. He has seen action in only five quarters this season, and has not even worked out at the quarterback position full-time.

McNally did upgrade the UMass passing attack, hitting on four of eight tosses including a two-point conversion to Walt Parker.

The UMass offense has found a new workhorse, Jim Torrance. The junior fullback carried 28 times for 147 yards last week and came up with the big play when it was needed.

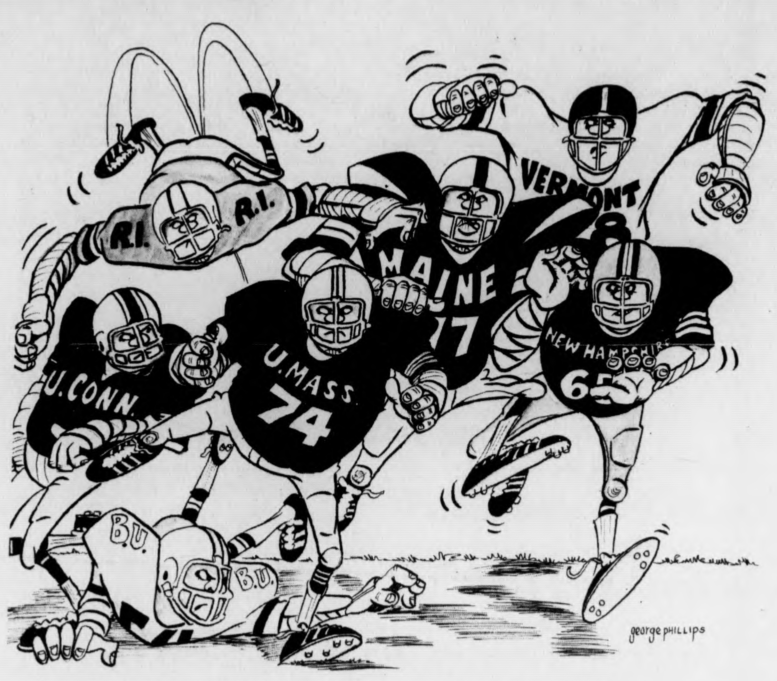
Rich Jessamy, Mr. Outside in the ground attack, should be healthy after suffering a separated thumb and a slight back strain in the last two weeks.

A problem for the Minutemen could be their deteriorating pass defense. The secondary allowed 12 completions in last week's second half, and only several dropped passes in the first half kept the game figure respectable.

The pattern of the last two years should not hold true to form. With the problems facing both squads, it is doubtful that either will be able to dominate.

Both teams have the incentive. The real question will be execution.

So, it's tomorrow. 1:00. Alumni Stadium. And, as they say, it's for all the marbles.



THE MAD SCRAMBLE FOR THE YANKEE CONFERENCE TITLE, RESUMES TOMORROW AS THE MINUTEMEN CONFRONT U.CONN. AT 1:00 IN ALUMNI STADIUM!

THE GAME FOR THE MARBLES

Booters-1, Tufts-0; UConn next

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

In somewhat unimpressive fashion the UMass Soccer Minutemen edged the Tuuts Jumbos 1-0 yesterday in a tight prelude to tomorrow's Yankee Conference title match-up with Connecticut.

With signs that possibly the Minutemen were looking past Tufts and on to UConn, this game proved to be a tough one.

There was no scoring in the first half but both teams had quite a few chances. Early in the game Tufts forward Bill Schacter made a nice move past UMass fullback Danny Ouellette. With goalie Carl Vercollone down and out Schacter fired a shot wide to the right past a wide open net.

The Minutemen also had their chances in the first half. UMass forward Bill Belcher had one shot blocked out in front and headed another just wide to the right of the net.

Coach Al Rufe said that the size of the field, which was smaller than usual, would be a factor and it certainly was. It enabled Tufts to play a kick-and-run type of game that the Minutemen would rather not play.

During the first half both teams had some good shots on goal but the play was still rather sloppy. The smaller field also contributed to the bunching up of the action to the middle of the field, and it made it difficult for either team to move the ball quickly and with any consistency.

UMass played the first half without two of their top scorers as Tom Coburn and Tony King were both sitting on the bench. When the second half began King was in the staring line-up and Coburn came into the game after about ten minutes of play. These two men proved to be the difference as they combined for the only score of the game.

Early in the half UMass goalie Carl Vercollone made a few fine saves off a flurry of shots from right our in front of the UMass net. Tufts had four corner kicks in a row but "Vercy" and his corps of fullbacks were able to hold off the Jumbos.

The game's only score came midway through the second half. Tom Coburn moved the ball down the right side of the field very swiftly. He then faked to the middle and moved deeper past a Tufts defender. And three feet from the endline he let go a pass right in front and Tony King was there to pop it past a bewildered Jumbo goalie to his lower left.

For all intents and purposes UMass sat on their lead for the remainder of the game. Tufts had a few good scoring chances but Vercollone was equal and the Minutemen were able to hold on to their slim lead.

"We passed up a lot of scoring opportunities," said Coach Al Rufe. "The first half was ours but the second half was Tufts'. When they dominated the ball they had more chances than we did."

Tomorrow the Minutemen take on nationally ranked UConn in a game that could decide the Yankee Conference championship. Wednesday the Huskies beat Brown 1-0 and that result will certainly up their national ranking.

QUICK SHOTS--It will be nice to come home, said Coach Rufe. It certainly will be, and to come home to a win will be even nicer. Goalie Vercollone shined against Tufts and he'll have to do the same against UConn if the Minutemen hope to make a game of it. Tomorrow's game is the biggest soccer game to hit this campus in years. Game Time - 11:00 a.m.

When the Minutemen take the field against the University of Connecticut Huskies tomorrow afternoon at 1:00 at Alumni Stadium, they'll be out for revenge and the Yankee Conference crown.

The Huskies won last year's game 28-6, and you can be sure that come tomorrow the thoughts of every UMass player who was a party to the defeat will be on dealing a crushing blow to UConn.

George Phillips

Tomorrow marks the biggest doubleheader of the fall sports season. At 11:00 the Minutemen take on Connecticut in the soccer game that will decide the Yankee Conference champion for 1974.

Connecticut was the tenth-ranked major college soccer team in the country prior to their game on Wednesday with fourth-ranked Brown University. But Connecticut won that game 1-0 in Providence and will surely move up in the rankings.

The season started off on a disappointing note for the Minutemen when they were upended 17-13 by Villanova in a game all agreed they could have won. Here Keith Lang is cornered by a Wildcat linebacker.

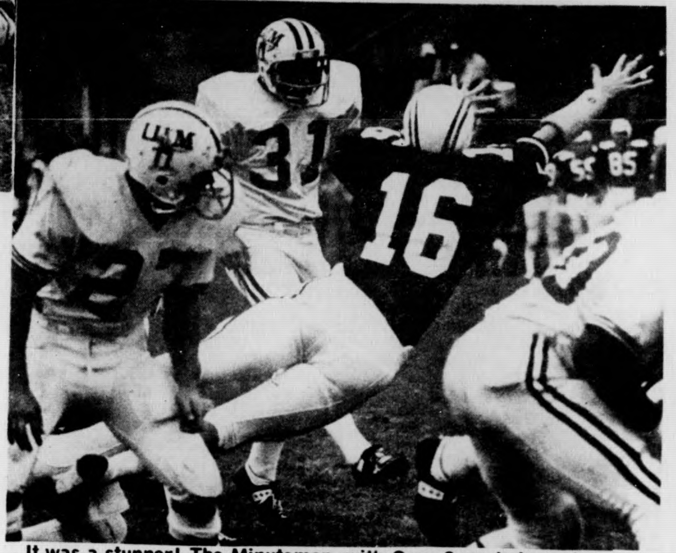
But a week later Keith Lang and the Minutemen flew past the Black Bears of Maine by the convincing score of 42-0. It was a game that gave the Minutemen the confidence needed to face Dartmouth a week later at Hanover.



It was a stunner! The Minutemen, with Greg Sprout shown here kicking a conversion, kicked ass on the Ivies to the tune of 14-0. For Dick MacPherson it was one of his biggest wins ever, and bode well for the rest of the season.

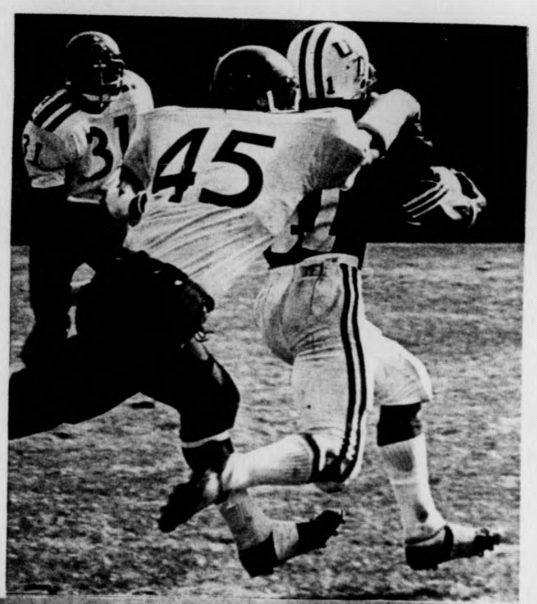
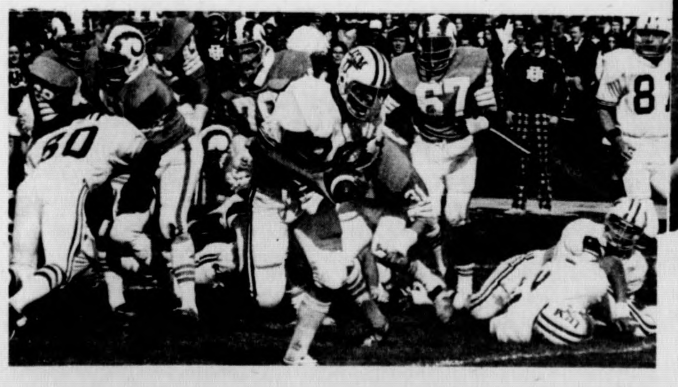
The hopes of UMass for a 10-1 season were cruelly dashed, when Rich Jessamy and his teammates were collared by the Vermont Catamounts, 25-14 in UMass' first home game of the season. The story of the game was Bob Bateman, the enemy quarterback who completed 21 of 32 attempts.





But the Minutemen came back, slowly but surely, after the Vermont debacle. Against Boston University, the MacPherson-men upended the Terriers in a yawner 21-14, as Ron Harris (42) almost broke a punt return for a long gainer. In the photo on the left, Jim Torrance (30) is shown breezing into the Rhode Island end zone on a 5-yard touchdown carry that led UMass to a 17-7 win over the Rams, the game which saw the fullback gain 147 yards.

Football News

The game between MAC and Storrs Agricultural College which was played on campus Nov. 6 resulted in a victory for the home team by a score of 36-0. Great interest was manifested in the contest because of it's being the first game that Aggie has played in the state college series. The students were agreeably surprised by the good showing made by the team.

Aggie Life Nov. 17, 1897

That was the first shot fired in the annual Yankee Conference Tong War. This Saturday the Minutemen meet the Huskies of UConn for the 45th time, (UMass holds 24-18-2 edge) with no sign of a peace treaty between the two intense rivals in sight.

It was the eve of the 1972 homecoming game against UConn, and the Minutemen's backfield coach Larry Pasquale was describing the intensity of the rivalry between the two schools.

"I've been in locker rooms here and at the Naval Academy," said Pasquale. "And this is just like Army and Navy."

In the tradition of the series the '72 game was the Yankee Conference showdown for the Beanpot. Characteristic of the series it was a blowout, with great individual performances dominating play.

Piel Pennington tied a Yancon record with 4 TD passes in a 49-16 UMass runaway. But UConn has had a turn doing the stomping as well. Remember the "horrid homecoming humiliation" of UMass in 1956?

Sigma Phi Epsilon went down to Storrs and stole the Husky mascot Jonathan IV. Three hundred UConn students stormed the Amherst campus in a vain search for their beloved pooch.

The Huskies took the field as slight underdogs to UMass on that fateful fall afternoon. When the dust cleared, they had handed the Minutemen the worst defeat in their 77 year history, a 71-6 shellacking. The Huskies rushed for 439 yards, and Lenny King, one of UConn's all time great running backs, scored 3 touchdowns in the first 5 minutes of the game.

Up until the mid 50's UConn was just another game on the schedule, and the Minutemen's traditional rivals were the Jumbos of Tufts. In 1952 the rivalry between UMass and Tufts had created enough interest to be one of the first college games televised in Boston. Tufts went off the schedule, and UConn became number one on the UMass enemy list.

From 1897 to 1952 UMass and UConn met every other year with the Minutemen holding a 14-10 edge in the series. Then the Redmen won their first game from UConn as UMass (changed from MAC) and first in the series since 1941 in 1954. They played UConn the week after they upset 4 TD favorite Harvard, the biggest win in the school's history. UMass halfback Dick Wright scored twice in the 20-13 victory.

After the theft of Jonathan IV, UConn behaved like a pack of rabbid puppies for the next 6 years. They took 6 straight from UMass, outscoring them 174 to 33. UConn won six straight Beanpots, with just one loss in conference play from 1955-1960.

The arrival of Vic Fusia as head football coach swung the pendulum in the favor of UMass for the next seven years. UMass ended the UConn winning streak with a 31-13 rout at a Storrs homecoming. John McCormick who later became a Denver Bronco, threw 2 TD passes to Paul Majeski.

Fusia did not taste defeat at the hands of the Huskies until 1968. The aerial arrays of McCormick, Jerry Welchel and Greg Landry were the chief weapons in Fusia's arsenal.

In 1964 Jerry Welchel fired TD passes to Milt Morin and Bob Meers, as well as kicking a field goal and four extra points, in a 31-0 UMass romp. Sophomore quarterback Greg Landry rallied UMass from a 7-0 halftime deficit to a 20-7 victory in 1965. He hit Milt Morin for a score, ran for one himself, and fullback Phil Vandersea bulled over for another. All three later played in the NFL.

The Minutemen were in their glory years now, winning five out of six Yancon Championships. Their success was an exact parallel of UConn's triumphs in the 50's. The Huskies hit lowtide with a 2-6-1 record in 1966.

Greg Landry ruined the Huskies homecoming in 67. He rushed for over 200 yards breaking Jerry Welchel's career yardage mark in the process. Landry zigged and zagged through the bewildered Huskies for TD runs of 39 and 74 yards, in a 35-14 UMass win.

Dick MacPherson wore the crown of responsibility at UMass for the first time in 1971. But in his own words "an injury plagued team can turn that crown into the thorns of responsibility." MacPherson stands 1-1-1 against UConn.

In 1971 the annual war ended in a 3-3 tie, the second straight contest deadlocked in the series. All scoring came in the last minute of the game. UMass kicked a field goal with 1:05 remaining. Bob Innis booted one from 37 yards out and 0:06 on the clock for UConn.

In 1972 Pennington and Schubert went berserk. Eric Torkelson went on a rampage in last year's 28-6 UConn win.

And that's the way it was.

Puzzle time: find the soccermen

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

It's that time again sports fans. You've seen it all before, in magazines and newspapers. Below all the members of the UMass varsity soccer team are listed, across, diagonally, and backwards. The names are listed only once. Here they are the way, you're used to seeing them, Butler, Hanks, Peloquin, Vercollone, Othman, Sormanti, McChesney, Fiske, Lungu, Snow, King, Macauley, MacDonald, Coburn, Banda, McDonough, Belcher, Cook, McKenna, Spyker, Vollinger, Long, Tagliavini, Ouelette, Parsons, Stanley.

The Collegian offers no prizes for successful completion of the puzzle. We feel that virtue is its own reward, and believe me if figuring out the puzzle is half as tough as putting it together you deserve congratulations. So sit down, grab a beer, or whatever you usually grab for and devote yourself to this name scrambling puzzle. And, of course, bonne chance, as they say.

COMMON STEREO MISCONCEPTIONS:

The More Speakers In A Cabinet The Better, Right?

Most people feel that the more speakers there are in a cabinet, the better the sound is going to be. Woofers for the bass, two or three midrange speakers, an array of tweeters . . . We've seen as many as 9 drivers per system. The fallacy in thinking "the more the merrier" is that the number of speakers may not determine the quality of sound.

It works like this: According to the laws of physics, it's impossible to get a single speaker to work well over the entire sound spectrum (20-20,000 Hz). So its divided up. Bigger speakers for bass, smaller ones for treble. But every time you add a speaker, you add problems. First, the cabinet must be re-designed to minimize interference. Then, at the crossover frequencies, where one speaker takes over for another, it's hard to keep the system linear (smooth) and well dispersed (so it doesn't "beam"). So increasing the number of speakers often introduces more problems than it solves.

A two-way speaker (2 speakers per system) can be a lot better than a three-way speaker system for the same money. For example, the AVID 60, selling for under $60, reproduces the audio spectrum better with only 2 speakers than other three-way systems we've heard costing over $125.

At Fred Locke Stereo we liked the smooth response of the AVID 60 so much we based one of our systems on it. The receiver is the brand new 441 from SANSUI . . . our most dependable receiver line. Plenty of power (12 Watts RMS/chnl, at less than 1% distortion) and good clean FM (better than 65 db signal/noise ratio). The turntable is from BSR . . . the 510 AX . . . a fine automatic changer with the ADC K7E magnetic cartridge included. And a pair of AVID 60's, the very efficient 2-way speaker with exceptionally smooth mid-range frequency response right where those 3-way speakers are likely to develop problems.

If you've been playing the "numbers," thinking that more speakers always make better speaker systems, it's time you played our AVID 60 system instead.

SOCCER: It boils down to today

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

> "The primary objective of our season is to win the Yankee Conference title." — Soccer coach Al Rufe.

That primary objective will be hotly pursued tomorrow at 11 a.m. when the soccer Minutemen take on a very strong Huskies squad from Storrs and the University of Connecticut.

Just as in most other sports UConn versus UMass has always been a big game in soccer. Connecticut is the defending Yan-Con champion and is also rated in the top ten major college soccer teams in the nation.

In the past five years of UMass-UConn competition, the Minutemen have gotten the better of the Huskies as they hold a 4-1 torious down at Storrs by scores of 4-0 and 2-1 respectively. The last two times that these teams met at Amherst the Minutemen again were on top in both contests by scores of 3-1 and 5-3. Every game that these clubs play against one another is always a tough one no matter how the score looks at the final whistle. Homecoming games have been good to the Minutemen as they have won the last two here and taken one away from UConn at Storrs. That kind of tradition is something that hopefully can be perpetuated this year and for seasons to come.

So far this season UMass holds a 6-1 record (not including yesterday's result at Tufts which was unavailable at press time). In their first two games of the year the Minutemen looked impressive although erratic as they shutout both Boston College and the University of Maine in away games. Both of these teams did not provide extremely tough competition, but nevertheless the Minutemen got off on the right start with two early wins.

In the third game of the season came some realizations. In their first home game of the year the Minutemen were soundly shutout by a very strong Keene State squad. In this game the Minutemen did not execute at all. Their passing game was almost non-existent as they suffered badly because they could not use their wings to move the ball. The team also did not play as a unit in this one and that was the big topic of discussion in the team meetings that followed this loss.

With a record of 2-1 the Minutemen went up against W.P.I. in their next contest and looked vastly improved. This game saw them completely outplay the Technicians and come out on top 4-0. Tom Coburn and Mo Othman shined on offense in this one and the goalies and fullbacks combined for the teams third shutout victory of the year. The team passed well and used their wings well in this victory something that had been missed in the previous few games.

Next came Boston University and again the Minutemen prevailed this time by a 4-1 score. The competition provided in this one was not that keen but a win is a win. UMass had trouble early though because they were peppering the B.U. goal but could not put the ball in the net. Finally when Othman came into the game he got the scoring shoes out and combining with Tom Coburn accounted for most of the teams scoring for the day.

In their next game versus Westfield State the Minutemen got their biggest win of the season thus far. They defeated the Owls 2-1 in a game that was not really played that well. UMass pulled out a victory in the closing three minutes when forward Tony King popped in a goal and the Minutemen were able to hold on for the win.

Rhode Island last week was another "win we'll take although not pretty," according to Coach Rufe as they beat the Rams 2-1.

This leads us up to tomorrow and UConn. This one is for all those beans. It's the game that the UMass soccer season all boils down to.

Find the players

By STEVE DECOSTA

You've all done word search puzzles, right? So, somewhere in this jumble of alphabet soup there are hidden the names of 43 (yes, count them) different UMass football players. All the first and second string players are listed, including some others that I threw in just because they sounded so good. (I couldn't resist Bob Zawada). Only last names are listed and you'll only find one Harris and one Cooke. (If you find more than one please let met know — it will come as a complete surprise). One name is circled to help you on your way. If you really want to buck the odds and go for the upset, see how many names you can find without looking at the list. The ball is down. It's first and ten from the twenty. Go to it.

Homecoming weekend born in '54

By PETER McDONNELL
Staff Reporter

It was twenty years ago this month, that the celebration known as "Alumni Day" changed its name to "Homecoming Weekend".

An examination of old Collegians and the 1955 Index provides a new look at what the weekend was like in the "old days."

In 1954, the University of Massachusetts was in its seventh year as a University and its 91st since founding. It consisted of approximately 3,900 students and 300 professors and instructors. It was in this year that the Alumni Association, through a "great deal of work, time and imagination" began a new tradition.

An editorial in what was then a biweekly publication, the Massachusetts Collegian, read "Homecoming becomes one of the big events on any campus because it is evidence of the fact that a univeristy is made up of more than the students and faculty who are now here. The turnout and enthusiasm for Homecoming is a show of strength by that part of the university that is wider than the limits of the campus."

Homecoming 1954 was preceded a week before by one of the most important football victories in UMass history. The Redmen's encounter with Harvard, their first with an Ivy League school, was supposed to be one of the worst mismatches in intercollegiate athletic competition.

But, nonetheless, a caravan of 3,000 UMass students, led by President Jean Paul Mather, drove to Cambridge and were rewarded with a 13-7 humiliation of the Crimson. This stunning upset was headlined in the sports pages of both Boston and New York papers.

The result was lust for blood in anticipation of the scheduled showdown with the Huskies of UConn, whom the Redmen had not beaten in 13 years.

Six thousand spectators lined the streets of Amherst as the Homecoming Parade made its Friday night march through the town and campus. The torchlight parade was highlighted by floats representing every dorm, fraternity and sorority on campus.

Seven hundred students participated in the parade which included the Redman Band, Drill Team, Cheerleaders, Drum Majorettes and Precisionettes as well as more than 30 floats.

After a young lady by the name of Blossom Cutler of Worcester was crowned first Homecoming Queen, the students gathered outside Curry Hicks Cage for a bonfire and rally. The crowd then moved inside the Cage and was treated to a jazz concert by Stan Kenton and his band.

Saturday morning was devoted to art and book exhibits and tours of the ever growing campus for the alumni. Later in the day, as 9,000 looked on at the old Alumni Field, the Redmen defeated UConn by a score of 20-13.

House parties and reunions hosted most of the celebrating that finished off a weekend the 1955 Index was to call the "biggest event of the year."

But that was in 1954, when the Collegian was calling for the censure of Joe McCarthy at the same time that a letter to the editor was praising him as "one of the few people left in America with the courage to call a spade a spade." A year when the country still had Richard Nixon to kick around.

The Honor Roll was published in the Collegian and No-Doz was advertised to fight book fatigue and the mid afternoon, 3 o'clock cobwebs.

"We Want A Child" was the X-rated movie and showed the "startling and unvarnished truth" of the birth of the child.

And the students were pushing for a Student Union.

Twenty years later, the University has grown to 23,000 students and become a city in itself.

The President of the United States has been appointed by the most tragic figure in American political history.

The sports seasons overlap now, and a UMass graduate is one of the smoothest basketball players in the world.

Women's Liberation and Racial Awareness are important aspects of education.

Students have found a more efficient way to combat the 3 o'clock cobwebs.

And the students are pushing for a hockey rink.

The University is a different place than it was twenty years ago and Homecoming is a time when the changes are quite distinct.

The rise and fall of 'boola boola'

By CARLENE MURPHY
Staff Reporter

Tradition, for many, is a thing of the past. The days of football rallies, bonfires and homecoming queens are history and a new life style has taken command.

The events which highlighted big homecoming weekends in the fifties are kept alive at UMass today only by the Greeks, and what does remain is a small portion of what once existed.

Exactly what factors brought about the demise of campus traditions are not known for certain, but the rise and fall of "boola boola" on this campus is a fascinating bit of history.

Surprisingly, Homecoming didn't become an established event at U.Mass until the early fifties. Prior to that, the only fall weekend of any significance was the annual "Amherst Weekend" of the forties which centered around "State's" football rivalry with Amherst College.

In 1940, 312 alumni returned home to jitterbug with undergrads at the round robin of fraternity dances. The alums continued to return to campus and in the early fifties Homecoming was established with football, floats and royalty to welcome them home.

A parade of 25 floats made its way through the center of Amherst, in October of .1953. Thatcher House won first prize in the dormitory float division and Theta Chi took the fraternity trophy.

That month, the Collegian took a sample campus poll which revealed that Eisenhower was leading Stevenson by more than two to one in the presidential contest. Students were political but they were also ready to rally.

Homecoming really bloomed in the late fifties and early sixties. These were the days when this tradition was at its peak. 1957 saw a bevy of 16 beauties riding on a float in evening gowns to spark the campaign for the Redmen.

The Homecoming of 1960 not only welcomed alums but a new president and a new football coach as well, and the festivities of that weekend were even more elaborate because of it.

In 1963, forty floats from fraternities, sororities and dormitories, entered the parade,Sandy Pierce was crowned Homecoming Queen and Milt Morin led the Redmen in a 57-0 defeat of the R.I. Rams.

And so it continued.....Homecomings got bigger and better. In 1965 Governor John A. Volpe was present to dedicate the new stadium, and a capacity crowd of 20,000 was on hand.

The late sixties introduced big name concerts to the Homecoming agenda and U. Mass has never seen anything like it since. There were names like Janis Joplin, Donovan, James Brown, Jethro Tull, The Rascals, Ray Charles and Peter, Paul and Mary. In those days Homecoming Weekend couldn't be beaten for excitement and first rate entertainment.

In 1970, things began to happen. Homecoming was still an event but something was missing. The Viet-Nam war was upon us and that intangible something that made Homecoming in the past was gone. Students were rallying, but in a very different way.

Some decided to contribute their float money to Vietnamese war children, others decided to crash the gate at the Cage during the Saturday night Homecoming concert and we haven't had a big concert since.

It's hard to say what brought about the downfall of Homecoming. It could be the scorn of tradition that was so popular a few years ago or it may be that the University is growing too large for tradition. There's also the strengthened women's movement that saw the end of Queens and courts.

The end of big concerts on this campus were also a factor and it may even be the apathy toward football that is felt by many that brought tradition to a close.

What is surprising is that the end came overnight. Tradition was alive in 1969 and in 1970 it began to fade fast.

In just a few short years, we have gone from forty floats to 8. In 1963 they gave out 12 trophies, and in 1974 we will have eight floats.

Whatever the reason, the light-hearted spirit of the fifties is gone. As students we have become more serious and politically active. We are involved in our work, ourselves and our environment, and it seems that there is no longer time for our school.

Some say that tradition is on its way back. With the increase in fraternity and sorority membership we may see more traditional activity being generated. But for now we have, lost a carefree spirit that was enjoyable and good.

After all, as long as it's not destructive, what's wrong with a little boola boola now and then?

In 1940, 312 Alumni returned to jitterbug with UMies . .

Modernizing of lawns is part of the modern day UMass. Landscape artists last week began resodding a large grassy area to the west of the towering Campus Center.

Greeks sponsor tonight's float parade

By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

A number of events have been planned by the Greek Area for homecoming weekend, which begins this Friday night.

They will kick off the weekend on Friday night with the annual homecoming float parade slated to begin at 7 p.m. Starting at the Haigis Mall, the parade will proceed down Lincoln Ave., down Amity St., down North Pleasant St., and return to Haigis Mall.

Along with the floats, this year's parade will include the mounted unit of the UMass. Police Department, two fire engines from the UMass. Volunteer Fire Department, the UMass. Marching Band, and the cheerleaders and majorettes.

Trophies will be awarded to the best float and the most unusual float. The floats will be judged by university officials and local businessmen.

On Saturday, from 11 a.m. until the start of the football game, everyone is invited to attend a tailgate picnic to be held at the North end of the stadium.

Then on Saturday night at 8, Alpha Phi Omega (APO), the national service fraternity on campus, will sponsor a Las Vegas night in the Campus Center Auditorium. In the past this has always been a very popular event.

According to Joe Agundez. an officer of APO, 1,500 people had to be turned away last year due to the lack of space. This year they have alleviated that problem by opening up all the rooms on the first floor of the Campus Center. Agundez claims that this will double the amount of space over last year.

An old time piano player will provide the atmosphere of a gambling hall while the local hustlers try their hands at black jack, poker, craps, and roulette.

Admission to the event is one dollar which buys you $1,500 of gambling money. Additional money is also available inside the casino should you run out. When the night is over, an auction will be held where this money can be used to purchase items donated by area merchants and businessmen.

Also during the night, the winner of the royalty contest will be announced. The contestant with the greatest amount of money donated toward his or her name over the past week will be crowned winner of the contest.

All money collected is being donated to charity.

APO will be receiving help from Gamma Sigma Sigma, the service sorority on campus, as well as many APO chapters from throughout New England.

Las Vegas Night is a sure winner

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

Alpha Phi Omega will sponsor its 12th Annual Las Vegas Night this Saturday starting at 7 p.m. on the entire first floor of the Campus Center, as part of this weekend's Homecoming festivities.

Frank Evans, Alpha Phi Omega Advisor, told the Collegian that they had reserved the entire first floor this year since they had had to turn away over 1,500 people last year due to room.

He said they hope to gross $5,000 for charity this year due to the expanded area and more available equipment.

Evans said at Las Vegas Night tables are set up with various games of chance — craps, roulette, birdcage, wheel of chance poler, black jack, and others. "We've tied up all the available rental gambling equipment in New England," Evans said.

Evans said that the one dollar admission charge entitles each person to $1,500 in play money which will be used for games of chance during the course of the evening, and for purchase of items at the auction.

Items to be auctioned are donated by area businesses, and range from bumper pool tables to a dinner for two.

The admission will be collected at the top of the escalators in the Campus Center Saturday night. Additional money is available for the rest of the evening at the same rate.

Evans said this project has enabled Alpha Phi Omega to donate over $5,000 to various charities over the past eleven years. Last year they collected a little over $1,000, he said.

This year, Amherst ABC -- "a better chance" home for children from ghettos, Appalachia, and Indian reservations, which exists solely on donations, will be among the charities to which the money earned will be given.

Included in the night's festivities will be the crowning of the winner of the royalty contest. Applications for this were accepted from anyone who wished to run through last Friday, Evans said.

Voting for this, in the basis of one cent equals one vote, with unlimited votes per person is occurring this week at a table on the Campus Center concourse.

Of the 10-15 people running, write-in ballots are also allowed. Evans said the person who has earned the most money through votes by 9 p.m. Saturday night will be crowned and given a dozen red roses.

Las Vegas Night will last from 7 p.m. to 1 or 2 a.m. The Crowning of the Royal person will occur at 10:30 p.m., and the auction will begin at 11:30.

Campus to be full of alumni droves

By DONNA A. DIODATI
Staff Reporter

UMass alumni will be returning to their alma mater in droves this weekend for Homecoming 1974.

Five hundred tickets to the UMass-UConn football game have been sold through the Alumni Office, according to Staff Assistant Brenda Rau. She said a total of 2,000 alumni is expected at the game.

Alumni activities began last night with the first session in a three-day program hosted jointly by the Alumni Office and the Chancellor's Office. The program, "New Dimensions," involves 35 alumni who were chosen by the Alumni Office for their leadership achievements, according to Rau.

On Saturday morning, doughnuts and coffee will be served at Memorial Hall (between Herter and the Old Chapel). Students, as well as alumni, are welcome, Rau said.

Preceding the game, a tailgate picnic for students and alumni will be held in the Southwest playing fields. A beer and wine happy hour in Memorial Hall will follow the game.

The Second Century Club reception at Chancellor Bromery's house will also follow the game, Rau said. The club is made up of alumni who have contributed $100 to UMass in the past year. Two hundred guests are expected.

The Classes of 1964 and 1969 are celebrating their 10-and 5-year reunions, respectively, this weekend. Seventy-five alumni (including spouses) will attend the 1964 banquet Saturday night in the Campus Center.

One-hundred alumni of the Class of 1969 will celebrate at the Colonial Hilton in Northampton Saturday night.

Except for the "69-ers" who will stay at the Hilton, most alumni are being housed at the Campus Center Hotel. Rau said that the Alumni Office had to reserve the rooms far in advance.

"This is a big weekend," she said. "There's a lot going on, and a lot of people coming to UMass."

HOMECOMING: Changed but alive

Smaller parties in, UM cops assert

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Homecoming activities have altered their emphasis from "frolic and fun in groups" to "smaller parties, but more of them", according to Captain Robert Joyce, of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

The emphasis on parades has also changed, he continued. Joyce said today there seems to be more people watching than participating.

"I can remember when all the dorms, and the fraternities and sororities had their own floats", he said.

Joyce cited instances when UConn used to "converge en masse" at the UMass campus during the homecoming weekends when they played the Minutemen.

"The people would come up in trains that arrived in town. Then, they would march into campus."

Joyce expects the weekend to be no busier than usual.

"In previous years, there were more activities and less help to handle the crowds. Now, our department has increased in number, so we have more help."

In conclusion, Joyce said that he feels the student and alumni participation in Homecoming activities has decreased.

David Johnston, director of the Department of Public Safety at UMass, had this comment: "We hope everyone has a fun weekend, and that they will observe the rules of safe driving."

Saul Chafin, assistant director of the Department of Public Safety added: "We would like to remind the students to lock their dorm rooms, especially during the day time, and the visitors to lock their car doors."

If assistance is needed, the Department of Public Safety emergency number is: 5-3111.

Contrary to popular belief, homecoming weekend is not dead. It still lives on this campus and is gaining strength within the fraternities and sororities.

In most cases, preparations for the weekend begin two weeks beforehand when plans for entering a float in the annual homecoming float parade begin. First, discussions are held to determine which houses will work together in building a float. Once this is decided, the two houses must decide on a theme.

After all the initial problems are finally settled, the construction process begins, which to a spectator probably resembles a cross between Romper Room, and a high school wood shop class. Crepe paper covers the floor while the sounds of hammers and saws fill the air. While Howard Cosell is describing all the action on Monday night football, people make flowers out of tissue paper.

Greeks sustain the spirit of homecoming in a number of other ways. Every year a number of alumni return to their houses to be united with old classmates. Talk ranges from the old days at Mass. Aggie to events which happened just last year.

The houses get football tickets in blocks so everyone can sit together. Many people can remember when the games were played where SBA is now located.

At night, each house usually throws a party for its alumni. To some, the party will bring back fond memories. Others will compare it to parties of their day and decide that they really are getting old.

To many people, this weekend is just another weekend of the school year. A lot of people will go home since it is a three-day weekend. Others will stay here and write a paper they have been putting off for three weeks.

Alumni office slates activities

The University Alumni Office has planned a large number of activities for the upcoming Homecoming Weekend tomorrow, most activities planned around the UMass vs. UConn football game on Saturday.

These include a pre-game coffee hour which will be held in Memorial Hall. There will also be the traditional tail gate picnic down by the stadium in the playing fields. After the game, the university community is invited to join with our alumni for a post-game happy hour, to be held from 3:30 to 6:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Also during Homecoming Weekend will be the reunions for the Class of 1964 and the Class of 1969. The Class of 1969 will be having its class banquet on Saturday night, and a Bloody Breakfast will be served on Sunday morning.

The Class of 1969 will be basing their reunion activities at the Colonial Hilton Hotel in Northampton. (See related article).

Concurrent with Homecoming Weekend is the Alumni's New Dimensions Program. During this program, alumni are invited to come to the university for a series of seminars and discussions with key members of the university community. In this manner, our alumni are brought up to date concerning the present problems and areas of concern within the university.

The Alumni Office is also planning a series of academic seminars to be held in November of this year. These seminars give alumni a chance to meet with university faculty for a discussion of current issues and problems.

Funds up 29 % despite inflation

States increase education funding

Massachusetts ranked 16 in expenditures for higher education this year measured against other states . . . 31st per student . . . 49th per capita. . . up 603 percent from ten years ago . . . 29 per cent from two years ago

By JACK MAGARRELL
Chronicle of Higher Education

State appropriations for higher education have increased 29 per cent in the past two years, but an estimated two-thirds of that increase already has been gobbled up by inflation.

At a time when the government's consumer price index has been rising at a rate of more than one per cent a month, comparisons spanning several years are misleading unless the dollar's loss of buying power is taken into account.

After the two-year increase is adjusted to take out the rise attributable to inflation, state support for higher education probably has increased not 29 per cent but 10 per cent.

Hawaii Down 9 Per Cent

Before adjusting for inflation, only one state showed an actual decrease in appropriations this year compared with two years ago. That was Hawaii, whose appropriations declined 9 per cent.

After the figures are adjusted to the loss of buying power, six states appear to have lost ground in the two years: Hawaii, down 22 per cent; Texas, down 6 per cent; Minnesota, down 5 per cent; Maryland and West Virginia, down 2 per cent; and North Dakota, down 1 per cent.

The five states reporting the largest two-year gains (with percentages adjusted to eliminate inflation) were: South Carolina, 47 per cent; Alaska, 40 per cent; Nebraska and North Carolina, 29 per cent; and Arkansas, 25 per cent.

10-Year Increase of 349 Per Cent

Over the past 10 years, the increase in state appropriations for higher education has been 349 per cent — but, adjusted for inflation, the effective increase was only 152 per cent.

The five states reporting the largest 10-year increases (with percentages adjusted to eliminate inflation) were: South Carolina, 426 per cent; Pennsylvania, 296 per cent; Massachusetts, 295 per cent; Connecticut, 286 per cent; and Alaska, 280 per cent.

The adjustments are necessarily conservative. They attempt only to offset the inflation that has already occurred.

They do not attempt to anticipate how much additional inflation will occur in the year which ends next June 30.

It is that uncertainty of future inflation which plagues budget-makers and policy-makers in setting amounts that will have to cover costs a year or more in the future.

Higher-Education Index

To indicate the impact of inflation thus far on appropriations for higher education, The Chronicle obtained from the American Council on Education an index specifically designed to measure national trends in costs faced by colleges and universities.

The A.C.E. index takes into account changes in faculty salary levels, salaries of non-academic employees, and prices of supplies.

It indicates that higher education's costs due to inflation went up 17 per cent in the two years ending last June 30 and rose 78 per cent in the 10 years ending last June 30. During the same two-year period the federal government's consumer price index increased 18 per cent. In the 10-year period, the consumer price index increased 58 per cent.

The figures on state appropriations were compiled by M.M. Chambers, professor of educational administration at Illinois State University and a special contributor to The Chronicle.

Decade of Contrasts

The appropriations for 1974-75 total nearly $11-billion, a figure which would have appeared astronomical 10 years ago when the national total was about $2.4-billion.

When this year's appropriations are adjusted to eliminate the inflation of the last 10 years, the total is a somewhat less astronomical $6.2-billion.

The 10-year increase spans a decade of contrasts in higher education: both the rapid expansion of the 1960's and the slowdown in growth of enrollment in the 1970's, the golden age of grants and federal aid and the later financial squeeze of tight budgets and rising costs.

During the 10 years when appropriations were increasing 349 per cent with inflation — or 152 per cent without it — the total enrollment in higher education increased more than 85 per cent and enrollment in public institutions increased nearly 120 per cent. Those enrollment increases occurred during a period when the total population of the country was growing 11 per cent.

$52.25 Per Capita

The national average amount appropriated per capita this year — based on the latest U.S. Census estimates for 1973 — is $52.25.

Within this national average, there is a wide variation from state to state, ranging from a high of $109.31 in Alaska to a low of $23.24 in New Hampshire.

To take into account differences among the states in ability to pay, per-capita appropriations for higher education were compared with per-capita personal income, using the U.S. Commerce Department's latest estimates for 1973.

The appropriations per $1,000 of average personal income varied from $18.42 in Alaska to $4.95 in New Hampshire. The national average was $10.36.

Average of $2,373 Per Student

Because states differ in their proportions of students enrolled in private and public institutions, the state appropriations were compared with the number of fulltime students in public institutions in each state.

The range of per-student appropriations was from $8,552 in Alaska to $1,162 in New Hampshire. The national average was $2,373.

Scholarship funds and institutional aid earmarked for private institutions amounted to at least one per cent of the state appropriations reported for 14 states, led by Pennsylvania with 9 per cent.

STUDENT POWER...

...UMass SGA 'demands' to trustees tomorrow

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

"The list of six demands will be sent out tomorrow to the Board of Truestees," Rick Savini, president of SGA told the Collegian, yesterday.

Savini suspects some action of response to the demands passed by the SGA last Wednesday night will be taken within a week. "A response is expected from either President Wood, Chancellor Bromery or Vice Chancellor Gage," he said.

Savini also said that the Petition Drive started last night. The petition will support the S.G.A. demands and will be sent to the Board of Trustees. Area Government people have begun canvassing in the dorms.

Savini said he wants to clarify that the student government and the Student Organizing Project (SOP) are two distinct organizations. "While the organizations are working concurrently, the distinctions seem to be significantly hazy to the students."

"The student government," he continued, "is moving to define its role in the UMass community. The SOP is working to organize students to the idea of a student union. The union was never defined as supplanting the student government."

It was rumored by sources within the student government that the administration was having a meeting this weekend to discuss the student actions taken last Wednesday.

While Chancellor Bromery was unavailable for comment, Vice Chancellor Gage said that if there was such a meeting, he didn't know about it.

...UConn students hit fee increases

By KATE STEINERT
Connecticut Daily Student

STORRS, Conn. — About 30 demonstrators picketed a University of Connecticut auditorium yesterday as President Glenn W. Ferguson presented his annual "state of the university" address.

The demonstrators gathered to protest proposed student fee hikes at the 15,000-student campus that would add an estimated $115 to semester bills of on-campus residents. Thirty-five dollars of the fee would be paid only once and would be refundable. It would be used to fund a cooperative bookstore.

The other eighty dollars has provoked the major protest. UConn administrators wish to use twenty dollars "to cover inflationary operating costs," five to ten dollars for capital expansion not funded by the state legislature, and a $55 dollar residents hall fee hike.

"If the University does not receive additional funds from a combination of sources, advances made at UConn during the last ten years will be lost," Ferguson said during the speech.

The fees have been proposed by administrators at meetings this semester. Protesting students claim they have not had a voice in the development of the fees.

On Sunday night, the Graduate Student Council (GSC) voted 14-4 to call for a student boycott of classes here to protest the proposed fee increases. The motion as approved by the council called for a general boycott of classes on November 7, the day before the UConn trustees are next scheduled to meet.

The motion passed by the council read: "Given that the university has not properly consulted with students who will be affected by the fee increase, and given that the administration has not vigorously pursued alternative means of funding, the Graduate Student Council calls for a boycott of classes on November 7 with the possibility of a subsequent boycott if the fee increase is passed."

"Furthermore, given that appropriate student feedback has not been sought, the legality of the fee increases has been called into question and appropriate legal advice will be sought by the council."

The residence hall fee is necessary because of increased operating costs, administrators say. They claim the increase is mostly in fuel oil for heating, which has virtually doubled.

...Wood will see Senate

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood said last night he is "conscious of a set of frustrations and concerns building up," on the Amherst campus, but he is not sure how widespread the concerns are.

In a telephone interview with The Collegian from his Lincoln, Mass. home Wood made these points:

—said he would appear in Amherst before the Student Senate tomorrow night to respond "in specific terms" to six demands for greater student control made by the Student Government Assn. last week.

—described the possibility of making student residence in dormitories voluntary as an economic rather than a legal issue because off-campus housing is now more expensive than living in dormitories.

—supported the concept of a student Legal Services Office (LSO) but said while the office should be free of administrative control it should not be principally concerned with suiting the University.

A controversy over the extent of student power over administrative decisions erupted last week when a special convention of campus-wide and residential area student leaders voted 60-24 to support a motion which read:

"That we work towards being a sovereign and autonomous body free from all legal, financial, political and social ties to the administration of this university."

On Friday, Amherst campus chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said in a Collegian interview that he feels the resolution, and six demands adopted with it, are part of unionization attempts by students on campus.

The Chancellor, who is chief administrator for the Amherst campus, said it is "utopian" for students to think they can have complete independence from other campus groups like faculty and staff.

Wood in the telephone interview last night, agreed to a reporters framing of the current issue. He said some students on campus have the notion that the administration is now working for the aims of students.

...Collins, Savini confer on unionization

By REID FISHMAN
Staff Correspondent

State Representative James Collins and Student Government Association President Rick Savini met yesterday to discuss student unionization and other problems currently plagueing the University. Collins, who is himself a former UMass S.G.A. President, said he felt that "students should have a greater part in determining the direction of the university," and that he and Savini should "start working on legislation" to that affect.

Collins feels that such legislation is important because "if the crunch comes, we haven't got anything to fall back on." In Collins' words, "the campus is too insulated with no input to the legislature... Higher education is the biggest industry in Massachusetts," and "the University could have a great deal more clout by keeping tabs on the legislature."

Savini said he feels "there's a valuable resource here in 23,000 students," and that "campus autonomy is rapidly dwindling, not to the state, but to Wood's office."

"I'm a member of the Board of Trustees," said Savini, "and I don't think I have any ay in the State Legislature. The shift that I see is what Wood wants, more control of all three campuses," stated Savini.

Collins continued, saying, "I'd want to have input from all components... When an approach is decided upon, it has to be considered what would be the effect on the other components, the university as a whole, and the community."

The meeting was also attended by Northeast Area Government President Chris Bunnewith, Tim O'Brien of the Central Area Council, and Student Senator Jon Hite, who is also Collins' UMass Coordinator and who was responsible for arranging the meeting.

Webster House in tough shape

By SUE ADLEY
Staff Correspondent

Mark Kaizerman, a student senator living in Webster House on Orchard Hill, told the Collegian yesterday that major maintenance problems exist in Webster that are causing serious health conditions. "Webster is one of the worst rundown dorms," he said.

"Generally," Kaizerman said, "the bathrooms are the worst part of the problem. On one floor, specifically in the bathroom on the second fllor east, cobwebs hang down from the ceilings, and the whole place is just filthy. There is a very bad odor that is the result of one toilet out of four that is working. In two of the other stalls, the doors are ripped off, and in the fourth, the door lock is broken. This is a co-ed floor, and these conditions have existed for over a week."

Kaizerman began to do something about the poor conditions a week ago by first talking to Webster's janitor, who did not give him the answers he was looking for.

He next called Paul Whiteman, director of the University custodial department.

"Whiteman and I then went on a tour of the second floor," Kaizerman said, "so I could let him see the filth for himself. I pointed out how the carpet in the corridor is only vacuumed once a week, and he said it was because of the budget cutback."

Friday, Kaizerman talked with George Reed, who is the University health and environmental safety inspector. Kaizerman said, "Reed told me I hadn't given Whiteman enough time, and that they had to be reasonable because of the maintenance budget.

In reference to the bathroom situation, he told me there were other bathrooms in the building for the students to use. I really couldn't believe he actually said that."

The Collegian contacted Reed, who said that he did feel that way about the bathrooms in Webster. "I personally couldn't see getting any more involved in the situation until the Physical Plant looked into it," Reed said. "I told Mark (Kaizerman) that if things weren't done by this coming week, that he should get back to me. It was only then that I was planning on taking further action by personally recommending that the conditions be corrected."

Richard Lannon and William Marren, both administrators for the Physical Plant, came last week to Webster to talk with Kaizerman and two members of the house council about the situation. Two days later, Lannon came back for a tour of the poor conditions.

"Lannon left with a list of things to be taken care of that was three pages long," Kaizerman said. "He told me to 'be patient', especially because they couldn't take men off other jobs."

Lannon would not comment on the issue.

Conference held to aid alcoholics

By KATHERINE BECHERT
Staff Reporter

A new drive to improve services concerning the abuse of alcohol among the University community is underway this Fall as a result of an Alcohol Problems Conference with various campus groups held in July, according to Dr. David Kraft of Mental Health Services, coordinator of the efforts.

"We've had the personnel but we haven't coordinated the efforts in the past," said Kraft, who joined Health Services on July 8. "Our goal is to have something consistent to offer to help individuals as quickly as possible in a humane atmosphere."

The conference, held here July 8 and 9, included representatives from 28 campus organizations, such as Health Services, Veterans' Affairs, the Security Office and residence hall staff. Two consultants, Dr. Scott Nelson of the Alcohol Drug Abuse & Mental Health Administration and Dr. Chadd Emrick, a clinical psychologist from University of Colorado Medical School, considered the alcohol abuse problem among students, faculty and staff.

Three results of the confererence, said Kraft, were:

1) There is a campus-wide problem in potentially harmful use of alcohol.

2) Coordination between campus agencies is necessary to eliminate duplication and share information.

3) Social norms of the community about alcohol "are not helpful."

"We're not talking about an abstinence approach. I think alcohol can be used in a responsible way," said Kraft.

"Most of us here are looking for our life-goals, our futures," he said, "let's look at our social attitudes about drinking." He emphasized the problem includes all segments of the campus — "Doctors have some of the highest drinking rates." There is a relatively small percentage of chronic alcoholics; weekend drunkenness and less serious cases are more common.

A student is considered short term when he-she comes to the emergency room at the Infirmary drunk, the staff helps to calm the student down, sleep it off in a safe situation and avoid medical problems such as drowning in saliva, which can occur if he-she is improperly positioned. "It's too easy to just focus on medical-related problems, but at least that's a start," said Dr. Kraft.

Long-term is "not a coercive thing" but only if a student desires it. He may be referred to someone who can help find and improve the cause of a drinking problem, with such services as academic of psychiatric counseling available.

Because "there isn't enough sharing of resources" on campus to deal with the problem, Dr. Kraft intends to take time to define needs and share present resources before deciding on new plans. No new staff will be needed although there is a possibility of outside funding for new programs not yet decided.

Bode wows full house at Thompson Hall

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

"Good evening, UMass people, I'm here to turn your minds into mush" was one of National Lampoon cartoonists' Vaughn Bode opening lines before an audience which filled the seats, aisles and almost every square foot of concrete floor space in the auditorium of Thompson Hall Thursday night.

Well informed of the classic UMass objects of satire by eager members of the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program, Bode used this material in the manner of a stand-up comedian before moving into his forte, the naration of slides of his cartoons.

History of UMass — "The UMass forefathers were Farm derelicts and used silo dealers"; the curriculum consisted of "cows, corn and swamp".

Present swamp— "Southwest is sinking into the swamp at the rate of three stories a year."

Library — "The library is a postlumous dedication to Sigmund Freud". "It's the world's longest library" he added that it was a massive dildo erected by an Argentine architect who built bunkers for the losers during the war.

Fine Arts Center -- "chunk" "scum pond" good for "alumni money orgies". He said all the doors and windows should be cemented, converting it into a "low profile aesthetic monument".

Avante garde School of Ed. — "they give 15 credits for teaching Minutemen dropouts to blow up basketballs". He said 15 credits can also be earned for "collecting cow paddies to grind up for pulppaper for the always eager Collegian".

Bluewall — "Watch jock bartender eat bar while 2000 drunk UMies urinate on pinball machines"

After he finished his UMass oriented grandstanding, the overhead lights went out, the slide projector went on and Cheech Wizard, the Nationally Lampoon famous cartoon lizard, whose body from the kneecaps up is covered by an enormous conical hat, traveled through space from the slide projector to the screen on the stage.

Bode narrated the crawling color slides in a W.C. Fields voice, occasionally becoming so excited that fountains of saliva would issue from his mouth onto the microphone.

Vaughn said he was so pleased with UMass that he's going to make a suggestion to the National Lampoon to run a story about us. He predicted that UMass is on the verge of greatness, as heralded by the library.

He indicated that he felt intense psychic energy being generated by the UMass campus.

Co-ops on campus?

As part of its program to develop a student union on campus, the Student Organizing Project (SOP) is undertaking a survey of student preferences concerning cooperatives and other alternative student-run businesses. The survey will seek to determine what co-ops students see as most desirable, how these institutions should be run, and what skills individual students possess that could be of value to student-run co-ops.

Spokesmen for the SOP say a file of student skills will be kept to refer students to jobs which may arise in the Campus Center complex.

Copies of the survey are avilable at the Student Organizing Project office in room 428 A of the Student Union Building. Organizers request completed surveys should be returned to the Project office before November 5.

Feminist asst. prof involved, innovative

By DONNA A. DIODATI
Staff Reporter

Dr. Ula K. Motekat is a whirlwind of involvement and a feminist who works at it.

The SBA assistant professor of accounting was recently named to a third term as editor of The Woman CPA, a professional quarterly of the American Woman's Society of CPA's and the American Society of Women Accountants.

Dr. Motekat's roster of ongoing activities is overwhelming, as this reporter discovered.

Her curriculum vitae alone (the professional's summary of her-his training, experience, and accomplishments) covers four pages.

She's on the executive board of the Council for Women in Massachusetts Public Higher Education; chairperson of the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women, of which she has been a member for three years; and a member of the SBA Policy Committee and the Search Committee for the Dean of the Graduate School at UMass.

Sitting in her small, but orderly, office in the SBA building, Dr. Motekat said this about her editorial job, "I took over as editor of The Woman PA two years ago. I was associate editor for three years before that. Last year, I changed the layout of the magazine and started "Legal Developments," "Small Businesses," and "Personal Management" departments..."

While these changes are important to her, she said she is clearly proudest of the non-sexist language policy she quietly enacted in The Woman CPA last year. In the current issue, she tells her readers of this action:

"We wanted to see whether we could eliminate sexism from our writings without sounding so awkward that you would comment on it. If your non-response is any indication, we succeeded."

She said she thinks her readers will not object to this policy. "Things are changing all over," she said.

Ula K. Motekat was born in West Germany and came to the United States as a "war bride" in the 1940's. Her marriage ended in divorce and, in 1958, she entered the University of Cologne, West Germany, to study accounting and economics.

Having received her Bachelor of Science in Business Administration from the University of Denver in 1964, she earned her Master's degree two years later from the same school.

Dr. Motekat returned to graduate school after working as an accountant in Colorado and West Germany for 12 years.

DR. ULA K. MOTEKAT

"I got out of public accounting because of the hassles I faced as a woman in business. I was overlooked for promotions I was perfectly qualified for. So I decided to get into teaching. There's less discrimination in academia," she said.

She received her doctorate two years ago from the University of Colorado, where she taught for three years. She joined the UMass faculty in 1969.

Currently, she instructs courses in financial reporting and international accounting.

Applying her innovative talents to the SBA curriculum, Motekat joined Dr. Mary Lou Bryant of the Mangement Department in organizing a trip to several European trading centers last January. Twenty-one students participated in the 18-day International Business study which is well on its way to becoming a regular course. Plans are now being made to repeat the trip next January.

When she's not planning trips or chairing committees, Dr. Motekat works on the advanced accounting textbook she and colleague Richard H. Simpson are writing. Why?

"Frankly," she said, "I don't like the books available... and ours is not going to be sexist..."

What does this whirlwind of involvement do with her free time (if she has any)? Why she acts to alleviate the discrimination she faced and other women still face in the business world.

"My hobby is writing nasty letters to politicians, publishers, and employers who use sexist language," she says, half-jokingly. "Hopefully, I'm making more people socially aware."

Injecting a note of optimism for the future, she said, "Women are becoming more and more accepted in accounting. Ten per cent of our seniors are women; next year, it'll be 14 per cent. The fact is accountants are in demand. Once women make up 20 to 30 per cent of middle and upper management, discrimination will be lessened. Businesses couldn't afford to have them all quitting. "...My goal is to see women achieve total equality." And if Ula K. Motekat has her way, that day isn't far off.

Tenants association dissatisfied

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

Most tenants of the University and the Lincoln married students apartments are foreign students. They are forced to live in university housing because of scholarship and assistantship dependencies and now the rent is going up.

Says on tenant who preferred not to be identified, "Foreign students have a tighter budget than American students." All of the foreign students interviewed preferred to remain anonymous and only 2 of 17 students are withholding their rent. "They dare not complain for fear that their visas will be denied," a publicity release of the Tenant Association said.

None of the students interviewed considered the rent increase grossly unfair. The new tenant rental rate will be $130 for a one-bedroom apartment and the new rental rates for current tenants will be $119. Says one married tenant who is withholding payment, "The rent is well below the outside market rates. It's very reasonable and when it was $108 it was super good. But we are objecting to the increase on principle." The reason for the increase is wrong."

The university housing office has increased the rent on University and Lincoln apartments because North Village apartments are not breaking even. A graduate student tenant complains, "North Village is in the red. Why raise our rent? Why not lower the North Village rent to get more occupants?"

A representative of foreign students in the Tenants Association explains why occupancy is so low. "When I was looking at North Village Apartments, rents were $165 for a one-bedroom and $180 for a two-bedroom. That was no different than other non-university apartments. I understand that there are some structural errors. In summer they heat up like a furnace and there is no air-conditioning. North Village is in such bad shape that there are low occupancies."

The same student would like to pay rent but explains, "University and Lincoln are in the black. Why lump them all together? The increase is reasonable but why force us to pay for the North Village losses?" I did try to pay rent but the cashier at Whitmore wouldn't accept it. She said this thing wasn't settled yet." Now he's withholding rent.

A recent Tenants' Association publicity release states. "We assert our right to arbitration, to the right to determine how much we pay and how it is used. It is our money, and our lives, and we will determine their courses."

UConn's proposed budget was recommended cut $4.5 million by the Connecticut Commission for Higher Education earlier this fall, but the University decided to push for the full amount from the state legislature anyway.

UConn President Ferguson says the additional fees are necessary to maintain the same level of programming, not for increases.

"Society is not going to pay the total cost of higher education, and the trend at Universities across the country is to ask students for funds," he said at a recent press conference.

JS controversy still unsettled

By JIM GIBBONS
Staff Correspondent

The controversy surrounding the Journalistic Studies program remains unresolved after the October 21 meeting of the English Department.

With only 31 members of the 107-member faculty present, the department voted to return the problem concerning requirements for journalism majors to the Undergraduate Studies Committee (USC).

The motion to send the matter to USC was offered by Professor Charles Moran who said he felt that USC had jurisdiction in all matters involving curricular regulations within the department.

USC is not expected to file its report for consideration until sometime in December. The Committee is the same one that approved the May 15 action, now in dispute.

The Moran motion came on the heels of a motion by Dr. Dario Politella that sought to overturn previous action by a 17-13 vote of the Department, last May, when the journalism major had been restricted to a single track with English.

For more than 200 years, journalism majors had been able to choose a dual track with any department in the University which would accept them, according to Politella.

The action to confine journalism students to a single track major in English had been proposed at the meeting by Professor Howard Ziff, director of the Journalistic Studies program. He is quoted as having said that he considers a journalist to be "a man of letters", and that literature, therefore, was his most important discipline.

Ziff also said at the May meeting that administering a dual track major was "impossible."

Politella has protested that upsetting the long-standing liberal requirements for journalism majors is a return to what he terms "elitism" in higher education. "I am also concerned by the manner in which the single-track proposal had been stonewalled through a department meeting when no quorum had been established," he said.

Adding that he believes the existing mechanism for student input for decisions affecting their future should be applied, Politella pointed out that an English Department Undergraduate Committee (EDUC) was established for "precisely that purpose," several years ago.

"As a matter of fact," Politella said, "the English department was a pioneer during the 'troubles' of the Sixties, to encourage student participation in governance."

The Politella proposal which now rests in the hands of the Department's Undergraduate Studies Committee is in 3 parts.

A. The Journalistic Studies major of the Department of English (should) be established as a dual-track major requiring 15 credit hours of JS-related courses, plus whatever course requirements may be negotiated by individual students with departments, University-wide, which agree to a dual major with Journalism.

B. (That) the participating department of the student's choice shall certify that the student has satisfied the second-track requirement.

C. (That) administration of the dual-major program, overall, shall be by faculty advisers of the English Department's Undergraduate Studies Office."

Meanwhile, reactions of students to the restrictions imposed by the action of May 15 have been vocal in opposition. The Collegian's recent reports indicate students believe the present restrictions to be "unreasonable."

In offering what is, in effect, a motion to reconsider the May 15 action of the English Department, Politella says that his proposal intends to correct the action that denies "freedom of choice which has been in the best tradition of a liberal education that the Department has fostered at the forefront of academic progress for the last decade.

"To deny students this liberty on the grounds of adminstrative expedience and the narrow concept of the journalist as a 'man of letters' is to deny the process of higher education itself," Politella said.

Wood interview

Wood said the function of an administration is to operate "so that somebody who wants or needs something gets a straight answer."

"The real question for an administrator is if when a student is clear about what he wants, there is some way for him to achieve it," Wood added.

"What I am not sure about is whether this is widespread concern about the state of the University...or whether this is a set of particularly concerned students," he added.

Later, Wood said the principle function of an administration is to solve problems by discussion, not through recourse to "Roberts Rules of Order and process and law."

"What I see now are some people who want some definition with no ambiguities," Wood said, adding that if the students' relationship to the Trustees is clearly defined, it might not be to the advantage of students.

Signs 22 bills into law

Ford repeals 'no-knock' law, Formosa resolution

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford signed 22 bills into law yesterday including measures repealing the controversial "no-knock" drug raid law, expanding Congressional control over exports of nuclear materials, and ending the nation's military commitment to defend Formosa and the Pescadore Islands.

Others rescinded the mandatory automobile seat belt-ignition interlock requirement and provided a new commitment to the development of solar energy.

The 22 bills were among 36 that have been awaiting Ford's action since Congress began its election-period recess Oct. 18.

Adopted in 1970, the "no knock" laws allowed federal drug agents to enter a dwelling without notice after obtaining a court order. The laws were intended to prevent drug traffickers from getting rid of evidence while agents were stalled off at the door, but address mistakes led to terrorized citizens and shootouts so Congress voted repeal.

Ford also signed a bill which gives Congress the power to approve or disapprove the sale or gift of nuclear materials to foreign countries.

The nuclear export bill was initiated after then-President Richard M. Nixon promised Egypt and Israel nuclear power plants following his visit to the Middle East earlier this year.

Ford also signed an authorization bill for the State Department and the United States Information Agency which carried an amendment repealing the 1955 Formosa resolution.

The 1955 resolution had authorized the President to use the U.S. armed forces to protect Formosa and the Pescadores Islands in the Formosa Straits against attack from mainland China.

Among others signed yesterday were measure to:

—Establish a solar energy coordination and management project that will conduct research and demonstrate the commercial use of several solar energy technologies.

—Initiate a foreign investment study act by the Departments of Commerce and Treasury to determine direct foreign and portfolio investment in the United States.

—Authorize an additional $14 million for administrative expenses of the U.S. Railway Association and extend reporting dates of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act in the northeast corridor for 120 days beyond the present Oct. 29 deadline.

Kissinger promises aid to India without political interference

NEW DELHI, India — Henry A. Kissinger lectured India, the newest member of the atomic club, on the perils of nuclear proliferation, then promised yesterday to help the hungry nation without interfering politically.

The speech to the Indian Council on World Affairs capped a busy day of reconciliation with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government. The American secretary of state also signed an agreement to set up a joint commission for cooperation in education, science and culture.

Afterward U.S. Ambassador Daniel Patrick Moynihan told reporters that Ford has agreed to visit India, though no date has been set. Moynihan said it would not be added to Ford's forthcoming trip to Japan.

Mrs. Gandhi suggested in an interview published just hours before Kissinger arrived that the United States has only a marginal interest in India.

But she said yesterday at a brief news conference:

"With any two countries, any two individuals, things go up and down, but over-all, relations with the United States are good." Sitting beside her, Kissinger interjected:

"I agree with that completely. Relations are on the way up."

In his speech, Kissinger acknowledged that relations between the world's two largest democracies have tended "to oscillate between high expectations and deep suspicion."

The low point was in 1971, during the India-Pakistan war, and Kissinger said: "We faced these differences candidly. That crisis is now behind us."

His audience of businessmen, professionals and intellectuals interrupted the secretary several times with applause. But about 70 young persons outside shouted "Kissinger, go back" and waved their fists as he arrived and left the auditorium.

The secretary mentioned to the council India's explosion of a nuclear device on May 18, which it said was for peaceful purposes, and noted Mrs. Gandhi's promises not to develop nuclear weapons.

The blast made India the sixth country with nuclear capabilities. New Delhi has not signed the 1968 nonproliferation treaty because it says the treaty discriminates against countries without the bomb.

"A world in which an ever-increasing number of nations possess nuclear weapons vastly magnifies the risk of both regional and global conflict," he said. "And proliferation complicates, if it does not inhibit, international cooperation in the peaceful uses of the atom."

PLO will get control of liberated land

RABAT [UPI[— A special committee of the Arab summit conference broke a three-day deadlock between Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organization yesterday and ruled that the PLO will be responsible for any Palestine land liberated from Israeli occupation, a conference spokesman said.

Basically, the formula was a diplomatic victory for guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat who had been waging a bitter fight for recognition of the PLO's top role in the settlement of the Palestine problem, sources said.

It also amounted to a rebuff to the United States, according to some sources.

Moroccan Information Minister Ahmed Taibi Benhima said a formula specifying PLO's leading role had been worked out by the special seven-party conciliation commission set up early Monday to end the feud between the PLO and Jordan over who shall administer territories that Israel may evacuate.

"All the difficulties that had faced the conference have been resolved." Benhima said.

The conciliation committee, headed by summit chairman King Hassan of Morocco, included Arafat, Jordan's King Hussein, Presidents Anwar Sadat of Egypt, Houari Boumedienne of Algeria, Hafez ASsad of Syria and King Faisal of Saudi Arabia. Benhima said the compromise has been submitted to the summit plenary session for formal endorsement.

Fuel crisis predicted if coal strike occurs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Government energy experts believe a coal mine strike this winter would trigger a worse fuel crisis than last year's oil embargo, according to a memo made public yesterday by a public interest group.

The threat of a coal mine strike loomed as negotiators for the United Mine Workers Union and the Bituminious Coal Operators Association bargained yesterday on economic issues. Their present contract, covering 70 per cent of the nation's coal, expires Nov. 12.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest quoted from a memo written by the Federal Energy Administration's coal committee last Oct. 11 saying "a coal strike would produce more severe conditions that the oil embargo of last winter ... there is no way in which all operations dependent on coal could be continued during a strike after existing stocks are exhausted."

It further quoted the memo as saying up to 80 per cent of coal production could be halted by a strike; steel production would be cut by 25 per cent, and there could be "serious power shortages in some areas of the country within five weeks" as coal stockpiles are used up.

To address World Food Conference

Increased food production stressed by Butz

NEW YORK [AP] Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz said yesterday he would stress the Ford administration's commitment to increased food production to other nations at the World Food Conference beginning next week.

However, Butz told a gathering of frozen food industry executives here that he was worried the conference Nov. 5-16 in Rome would spend too much time on "how to divide up what we've got" rather than how to increase production.

"We've got to increase production, and you do it through incentives," the secretary said at the annual meeting of the American Frozen Food Institute, a trade group.

Butz said he hoped the international conference would result in guidelines for increasing production, managing reserves and providing more equitable distribution of world food relief. America, he said, has been shouldering a disproportionate share of the food distribution burden.

The secretary said the goal of full production was a complete turnaround from past policies favoring price supports to farmers for not producing feed grains and other commodities.

"Let a farmer get his incentive in the market place — not by government edict," he said.

Since he took over as secretary three years ago, Butz said, government payouts to farmers have dropped from about $4 billion a year to "something under" a half-billion dollars a year.

Butz said he could give no encouragement to the consumer about prices, suggesting that as long as there was rising inflation, food prices would continue to increase.

He said cutting exports would reduce prices in the present term but not in the long run.

AMA contributes extra money to legislators who support them

WASHINGTON [AP] — American Medical Association's national political arm has donated nearly twice as much money recently to Senators and House members sponsoring health insurance legislation favored by the AMA as it has to congressmen not sponsoring the bills.

The American Medical Political Action Committee gave $78,500 to the re-election campaigns of 43 Senators and House members supporting the AMA's "Medicredit" plan.

But it sent only $42,500 to the campaigns of 28 nonsponsors, according to records on file with the House and Senate.

The contributions were distributed between Sept. 9 and Oct. 14.

The latest reports reflect a continuation of the AMA's pattern of heavy political spending, tilted in favor of those who have backed the AMA version of national health insurance.

According to a tabulation by The Washington Post, the AMA's national arm and its 38 state and local committees have donated $1.5 million to more than 300 congressional candidates in the nearly two years since the 1972 elections.

The Post calculated that 223 members of the House have received AMA donations, or better than half its members.

It said these included 114 House sponsors of "Medicredit." Seven Senate sponsors also have received donations, the Post said.

The most recent wave of donations to Medicredit sponsors ranged from $500 to $5,000, but most were between $1,000 and $3,000.

The organization also contributed heavily earlier in the year to the campaigns of 10 members of the House Ways and Means Committee, which has responsibility for the health insurance legislation.

Under the Medicredit plan, taxpayers would be permitted to deduct from their federal income tax returns certain costs of private health insurance company premiums. Persons with no tax liabilities would receive government assistance from private firms.

Slaughtered calves shipped to Honduras

DUBUQUE, Iowa [UPI] — Two trucks carrying 35,000 pounds of dressed veal contributed by protesting farmers left the Dubuque Packing Co. plant yesterday on the first leg of a mercy run to aid hurricane victims in Honduras.

The beef came from 551 calves donated by National Farmers Organization members protesting the low prices they are receiving for their livestock. The shipment was set up as an alternative to killing the animals and burying them.

NFO members had been expected to donate about 1,100 calves for the slaughter, which was carried out at no charge by the Dubuque firm, but only about half that number had arrived by the deadline Saturday. The slaughtering cost Dubuque Packing about $6,000, officials said.

Company spokesman Chuck Stoltz said another 50 calves arrived later and were slaughtered yesterday in preparation for shipment to needy families in America. Stoltz said he did not expect the NFO to bring any more animals to be slaughtered.

"I think that's about the end of it as far as I can tell," he said.

Oldest human fossils discovered in Africa

By The Associated Press

A prominent Kenyan anthropologist said last week that the discovery in Ethiopia of what are thought to be the world's oldest human fossils adds weight to theories that man existed in Africa as long as five million years ago.

Richard Leakey said the find was a "very significant step" forward but should not stir the kind of controversy that accompanied his own discovery two years ago of a human skull about 2.6 million years old. That skull was found near Lake Rudolf, in Kenya.

Mr. Leakey, director of Kenya's national museums, said he had expected the discovery announced last week by Dr. Donald Carl Johnson of Case Western Reserve University and the Museum of Natural History in Cleveland, Ohio, and Maurice Taieb of the French Scientific Research Center in Paris. They were the leaders of an expedition in Ethiopia's Awash Valley that found parts of human jawbone and tooth remains estimated to be 3 to 4 million years old.

Expulsion deferred

CORNWALL, Ont. [AP] — A resolution by the Royal Canadian Legion calling for expulsion of all American draft-dodgers and deserters from Canada was deferred Sunday until a conference next year.

The decision was made at the District G fall conference of the Royal Canadian Legion held here.

Larry Keen, chairman of the business session at the conference, attended by 450 delegates representing 67 branches in eastern Ontario, said delegates decided to forward the resolution to the provincial resolution committee.

Approximately 4,500 American citizens living in Canada are considered draft-dodgers and deserters by the legion.

Many of them the legion says, are employed in positions that Canadians might hold.

Ohio trial begins

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Lawyers for the defense and prosecution today present opening statements in the trial of eight former Ohio National Guardsmen on trial for the May 4, 1970, shootings at Kent State University.

The jury of eight men and four women will visit the Kent State Campus tomorrow to look at the site of the incident. U.S. District Court Chief Justice Frank J. Battisti instructed the jurors to observe the site because it would be referred to during testimony, but warned them not to take the visit as evidence.

Oil rules proposed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Federal Energy Administration yesterday proposed rules that would force some oil companies to rollback excessive price increases charged over the past 13 months.

The rules, which apply to imported crude oil, would also set ceilings on future prices.

There was no estimate of the extent of price gouging, but FEA General Counsel Robert Montgomery said, "There are definitely some violations."

The proposed rule would require oil companies to pay competitive prices for imported crude oil bought from foreign affiliates and foreign subsidiary companies.

Rocky makes loans

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Vice presidential nominee Nelson A. Rockefeller, whose generosity with money has become one of his major confirmation headaches, made public a new list of loans yesterday including two totaling $84,000 to former Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson.

Rockefeller said he had loaned $507,656 to 26 individuals and an unidentified number of family and New York state employes between 1957 and 1974. Neither his list nor the letter accompanying indicated any interest had been charged.

The new disclosure boosted to more than $2 million the amount Rockefeller has acknowledged loaning out during the past 17 years.

New fraternity to be "different"

By CARLENE MURPHY
Staff Reporter

The first fraternity to colonize on this campus since 1967 is in the process of homesteading its claim.

The core group of 18 men who are forming the 38th national chapter of Zeta Psi are led by Steve Ruggles, who says Zeta Psi will be "a different kind of fraternity."

The formation of a chapter of Zeta Psi at UMass is a positive indication of the resurgence of Greeks on this campus, according to Greek spokesmen. Ed Bowe, Director of Greek Affairs, says the establishment of this new fraternity "goes along with the growth trend of fraternities and sororities both locally and nationally."

In discussing the type of a house that he wants to see develop, Ruggles says he wants Zeta Psi to be "a well-rounded house." He says "We want to start with a clean slate. We'd like to change the Greek image by keeping away from any stereotype. It's going to be a well-rounded house dealing with things from intramurals to service."

The men who instigated the formation of the group held two meetings in the Campus Center early this month. They were primarily orientation meetings where potential members could meet and discuss the fraternity.

After holding a reception for the alumni in the area and gaining the support of these old "Zetas", a group of 12 men then traveled to Dartmouth to become pledges through the Zeta Psi chapter there. These 12 then pledged another six men, bringing the present membership of the chapter to 18.

Zeta Psi is an academically prominent fraternity. UMass is now joining schools like Cornell, Brown, N.Y.U., and Stanford, in supporting a Zeta Psi chapter. Bowe says that "Zeta Psi's chapters are primarily at top-notch schools in an academic sense. Many of the better schools in the country have Zeta Psi on their campuses. They tend to want to have chapters at academically strong schools. UMass is now part of this tradition and should be proud of it."

The group is looking into housing and is presently negotiating with a local realtor. They hope to move into a house in January so they can begin making any necessary renovations before the spring semester.

Anyone interested in looking into Zeta Psi can contact Steve Ruggles at 546-5443.

We'll then be heading northward through the Catskill Mountains area. After a luncheon stop, we'll reach spectacular Howe Caverns. Elevators will bring us deep underground, where we'll enjoy a tour of the caverns, with their many unique geologic formations, including an underground lake and the floor of an ancient ocean. An underwater boat ride concludes the visit.
The return trip will be over the New York Thruway and Massachusetts Turnpike, with a supper stop en route, and arrival back home is slated for about 8:00 PM.

Women voters oppose handgun sales

The Amherst League of Women Voters have completed their study of handgun control. The conclusions reached have been duplicated in Leagues across the State, according to spokespersons. The Massachusetts League of Women Voters position based on these studies believes private citizens should not have access to handguns. The State League supports limiting the sale and possession of handguns to law enforcement and military personnel

In the case of sportsmen an exception could be considered only if their handguns were used and stored away from home under controlled conditions.

Until such time as a ban on the private possession of handguns becomes law, the Mass. League of Women Voters would urge the following: improved and standardized licensing procedures: training in the use of handguns and the responsibilities of ownership: education of the public to the dangers of the handgun in the home: strict enforcment of the present laws concerning handgun ownership: and measures to encourage the removal of all handguns from home and street.

The League has offered their support to People vs. Handguns, a Mass. citizens group working to establish strict handgun controls.

Those wishing to help People vs. Handguns or desiring information should contact: Steve Sacks, Box 131, Colonial Village, Amherst.

MARINE OFFICER PROGRAMS
The Harrier
THE MARINES ARE LOOKING FOR A FEW GOOD MEN TO FLY IT.
Apply now for pilot training.
College men who join the Marine Corps Platoon Leaders Class don't do it for the money. They do it for the opportunity to develop their leadership abilities before they graduate. All the training is during the early or late summer only. Upon graduation you are commissioned a Lieutenant of Marines.
But the money can come in — and it can come in handy: besides pay during training you are eligible to receive $100 a month every month of the school year — up to a maximum of $2,700 during a college career.
The PLC Program also welcomes men who plan to continue on to law school. The PLC Program lets you continue your schooling uninterrupted until your law training is complete.
Your college education could lead to a rewarding association with the Marine Corps. The PLC is a great way to start. For complete information see the Marine Officer Selection Team that visits the University of Massachusetts on Wednesday and Thursday, the 30th and 31st of October 1974 to discuss officer programs that are available. The team visiting the campus will be located in the Alumni House (Memorial Hall) from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
Information on Marine Officer Programs can be obtained by contacting the Marine Officer Selection Office, 135 High Street, Hartford Connecticut 06101. Phone 244-2168 or 244-2169.

Selling out to academic inactivity

By DUDLEY C. PHILLIPS IV

Since entering the university as a freshman, the educational training has been towards inactivity. Students are encouraged, by "teachers" of various disciplines, to react to problems in a certain way. The student is rewarded. A way of deciding upon things or not deciding is being taught along with how to compile evidence and the history of scholarship. This is the classroom's contribution to helping us solve our problems.

We are taught, in most instances, that the first reaction to a problem in front of us, is to see how many ways it can be viewed as a problem; think about the internal make-up of the problem. Dig the problem. Our time is spent studying studies of problems, talking about the talk about problems, and imagining what it would be like to have such great problems. No one speaks of acting in a problem solving fashion toward problems at hand.

After a few years in the university, one might think that problems have some life of their own, apart from human activity, and whose solutions are somehow inaccessible. Problems have become so abstracted from endeavors which produce solutions that they are allowed, in the "world of words", to be a thing in themselves. We, as students, are incouraged to think about thinking about thinking with regard to our lives, our problems.

If these so called studies and their directors truly allowed some substance, an ability to act toward solutions; the university itself would come under study. The immediacy of the problems at the university, problems of human activity, would become the substance of problem solving. Because of day to day involvement, endeavors that lead to solution and action would be available for all.

There is an important distinction between inactivity and the constructive activity of thought. Inactivity is the practice of thought and study just for its own sake. This is the same withdrawal dynamic as "thinking about thinking about thinking". It has no problem solving value. The active thought thinks on present and concrete problems with an intention to solve them. When the inactivist is asking himself where the next premise is coming from, the active thought person will be considering the best action to take to solve and overcome his problems. It may be surprising to note that both are working with the same problems everyday. What kind of problem reaction do you have?

If I can convince you that a study or a mode and method of thinking should be adopted for yourself, that renders you politically and behaviorally inert on certain issues; I have overcome any resistence you might offer toward my plans or purposes. When students are reduced to thinking about thoughts without the substance of concrete issues or action, they are handled as a group, overcome as a critical resistence: Step one in becoming a nobody.

I am assuming that students enjoy life by acting in it, and to take away someone's sense of constructive action is to do wrong. There was a time when education, in the institutional pattern, was a step in problem solving. College was a place where one could get social skills which would better prepare him to determine his place in society. There were even suggestions on how to act better or have a more fulfilling life. It has been reduced to a briefing session on social adjustment with an academic apprehension of knowledge.

This same educational purpose has done its best to discourage any vision of student problem solving, active thought, or action. The whole thing comes off as a control technique directed toward keeping the student body impotent as well as its members. If the university taught real problem solving and action, one of the actions might be to reform the institution. The more the student body sees through the control techniques and becomes willing to act, the more precarious the position becomes of an administration which promotes student inactivity. Not that anything like that goes on around here.

Whatever your needs are as a student, do not sell out your ability to act and to face problems with solutions. Even though the university may teach ineffectiveness and inactivity, problem solving and creative activity are possible in everyday life. And even as a student... through struggle.

The controls require inactive, impotent students. We have been doing that part pretty well.

Letters to the editor

Lovers liberation

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on Pat DeBoard's October 23 letter to the Editor. All too often the male-female relationship does become a game we have to play in order to find intimacy and love. Basically, the idea is for the male to be aggressive and the female to be passive, but there are infinite variations, permutations, and combinations. This game or more specifically, failure at it, probably causes more misunderstanding, heartbreak, and hurt feelings than anything else related to love.

Although rare, real, honest love is possible and does exist. It is what practically everyone needs and is something all can have, yet, ironically, we often fail to realize or accept this. Some people fear they will lose their identity or freedom by loving. A love relationship can actually make a person happier with their identity and thus freer to be themselves. Some people feel they are not mature enough for love. But it is through love that we gain maturity. Those too selfish for love should realize that for the little they give they will get much in return. Those who are too self-righteous or idealistic for it should realize that no one is perfect or even close and that love hardly ever happens at first sight, as for example, in Romeo and Juliet. Lasting, loving, intimate relationships don't just happen; they are built by two people willing to spend the necessary energy.

The love that is returned is unquestionably worth the comparatively small investment. It is a beautiful, fulfulling, rewarding experience; something that eludes the grasp of even the best poets. Confiding in one who loves you and who you know will never hurt you is the best psychoanalysis available. Having someone who knows all your faults, fallibilities, and weaknesses yet still loves you can be very comforting. No matter what we derive from love, its presence makes life more bearable while its absence robs the world of a certain beauty.

Don't play games with this emotion, it will only lead to hurt feelings. If right now you're lonely, depressed, or simply unhappy, think about someone you like or love or someone who might like or love you and imagine what could happen if you were more understanding, tolerant, and honest. Forget vain pride and stereotyped roles, then reach out to touch that person, to care; they may be reaching back to touch you. Call it liberation or being honest or whatever, you have absolutely nothing to lose and the whole world to gain.

Clean the pond!

To the Editor:

Not many of us pass through this campus each day without passing by the campus pond. True, it doesn't look too bad but how many of us would venture to take a swim if they could? Now I am not suggesting that we make the pond the local swimming hole but why must it exist as the local sewage hole? As I walk by the pond many strange thoughts cross my mind. One rainy evening I imagine myself strolling by and the creature of the black lagoon submerges from its depths, in a blue wall t-shirt looking for some action! And thats what I am looking for; some action to clean the campus pond! It may be a nice reflecting pool, but that does not reflect what lies in its depths. I am not asking for an immaculate body of water, but a cleaner image of campus life. If the waste of the campus center cannot be completely obliviated, an effort should be made to beautify and keep clean what is naked to the eye. After all the university put the water there and it should take care of its effect on the campus. I feel the condition of the campus pond reflects on the image of the campus. So why make it look like it has something to hide. You know how this nation feels about cover-ups!

England anyone?

To the Editor:

I wanted to write a short letter at this time to both inform the community of the start of another year of the Oxford Program and to tell very briefly of the terrific summer I had this last summer on the Oxford program. One might reasonably ask how this program can exist in the middle of an inflation, but it does exist and it is the least expensive program in England in terms of what you get for your money. I looked at many programs while I was over there and we were without rival.

So Oxford flies again this year and it looks like the best list of courses in the decade that the program has existed. Courses are taught in tiny units on this program usually by the tutorial or independent study method. No class is over twelve people. It is a very different and very wonderful experience especially for a student at this university. All you need is a "B" average in your major and the major need not be English or Sociology. I went as a Bio-Chemistry major. The program is open to both undergraduates and graduates.

Transatlantic travel next summer in the height season, return trip, will be something like $700. The Oxford Seminar takes you there and back for $1010, which gives you tuition, room and board in suites at Trinity, a story-book cluster of buildings smack in the center of the most prestigious university in England. It gives you the most for your money because there is no profit.

If you're interested, drop into Bartlett 160 and look over this year's brochure. The courses are described in the words of the Oxford teachers. Students are accepted on a first-come, first-served basis. In two weeks applications will be opened to the other colleges in the valley. I urge anyone interested to look into it. It was the summer of my life.

The ugly Americans

Kennedy confronts Chappaquidick. Nixon curses out a photographer. Wilbur Mills plays it fast and loose with the "Argentina firecracker", and Mike Dukakis will probably be the next Governor of Massachusetts.

But in John Sirica's Courtroom the real ugliness of American politics is playing to a full house. The only seat not yet filled is waiting for Dick Nixon, but the former president is coyly toying with his RSVP.

Ehrlichman and Haldeman and Mitchell. Sounds like a firm of Wall Street brokers. Yet, the only thing that these thugs were selling was the government of the United States. Hidden behind their boy scout morality was trenchcoat hypocrisy. Last year before the Senate Watergate Committee, Ehrlichman defiantly told Senator Lowell Weicker of Connecticut that it was his duty to find out which Senators were womanizers and-or drinkers, and to inform his constituents of such moral faults. Weicker, who cannot be considered a western playboy by anyone's standards, just shook his head in disgust-filled incredulousness.

Ehrlichman, Ehrlichman he's our man if he can't do it Haldeman can. Haldeman, Haldeman, he's our man if he can't do it Mitchell can. Mitchell, Mitchell he's our man, if he can't do it, John Dean can.

John Dean? Sometime between the planning, the breakdown, and the coverup of the Watergate affair John Dean stopped being a team player. It was John Dean's three-day presentation before the Senate Watergate Committee last year that kept the interest in Watergate alive before the tapes.

People accused Dean of lying. Stories were leaked about his morality. There were rumors, ugly rumors, and one has to ask if any of these rumors were true, then why was this dishonest-ruthless-gutless-sexually perverted-self serving-gigolo working for the president in the first place? There were no answers coming from the White House. There were no contradictions to be found in Dean's presentation of facts. Richard Nixon was involved in the coverup, and according to Dean the sooner the President "came clean", the better for the entire country.

John Dean remains an enigma. Admittedly he was a clog in the coverup machine. Yes, he was involved in the obstruction of justice. Sure, he'll probably make a lot of money when he decides to "tell all", in a book. However, it shouldn't be overlooked that Dean was willing to stand alone and go up against the White House last year. Was willing to take the abuse that he must have known was forthcoming.

Ehrlichman didn't. Mitchell didn't. Haldeman didn't. Rather they decided to get up in front of the Watergate panel and deny any involvement whatsoever. They gambled that the truth would never come out. For years, Watergate T.V. specials will play their lies back to them. I wonder where the crime of perjury rates in the chart of John Ehrlichman's morality. Perhaps somewhere below drinking and above french kissing!

So now they sit in John Sirica's courtroom. John Mitchell, the former Attorney General knows quite a bit about Courtrooms. Along with Ehrlichman, Haldeman, Kenneth Parkinson and Robert Murdian, he is being tried for conspiracy regarding the Watergate affair. Mitchell, having lost a few conspiracy trials as the chief law enforcement officer of the land is about to lose his first as a defendant. That might be a record that cannot be matched, even going back to the Harding or Grant Administration.

Last week John Dean implicated all three of the top defendants in the coverup trial. At that point things seemed to take the tone of the post-war trials at Nuremburg. Now that the Ford pardon has taken away the threat of a prison sentence for Nixon, all of the defendants are unloading most of the blame on the former Vice President.

"I was lied to" says Ehrlichman, in what is probably his best attempt to seem humble. "I thought that I was protecting national security", is basically what Haldeman will say. You can bet your Shirley Temple Black doll that between puffs of his pipe, John Mitchell will think of something to "prove" his innocence.

At the Nuremburg trials, United States Representative Telford Taylor told the Nazi defendants that every individual must be responsible for his own acts. "I was only following orders", is not an excuse for illegal and immoral acts. It is doubtful if any of the defendants really care what Telford Taylor said; it just isn't their style.

So now the White House Five are on trial for obstruction of justice. While each of them take their turn playing Alfred E. Newman (Who me?), the case against each one gets tighter and tighter. No doubt, every person has a right to his day in court, but for this case, I am hoping that the special prosecutor's "win" button, shines a little brighter.

That's my bank

"Can I help you?" asked the pretty, smiling young woman behind the oak desk. "Yes," I replied hesitantly, "I should like to open a checking account and..." "Ah, yes, would you be interested in our 4.3 cents per check 600 dollar minimum balance with the blue and pink polkadot tint with your name engraved in baroque lettering..." "Ah, no, I..." "Or perhaps our exclusive VIP, gold engraved, Irish linen checks with your name and photograph in the right corner with a cupid and hearts border. Each check is only 12 dollars and 98 cents with a minimum balance of just enough to cover the cost of each book..." "Ah, no thank you, I believe I'll go elsewhere."

For an immeasurable duration of time, I and countless thousands of other people have fallen prey to the popular misconception that the only safe place for your money was in "the bank". Through a little maturity and some probing interest, I have come to the conclusion that many of these savings institutes are the principle bandits who have been robbing the general populace blind.

Several of these pretensive purloiners, in the guise of a bureaucratic institution have taken the small-time, classic "rip-off" and perfected it to an art form. The average bank customer is completely oblivious to what happens or what becomes of his finances behind the vaults.

Most business in the five college area plays for its audience: the students. In short, what we want to buy is up for sale. It is logical that a bank would adapt itself to the needs of the student in order to insure business interests. Students have no need for mortgage plans, long-termed loans, or colossal financial investments. What they need is basically safe storage for whatever money they have and a method of getting at it while avoiding endless red tape; a small, simple checking account that doesn't require four years of business school to interpret.

For clarity's sake I employ the cliche that "I couldn't believe my eyes" when I scanned through the local papers one day last week and found an advertisement for a bank that offered free checking, free travelers checks, free notary service, the highest possible savings percent interest rate allowed by federal regulations, overdraft protection, plus preferential loan treatment. I have always trusted my vision, but seldom have I placed much credence in an institution of this kind, so for personal satisfaction I investigated the Pioneer National Bank. I should like to state that this is not an ad; the bank has paid for its advertising (See Collegian) 10-25) in several periodicals.

The Pioneer National Bank is located on 328 College St. It is the first truly student oriented banking service in this area because what they have advertised is true. The bank offers an unlimited checking service with no minimum balance, free travelers checks; that is you only pay for the printing and not the servicing.

Another service is the NOW account (notice of withdrawal) and the automatic savings account. In these two systems you can transfer funds from your checking account into your savings, or draw checks from your savings account. In overdraft protection the bank gives you an automatic loan to pay off overdrawn checks. This saves money and embarassment.

It is understandable that banks charge service fees. There is an incredible amount of work involved when a check bounces. Every check is sent to the Federal Reserve Bank in Boston for processing. When a check fails to pass, the bank is responsible for paying it. In turn, whoever cashed it is notified for payment, and finally the author of the check. During this process it passes through a great number of hands; labor and postage consume the service charge.

How then can the Pioneer National afford to do this? The bank, according to officials, is in a sense losing money. Other banks, as it is a competitive business, will have to change if they are to stay in the game and the prices will go down on all scales. It would seem, then, that for the student, this bank is more than another local merchant. It is a community service and should be taken full advantage of.

FOR SOME REASON MARTHA, EACH YEAR THAT WE COME BACK TO U.MASS. FOR HOMECOMING, I FEEL MORE AND MORE OUT OF PLACE!

End the disgrace of racism in Boston

The following is a letter sent by the Student Government Association to the Boston School Committee, Boston City Council, Mayor White and Governor Sargent. The Collegian endorses the letter and insists the named parties respond to the demands listed:

We students, faculty, and staff of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst are appalled and angered at the recent events in Boston around enforcement of the Mass. Racial Imbalance Act. Since most students at this University come from Boston and vicinity the current racist offensive is very much our concern.

1. We support the right of every child to quality integrated education. Busing is an important first step to achieve this.

Segregated schools don't only hurt Black children, because predominantly Black schools in Boston are much worse than white schools, but they hurt white children as well by denying them access to children of other cultural backgrounds in the classroom.

2. The fight in South Boston and other white communities in Boston is not against busing it is against Black people. Busing to private and parochial schools has always gone on in Boston. The only time it became an issue was when it was being used to integrate the schools.

3. The responsibility for violence in Boston cannot be placed equally upon the Black and white communities, as has been presented in the media. Those involved in the "anti-busing" movement have shown that they will stop at nothing including violation of the law and open terror to sabotage implementation of the school desegregation plan. It is these forces in the white communities who have been and are the perpetrators and organizers of violence.

An open letter to Mass pols.

In addition, it has been the policies and statements of the School Committee as well as those of Presidents Nixon and Ford which have created the climate for racist violence. Ford and the School Committee have now openly incited this activity, and have completely abdicated any measure of responsibility for upholding the law.

We demand the following be implemented immediately:
1. That federal troops be dispatched to Boston in order to safeguard the lives and rights of Black and White children. It should be clear that these troops should not be engaged in an occupation of the Black community, but rather, should be used to enforce the desegregation order.
2. We demand that the School Committee begin to actively enforce the Racial Imbalance Act by:

.Ending their racist agitation of the situation.

.Enforcing truancy laws against the white boycott of schools.

.Ensuring that teachers immediately curtail the current "holding action": in the classrooms by proceeding with their course of work.

If the School Committee does not take these measures, we demand that they be charged with violation of their legal responsibilities to enforce the law, as well as the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution which guarantees equal protection for all citizens under the law.

The opinions expressed in this space represent a majority of the Board of Editors.

Stone seeks an end to increasing "busy work"

The Collegian thanks The University Bulletin for allowing reprinting of this interview with Dr. Stone.

Marshall H. Stone, who will be the first speaker in the Chancellor's Lecture Series Wednesday night, thinks that UMass has a long way to go to become a great university.

Stone, one of the country's leading mathematicians, said in an interview that the campus should define its mission, re-examine its curriculum, and end the "proliferation of busy work" that keeps professors from their "basic jobs of teaching and research."

Stone spoke during an interview with a reporter from the University Bulletin, the on-campus faculty newsletter published every other week by the University administration.

Stone's speech will be at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium Wednesday. It will be entitled "Quality and Change in Education."

The Chancellor's Lecture Series was inaugurated earlier this fall to bring the mission of the University to the public and to demonstrate that the campus has many brilliant scholars, according to a statement by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery made at that time.

Among other lecturers are internationally known author and UMass professor Chinua Achebe, and UMass philosophy dept. professor Robert P. Wolff.

"The quality of education needs to be greatly improved if we are going to be comparable to other great state universities and private schools," Stone said in the Bulletin interview.

"In many respects, we are over-organized and concerned with too many things beyond our basic jobs of teaching and research," he told interviewer Evelynne Kramer.

"Too many people seem to delight in the proliferation of busy work" and "nobody is willing to concede authority," Stone said.

"Every day there is some new evaluation form or document to be filled out." And to make a faculty appointment, "you have to deal with controls all the way to Boston."

Stone concedes that the size of the campus in itself has led to some of the problems, and he notes that the emphasis on affirmative action has increased the need for documenting the scope of the hiring process.

But the 71-year-old mathematician also believes that the campus should try to "cut down on paper work" and that equal opportunity will be achieved without any new laws or "elaborate devices" — just naturally in the course of events. Equality of opportunity, as an idealogical force, is "imbedded in the American conscience," he said.

Stone also says he has never witnessed discrimination in the academic areas of any institution he has been associated with. Although mathematics may be "a special case," there is no trouble getting a position "up to one's level of ability."

Stone, the son of Supreme Court Justice Harlan Fiske Stone, said he considered a career as a lawyer but decided on mathematics instead.

He's never regretted that decision, even though he is not optimistic about the quality of academic life in the future. "I think that academic life has deteriorated for various reasons. There are all kinds of attempts of people on the outside to tell us what we should do, beginning with students and ending with politicians."

The role of students, he says, is to study. At the graduate level, students need encouragement more than guidance and the relationship between students and professors ought to be "informal and democratic."

As for the state's politicians, their indifference, if not hostility, has complicated the university's striving for excellence.

Stone is known among mathematicians for his work in quantum field theory, the Stone-Weierstass Theorem, his representation theorem for Boolean Algebra, and the Stone-Szech Compactification.

Mathematics by its nature is difficult to discuss with people outside the field, Stone points out.

Workshop proposals sought by Center

Project Self is a series of workshops by, for and about women, and sponsored by Everywoman's Center at UMass. Spokespersons say they are currently soliciting proposals for the Spring '75 workshops.

The areas in which they are interested in offering workshops are personal identity, feminism, cross-cultural perspectiveness of women, skills, and arts and crafts. Workshops will begin in February and would run for eight weeks, meeting once a week for two hours.

The deadline for all proposals is November 1, 1974. Interested people should call Everywoman's Center (545-0883) for a proposal form, or drop by the Center to pick one up.

D.C. student workers to meet

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) and the Student Center for Educational Research are sponsoring a meeting Wednesday, in the Campus Center, room 903 at 7:30, for all Dining Commons student employees. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss with employees the formation of a committee similar to the Campus Center Student Employee Committee.

"Several dining commons student employees have come by the Organizing Project office expressing concern over the low wages and high cost of living," Alwin Schmidt, the student employee co-ordinator of the project said. "We hope that at this meeting a committee can be formed that will represent the interests of student workers," he said.

Under consideration by the Student Senate is a proposal to set a base pay of $2.50 an hour for all student employees on campus.

HOW YOU CAN SPREAD THE MESSAGE OF LOVE... THE LOVE OF CHRIST FOR ALL PEOPLE.

Have you ever considered the priesthood as a way to serve people? The Paulist Fathers are a small community of American priests. Progressive, searching, young and energetic, they form a religious family.

A Paulist is a man of the Spirit, a man of his time. He rejoices in the signs of hope around him and celebrates with the people he serves.

Every Paulist is a missionary: in the pulpit, or parish house, on the campus, in the inner-city. He communicates with the spoken word, the printed page, and with contemporary media. His mission is to all of America. His message is love; the love of Christ for all people.

'Ubiquity' played two shows last Saturday night. Roy Ayers on vibes told the story.

Brubecks, two generations of jazz

"Two Generations of Brubeck," who play with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra on November 3rd at Symphony Hall in Springfield, are exactly what the title implies - two generations of the family named Brubeck.

The older generation, Dave, is the jazzman who has been famous for over 20 years. The second generation, represented by three of Dave's six children, is extremely talented but not quite as famous - yet!

Twenty-six-year-old Darius Brubeck is fast receiving recognition as an important keyboard performer as well as a composer and arranger for both jazz and classical music.

Darius graduated from Wesleyan University where he majored in the history of religion, concentrating also on Eastern music and religion. His B.A. thesis concerned Scientology, the new religious organization of which he is a member. He did graduate work in music and religion.

Currently, besides leading the Darius Brubeck Ensemble and performing in "Two Generations," he teaches music theory and piano, and is conducting a course entitled "Understanding Jazz" at the Connecticut Center for Continuing Education.

Chris, 21, became deeply involved in music while a high school student at the Interlochen Arts Academy. He refers to those four years as periods of "intense creativity and constructive insanity." It was at Interlochen that he put down personal and professional roots that are active today, and formed the rock band that would eventually evolve into his own group "New Heavenly Blue."

18-year-old Dan Brubeck can't remember a time when he didn't want to play the drums. Born into a heavy musical environment, Dan certainly had his choice of instruments but drums were dominant in his thoughts. He was exposed to two of the greatest influences that any young musician could hope for - Joe Morello and Alan Dawson.

Tickets for the November 3rd concert are available at the door and can be reserved prior to the concert by calling the Symphony office at 739-4728.

Roach holds jazz jam

Professor Max Roach and his "Mobile Unit V" band will hold a jazz jam session tonight (Oct. 29) at the Lazy River in Northampton.

It will be the fifth Tuesday in a row that Roach and his band have played at the Lazy River. According to hostess-manager Diane Ranno, Roach has drawn a capacity crowd of 130 people for the past three weeks.

The "Mobile Unit V" band consists of UMass professor of music Max Roach and regulars Sulie Manhahim and Chris Henderson. After the group has warmed up, both professional and local musicians from the audience join in to jam at various intervals during the evening.

Manhahim and Henderson are teaching assistants from Roach's class "Jazz Theory and Improvement" (Music 219). Students from both Roach's class and other music classes throughout the Five College area often participate in these spontaneous jams.

The Lazy River is a combination restaurant and bar, located at 234 Pleasant Street, Northampton. The jam lasts from 9 to 1, and there is an admission charge of $1.25.

Piano solo planned

A recital of solo piano music will be presented by Estela Olevsky on Wednesday, October 30 at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The program is open to the public free of charge.

On the program will be works by Mozart, Beethoven, Albeniz and Prokofieff.

A native of Argnetina, Estela Olevsky made her concert debut in Buenos Aires at the age of eight and studied piano at the National Conservatory there.

Estela Olevsky recently returned from a concert tour in New Zealand and is presently a member of the Music Faculty at UMass.

County court

Rapes, drunks and a typical day in court

By ED SMITH
Staff Correspondent

You can tell something important happens inside from the entrance.

The Hampshire County Courthouse in Northampton just looks permanent. The grey stone pillars and the broad staircase leading to large wooden doors look like something final is going on inside.

But the real action begins with a side door. The District Court, where Amherst cases are held, is down a dingy corridor beside a small hall with a yellow tile floor. It's in the cellar.

The courtroom looks like a converted shower room. Steam pipes form a clumsy latticework on the ceiling. The walls are just as bad.

The judge's bench, raised two feet off the floor, lends an air of legitimacy. Behind the bench are three shelves of tattered law books. To either side of the bench are two flags — American and state. For these few furnishings it looks like a courtroom and not a locker room.

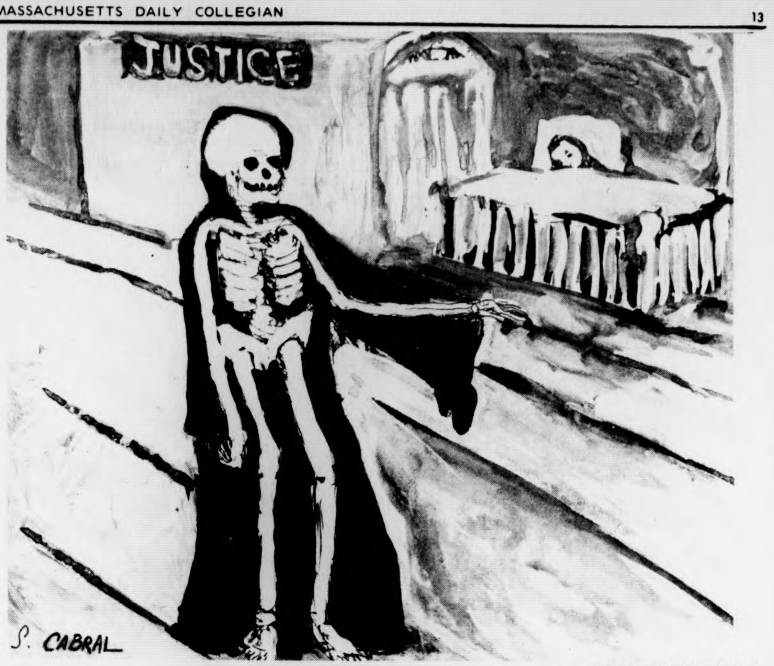
Despite its tawdry physical appearance, the cases which are handled in District Court have a certain drama to them.

After reading arraignments the parking tickets, the clerk of courts' begins to call off the biggies.

The lawyers, sitting on a bench to the left stop whispering among themselves and start to listen. The offenders, sitting on two benches facing the judge, are uniformly silent.

On a typical day recently, the first few cases the judge heard consisted of no more than private conversations he had with lawyers. The cases were announced, the lawyers went to the bench and engaged the judge in a few minutes of private talk. He banged the gavel and announced the disposition.

The first case which involved any open discussion was "Commonwealth vs. Albert G. Rose."



Graphic by Susan Cavral

Rose, a 27-year old from Wisconsin, was accused of drunken driving. He was arrested in the vicinity of the Kalihi Kai restaurant by two Amherst police officers who testified that they stopped Rose when they saw him swerving across the road in the 1974 pickup truck he was driving.

Officer Hobart, the Amherst policeman who said he arrested Rose, stood in the witness box and testified that he determined Rose was drunk when he smelled Roses's breath and heard him speak.

Rose testified he was by no means drunk.

"I had drunk two bottles of Heineken beer and a glass of Tia Maria, a coffee liquer, in the course of the night," he testified. He attributed his erratic driving pattern to the fact that he was unfamiliar with the power steering.

The judge, after thinking forty-five seconds, ruled the defendent guilty as charged. He was told of his right of appeal and ordered to pay a fine of $125.

What was surprising, from a novice observer's viewpoint, was that the case was entirely a matter of the police officer's word against Rose's.

Through the testimony, it was obvious that several people could have testified as to Rose's state of intoxication up to fifteen minutes before he was arrested. There was no such testimony.

Further, there was no testimony to the effect that Rose had been given a test to determine whether or not he had an alcohol level which would have made him legally drunk.

But that was small time.

Compared to Superior Court, the atmosphere in District Court is quite informal. You usually hear everything that is said, even without the aid of a microphone. Upstairs in Superior Court, the mood is much more formal. The room, five times the size of the District Court, has a vaulted ceiling,

The hassles of being carless

By SUE LUNTER
Staff Writer

"Hey Beth," the disgruntled UMie yelled to her roommate. "I'm running out of milk and instant breakfast. What the hell am I going to eat tomorrow? We're low on beer too."

"Yea Sue, I know," the roommate bellowed from halfway down the corridor. "We'll drive to the store today after my last class, OK?"

Sound familiar? If either you or your roommate has a car, it probably get's spoken every week. If neither of you has any wheels, it probably doesn't Inflation and energy crisis aside, it can be a real hassle getting around to campus and area shops without a car.

— —Actually picture yourself on a weekend without a car. You need toothpaste, food, shampoo and milk--at least you can get that at Munchies.

— — You're getting ready for a rowdy night at the Blue Wall. At eight, just as you're ready to leave it starts pouring rain or an unannounced blizzard appears. Unless you're a die-hard boozer, you'll probably retreat to the cold linoleum or cement corridor of your dorm.

Not that everyone doesn't have a car. According to parking office officials there are now 11,000 registered on campus. There are 12,000 on-campus residents. But many of those registered are owned by commuters.

And if 11,000 sounds big, there are another 1,000 cars that creep onto campus that aren't registered and have no official parking spots. That may explain why you can't find a space even with a sticker. People are on huge waiting lists trying to get assigned lots.

Having so many cars around causes administrative mess-ups of the first order. Last year due to computer delays, decals weren't immediately assigned. There was mass confusion and a lot of problems. In the midst of it all, no records of total registered cars were kept.

There probably aren't many UMies who don't at least have access to a car, but some wish they owned one themselves.

"I wish I had a car to go to concerts, new bars and restaurants," said Kerry Valicenti, an education major. The Webster resident said she would view Amherst scenery if she had a car to get around to it.

"I have no need for a car, but I'd like to have one," said Bob Higgins, a journalism major living in JQA tower. "On weekends I'd like to eat off campus and go to bars instead of the Bluewall all the time," he said.

But some students get along with roommates' cars, or suffer without one.

"My roommate has a car, but he's only been in it two or three times since the semester began," said Eddie Kasila, a resident of Kennedy Tower. Kasila said he doesn't need a car, except when he goes home on weekends.

Ann Murphy, an undeclared major living in Van Meter is another UMie who doesn't need a car. "I have no need for a car," she said. "When I want to go to a bar or something I get together with my friends. The rest of the time I walk or take a bus."

Next time you're waiting for a late bus or cycling to a class remember — — you're not the only one!

UMass: Colder but maturing

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Writer

"Homecoming means absolutely nothing to the University," was the way one alumnus put it. "The University is much colder now."

For thirty of the thousands of graduated UMies who came back to Amherst for homecoming weekend, Saturday afternoon was a chance to meet Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, have a few drinks, and reminisce.

The thirty attended an alumni social hour after the UConn debacle at Memorial Hall and sat on comfortable couches, drinking beer and wine provided by the Alumni Office.

Most wore plaid flairs with and without cuffs. Most were in their thirties. "When I came here I was a virgin, the University gives you a level of maturity that's overwhelming," said a '69 chemistry major.

"I think architecturally it's outgrown itself," said Linda Stefano, '69, an elementary education major. "It's moved from being a large campus to a mini-city," she said.

RECIPE EXCHANGE

By SUE KIERAS
AND SUE DUCHIN

To make a meal centering around protein these days is expensive anyway you look at it. Meats, frozen fish and even eggs are high. But tuna fish is one of the products that has remained just about the same in price. Both last Spring and the Fall, a 7 oz. can has cost 73 cents.

What we have for you is a meal you can make in about 20 minutes. It only uses one pan and you just dump everything into it and stir!

Company Creamed Tuna

Equipment:
frying pan
knife, cutting board and large spoon

Ingredients:
3 tbsp. chopped onion
3 tbsp. butter
4 tbsp. flour
¼ tsp. salt and pepper
1 ¼ c. milk
½ c. sour cream
7 oz. can tuna
optional: 4 tbsp. white wine, 2 tsp. sweet basil or ½ celery stick

Serves 4

Cook onion in butter until tender (and celery). Blend in flour, salt and pepper. Add milk, cooking quickly and stirring constantly until mixture thickens and bubbles. Stir in sour cream. Add tuna, wine and spices. Simmer and keep stirring. Sprinkle with almonds if desired.

Serve over buttered toast or noodles.

To save a little $, use powdered milk, it's cheap and nutritious. If you buy a ½ pt. of sour cream, you can make the California Onion Dip with the rest of it. (In case you don't know, this dip is on the back of the dried onion soup mix.)

By the way, PLEASE SEND YOUR FAVORITE RECIPE TO "THE RECIPE EXCHANGE", Life Style Editor, in care of the Daily Collegian. Thanks....Sue and Sue

Opening a closed drug market

By DONALD J. PARSONS
MassPIRG Intern

"MassPIRG reports" is a weekly column describing various activities of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group based in Amherst. The group is funded by students and includes UMass interns.

MassPIRG reports

The Massachusetts prescription drug market is a closed market. Little if any price competition exists, at least in part because of a Massachusetts State Law which prohibits the advertisement of prescription drug information. Thus the consumer is forced to pay different prices for the same drug at different pharmacies.

For the past two years, MassPIRG along with other consumer groups concerned with the secrecy with which prescription drugs are shrouded, has been advocating legislation which would provide open drug price information for the consumer.

In November of 1972 MassPIRG students conducted a survey of ninety (90) western Massachusetts pharmacies. Their report showed price variations ranging from $2.00 to $9.00 for the same drug, the antibiotic erythromycin. The survey showed an average price of $5.03 for the package of 20 capsules of 250 mg. erythromycin. No correlation could be drawn between location or size of the pharmacies tested and the prices encountered. Pharmacies of equal size on the same street showed price variation as high as 400-500 percent for the same drug. A follow-up study by MassPIRG in November 1973 revealed price ranges rom $1.20 to $8.00 for 20 capsules of penicillin G. It was evident from these surveys that major steps had to be taken to ensure that the consumer obtained the prescription drugs needed at the lowest possible price.

MassPIRG is sponsoring a bill before the Massachusetts Legislature calling for the posting of prescription drug prices. It would not control or set drug prices nor would it aggravate the fears of pharmacists that their professional standings will be slighted by posting. It would simply make it possible for the consumer to choose his pharmacy according to the prices charged as well as the services offered. It is Bill No. 1855.

It is state law in Texas, New York, California, Minnesota, Vermont and New Hampshire and city law in Boston that drug prices be posted. Where as drug price posting is desirable, MassPIRG realizes it is hardly enough. Drug price posting requires that consumers, including the elderly and disabled persons who account for 25 percent of the United States prescription drug sales, travel from store to store to compare posted prices. The laws restricting advertising of prescription drugs must be abolished. MassPIRG has been granted a hearing on November 5, 1974 by The Massachusetts Board of Pharmacy in response to MassPIRG's demand that restrictions on drug advertising. If the hearing does not result in a relaxation of drug advertising restrictions, MassPIRG will take legal action against the Board.

If the restrictions are relaxed and prescription drug advertising is allowed in Massachusetts some long awaited light will flow into the prescription drug market that for so long has remained darkened at the expense of the consumer. If you would like to know what you can do to help MassPIRG open up the prescription drug market, feel free to drop by the MassPIRG office at 233 North Pleasant Street (in the Carriage Shops) or call them at (413)256-6434. Here's to November 5!

The Career Scene at NSA: The National Security Agency is the U.S. Government agency responsible for developing invulnerable communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. As an NSA professional, you will be trained to work on programs of national importance in such areas as:

- Language (Slavic and Far Eastern)—used as a basic tool of research into a number of analytical fields
- Library/Information Science—technical writing in its broadest sense, including research, writing, editing, illustrating, layout and reproduction
- Programming—includes data systems program writing, and development of mechanical and administrative procedures
- Cryptography—developing & logical proving of new crypto-logic concepts
- Research—the gathering, analysis, and reporting of substantive data

Your specific academic major is of secondary importance. Of far greater importance are your ingenuity, intellectual curiosity and perseverance—plus a desire to apply them in assignments where imagination is the essential qualification.

Salaries are supplemented by the benefits of career federal employment.

Advancement and Career Development—NSA promotes from within, and awards salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. NSA also is anxious to stimulate your professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal as well as on-the-job training. Advanced study, if job related, is available, at any of seven area universities and can be partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships or other assistance programs.

The deadline for PQT applications is November 15 (for the November 23 test). Pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office. It contains full details and the necessary test registration form. Despite inclement weather and a late start, Friday night's homecoming float parade was a great success.

Studying overseas discussed

Tonight, from 7:30 to 9:30, Alpha Lamda Delta and the International Programs Office will sponsor the annual "Study Abroad Night".

Participants from all overseas programs will be represented.

The speakers will emphasize how they were admitted into their respective programs, costs, housing arrangements and what the program itself entailed.

The programs included in the night's schedule are not the only ones available to UMass students. Such countries as Nigeria, the West Indies, Colombia, England and Canada have exchange arrangements with UMass that permit UMies to study & work abroad at a cost comparable to an equivalent time period at the Amherst campus.

The International Programs Office also maintains comprehensive and up-to-date files on study abroad open to Umass students but sponsored by other institutions.

For those who cannot attend "Study Abroad Night" for first-hand impressions by fellow students, the International Programs Office is open daily from 9 to 5 and located at 239 Whitmore.

A day in court: Rapes, drunks, etc.

decorated with a brown and yellow mosaic.

The courtroom is in much better repair than the room downstairs. The judge's bench, while similar, is more impressive. At least the books behind the judge do not have the covers falling off them.

The judge's approach to everyone in the room was reserved. This was the case in both courts. He sits, listens and occasionally makes notations in a notebook.

The case observed in Superior court had been continued from the previous day. It was a rape case and the woman who had been attacked was testifying. The portion of the trial observed was questioning of the victim by the defense lawyer.

Though not brutal, the questions the lawyer asked were surely sensitive. He insisted that the victim recreate the scene minute by minute for the benefit of the jury. Standing with one foot on the jury box, the young lawyer appeared to push the woman towards an admission that she had not actually resisted the rape. It was obviously an extremely uncomfortable experience for her, even though the rape occured last April.

Most interesting about court are its personalities.

The lawyers, with their rehearsed facial expressions and hand gestures, seem more like actors than legal counselors. The judges sit back in their chairs, occasionally leaning forward to catch muttered remarks, and retain their control over the courtroom without a word.

The defendents are sent into this clubby setting with no rehearsal and seem more pitiful than they probably are.

Justice is hard to find. It's not written on anyone's face or manifest clearly in the decisions of the judge. The jury hasn't a monopoly. It may be part of crime statistics or maybe the mere fact that the judicial system is still operating under pressure.

A visit to court is more than an administrative look at the judicial system, though. It is an intimate look at an incident in the live's of a smashed student, distraught rape victim, a stoned junkie or delinquent parking fine debtor.

Perhaps that is the message of a day in court. That justice is personal and intimate and different for every defendant. Moreover it is public.

With a 25,000 student population served by the County Court drug arrests and rape cases are frequently brought within the realm of "justice." But on the morning this reporter sat in court, several drug cases were dismissed after private consultation between the judge and attorney's.

No Repricing
on merchandise already price marked on our shelves.
"When you talk, we listen!"

We have 45 Consumer Boards where shoppers present their ideas to Stop & Shop managers and executives. Through these panel discussions, and your letters, we've learned one of your greatest concerns is repricing of merchandise already on the shelf. So, because you asked for it, we will not increase the price on items already on our shelves. This new "no repricing policy" is in every Stop & Shop. It's part of our commitment to giving you your Stop & Shopsworth.

"SOLDIER BLUEis an extremely important American film because for the first time in Hollywood's history, we get the Indian's story honestly presented. How the raids on cavalry and settlers were defensive attempts to stem the theft of their land. And, more importantly, how the cruelty and barbarism attributed to the Indian more accurately should be laid to the white man."

Health education

Getting medical help

The University infirmary submits advisory information on health services to The Collegian. The material is printed irregularly. Here is another installment:

What's the best way to get care at the University Health Services?

Make an appointment if the problem's not urgent. There are a number of advantages: waiting time is reduced for you and others; you can arrange the appointment to fit your own schedule; you can see the physician or nurse practitioner of your choice each time you need consultation, allowing for continuity of care; more time is available to the physician both for preparation and actual time spent with you; and it frees the walk-in facilities for use in emergency situations.

How do I make an appointment?

The best way is to call 549-2600 any day between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. You can also come in and make an appointment in person at the front information desk. Appointments for all physicians and nurse practitioners and most special services are coordinated on a computerized system.

What about the Walk-in Clinic?

The Walk-in Clinic is for emergency care and rapid treatment of acute problems that can't wait for an appointment. Also, because this Clinic handles all patients coming to the Health Center over the noon hour on weekdays, and on evenings and weekends, urgent problems must receive first priority of care at those times.

What is triage? How does that help me?

Triage is a sorting function performed by the nurse practitioner you see first in the Walk-in Clinic. In this process the nurse will talk briefly with you, take information about your medical problem, and arrange for appropriate care at that point.

Do I have to see a physician or nurse for a mild cold or headache?

No - self-care medications (aspirin, decongestant, throat lozenges) are available at the Pharmacy without prescription or medical consultation.

How do I get to see a specialist?

Gynecological-obstetrical, surgical and orthodpedic consultant services are available upon referral from a Health Services physician. So make an appointment to see a staff physician first. Other special services may also be recommended by the physician.

THE COLLEGE BARTENDERS, INC.

will present a course in Bartending at the University of Mass.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, October 29 — Born today, you are one of those slow, quiet persons who deliberates a long time before coming to a decision about anything — and then deliberates even longer before acting upon that decision. You must, however, be on guard against mistaking caution for fear, against putting things off because you are careful and putting things off because you are confused. Avoiding a situation will never effect a change for good or for ill; only action, well-defined and well-deliberated, will bring measurable results.

You have a natural interest in politics, for you have a natural bent for the manipulation and maneuvering of other people.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Prospects are excellent for the Scorpio willing to cooperate with others in joint enterprises. Go it alone at great risk to your future!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — There may well be some delays today when it comes to garnering results of your efforts. Make no display of temper, no matter how you are tried.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your approach to all business matters must be slow and careful. Otherwise, you surely will make a regrettable mistake early in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Friends offer encouragement. Be wise; accept their suggestions for personal improvement in the spirit in which they are given.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take up the day's problems one at a time. Profit lies in a reasonable approach to the young, whether at home or at work.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care that in your joy at having found what looks to be a solution to present problems, you don't leap out of the fire into the frying pan!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Go over plans once more slowly before you begin to put them into action. You can discover a new way to new profits if you are attentive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Unless you are willing to allow another his personal quirks, you can't expect to be allowed yours. Rationalize ills away if you must.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Minor problems must be taken seriously if they are not to grow to major proportions. Allow one older and wiser than yourself the benefit of a doubt.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Moderation is the key to success on every level today. Make no irrevocable changes in your plans for the immediate future. Consult friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A major decision could be your undoing—unless you are wise enough to leave yourself a loophole out of which you can scramble.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Keep your activities well within present limits. You can begin to branch out later in the week. A new friend offers a new perspective.

Lefties lacking after fall try-out

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

Wanted: a lefthanded pitcher. After completing six weeks of fall baseball, that seems to be the primary need of the UMass team, according to Coach Dick Bergquist.

Only one southpaw is listed on the varsity fall baseball roster, that being Chris Kirby, a sophomore who pitched for the J.V.'s last year. Sophomore Dave Tewhill was expected to help but is currently plagued by arm problems. Bergquist said that the pitching staffs of the good New England college baseball teams usually have at least one good lefthander. UMass seems like it will have to do without one because not only didn't any come out for the team in the fall but none are expected to be added in the spring.

There are only two lefty batters on the UMass roster also, Pete Backstrom, who batted .294 last year and Mark Fontaine, who batted .225. Bergquist doesn't think that this is a problem though, "Lefties have trouble with lefthanded pitchers but righties can handle both types of pitchers pretty well so we'll be okay."

The fall baseball season is a practice period for the spring squad. Bergquist reported this year's season was "the best fall session yet" because of good weather and the enthusiasm of the participants. "The guys seemed eager to make up for last spring's poor record," he said. The team was 9-16 overall last spring with a record of 0-8 in the Yankee Conference.

Starting the first day of classes, a squad of 135 was cut down to about 50, which will make up the varsity and J.V. for the 1975 season, except for a few January transfers and some football players who will go out for the team.

Former star slugger Ron Beaurivage, who is on campus finishing his undergraduate studies after signing with Oakland, and grad student Phil Rollins assisted Bergquist during the fall season.

Ten intra-squad games were held, along with the regular schedule of twenty games against other schools. The Minutemen record was 12-7-1, including victories over Springfield, Holy Cross, Siena, Westfield State and AIC.

"We had some excellent games," stated Bergquist, "But the results aren't all that important because of shuttling lineups, changing pitchers at a predetermined time, and trying players at new positions. I think the great value in the fall practice season is the players gain much more experience, practice different skill areas, and we get a real indication of who can make a real contribution next spring. We have our work cut out for us, because of last spring's 9-16 record."

Those cited for having good seasons this fall were pitchers Jeff Reardon, frosh Rich Kelly, Craig Allegrezza (who is coming off the psychological effects of a sore arm, said Bergquist) and John McManus. Footballer Pete Rankowicz is expected to join the team in the spring.

Pete Backstrom, Mike Koperniak and Steve Wright led the hitting attack this fall, said Bergquist.

Pitching and defense was stressed in the fall session and these two things according to Bergquist will decide the fate of the 1975 team.

CHANGE-UP: Pete Backstrom, the hard hitting outfielder and John Healy, the defensive whiz behind the plate, were named as co-captains of the 1975 varsity baseball team.

Patriots gain fans...

BOSTON (AP) — For some members of the New England Patriots, it was just too hard to believe-2,000 football fans jamming an airport lobby to greet a team once famous for its fumbles.

"Unbelievable, just unbelievable," said center Jon Morris. "I can remember when we didn't have this many people at our games."

A few hours earlier Sunday, the Patriots had scored a touchdown with three seconds to go and defeated the Minnesota Vikings 17—14.

It was their sixth win in seven games. And suddenly, people are forgetting National Football League seasons like 1972, when they were 3—11, and 1970, when they were 2—12.

Players grinned and shouldered through the crowd as people strained to touch them and shout, "We're No. 1."

Morris could not get over it. "I know I'm exaggerating," he said. "But this welcome is great. I've never seen anything like this in my life. Things have really changed for us."

Airport officials offered to let the team off at another gate, but Coach Chuck Fairbanks said, "If there are fans out there waiting for us, I'll be very happy to go that way."

Lose Windsor for year

BOSTON (AP) — The National Football League's New England Patriots said Monday that tight end Bob Windsor, hero of yesterday's 17-14 victory over Minnesota, will be out of action for the rest of the season, after a successful operation on his right knee.

In the last play of Sunday's game, Windsor caught a pass on the two-year line. He said later he felt himself being injured when he was first hit, but managed to get over the goal line with torn ligaments.

Dr. Donald Akikie performed the ligament operation Monday at Norwood Hospital, the Patritots said. The doctor said he expected Windsor to be in a cast for six weeks.

Wide receiver Steve Schubert, who scored the other Patriot touchdown, suffered a sprained knee, but the team said it was not known if he would miss any games.

Also injured was cornerback Ron Bolton, who suffered a broken finger. A spokesman said Bolton should not miss any action.

Staub going to Montreal?

NEW YORK (UPI) — Rusty Staub is going back to Montreal.

The Mets and Expos haven't closed the deal yet, all they've really done is laid some of the groundwork. That means if anybody asks them, both can honestly say, no, Rusty Staub hasn't been traded...yet.

From all visible signs, though, and from some which aren't so visible, the likelihood keeps growing that after a three-year absence, Le Grand Orange soon will return to Montreal, where as far as most of the fans there are concerned, he never really left.

The Mets aren't saying much. They're not saying anything, in fact, about their plans for Staub. Joe McDonald, the Mets' new general manager, says he doesn't believe in "Untouchables." to him, those are only some people in a TV show.

When you talk to the Expos, they are perfectly honest about their feelings for Staub. They like him, and always have. Without running any risk of tampering, they readily concede they wouldn't mind having him back, They wouldn't mind at all.

"Since the very first day of our existence, Rusty was the most popular ballplayer we ever had in Montreal," says Expos' general manager Jim Fanning. "Naturally, we never liked the idea of letting him go and we said so at the time. In the back of our minds, though, we wondered if some day he might possibly come back and finish his career with us."

Rusty Staub did not have a good year with the Mets last season. He had 78 RBI's and 19 home runs to go with his .258 batting average, and those figures don't stack up very well alongside the six figures he is being paid.

To bget Staub from the Expos in April of 1972, the Mets had to give up Ken Singleton, Mike Jorgensen and Tim Foli in another of those deals where they came out on the short end. Staub has helped them, true, but he has not compensated for the departure of the three players it took to get him.

The Yankees have excited the fans here in New York by landing Bobby Bonds for Bobby Murcer. They did it the very same day the Mets swapped catcher Duffy Dyer to the Pirates for Gene Clines. When the Yanks announced their deal, it made the Mets, swap look like small potatoes.

The Mets did acquire Joe Torre from the Cardinals but still need a centerfielder. They tried to get Baltimore's Paul Blair and failed. Montreal's Willie Davis looks like the best centerfielder available although the Mets aren't that excited about him. He'll be 35 next season, and near the end of this one he didn't seem sure whether he wanted to play ball anymore or not.

Davis came to the Expos from the Dodger for Mike Marshall last winter. Paid $110,000 by Montreal this year, he called a press conference in front of his locker near the end of the season and told the writers he wanted to know what his status was with the Expos, whether they were going to trade him or not. Later, it turned out he also wanted a loan, or advance, on next year's salary, from the club.

Oops! mistakes murder UMass; UConn 10-9

By STEVE DeCOSTA

It could have been set to music.

It could have been called 'You Can't Always Get What You Want.' Or better yet, 'Bye Bye Beanpot.'

By right, it should have been a tie. The old adage says "May the best team win." But 'best' is the superlative form of the adjective 'god'. And, by no means could the performances of either team on the football field Saturday afternoon be called 'good.'

UConn got the passing grade, a mark in the 'W' column, with a 10-9 win in a contest that was billed as the game of the year in the Yankee Conference. Actually, it was a game marred by errors, mistakes, and general ineptitude.

The Minutemen continued their frustrating habit of giving the ball away, fumbling six times and throwing two interceptions, and the ten UConn points were nearly direct results of those errors.

On top of that, the UMass passing game, which had bit the fifty percent mark for the first time last week, again became a nonentity. Three quarterbacks threw 15 passes for only two completions.

And Greg Sprout, who had nine points a week ago, hit one field goal from 43 yards, had one partially blocked after a bad snap and another completely blocked in the final five seconds. But the one that really came back to haunt was a missed extra point shanked wide to the right. It turned out to be the eventual margin of victory.

Despite the mistakes, the Minutemen had that one last chance, that golden opportunity to pull it out and make the afternoon all worth it.

UMass got the ball in its best field position of the second half, on the UConn 40 yard line, after a bad 23 punt by John Lis. Mark Tripucka (who replaced Brian McNally, was replaced by Peter Colton, and then replaced Colton) and Jim Torrance personally legged the ball to a first and goal at the UConn 2 with time running out. Two off tackle slants by Torrance moved the ball halfway home but by then there were only five seconds left.

In came Sprout for an eight yard attempt, a chip shot that should have been a mere formality. But the Minutemen jumped early, Gary Calvino charged in from the left, Les Solomon blasted in from the right, the kick was blocked and the Beanpot was lost.

Credit the defense with keeping the matter close for the entire afternoon. The Minutemen allowed UConn only one sustained drive all day, but toughened up to bat away a fourth down pass from their own six.

"Our defense did a great job," said Dick MacPherson. "I thought the field position the offense left them in is what did it."

And indeed it was. The Huskies tallied three on a Greg Sinay field goal after Bill Coleman fumbled on his own 24.

The very next time UMass had the ball, Don Thompson picked off a Tripucka pass on the UMass 32. Two plays later, Bernie Palmer tossed to Al MacLellan, who reached over cornerback Earl Brown in the end zone.

The Minutemen, meanwhile, were getting very little in the way of field position in the second half, and failed to move the ball from deep in their own territory. MacPherson resorted to a game of musical quarterbacks, shuffling in Tripucka and Colton.

The moves were necessitated by an injury to starter Brian McNally. Late in the first half, McNally swept left end, and a UConn defender landed on his shoulder. So, in much the same way UMass lost former number one Fred Kelliher, McNally will probably be shelved for the season with a separation.

Torrance was again the workhorse of the offense, carrying on one-third of the offensive plays for nearly one half of the total UMass offense. All this despite sitting out several minutes in the first quarter while having three fingers of his left hand taped together.

Torrance also got the only UMass touchdown of the game, a two-yard blast. But credit for that score has to go to punter John Romboli.

The Minutemen had been working on a fake punt play all week long in practice. "We noticed that UConn doesn't cover the outside on their rush," said MacPherson. So Romboli took the snap, began his kicking motion, and flew around left end for a 32 yard gain, setting up the Torrance dive.

Added to the loss of McNally, co-captain Dennis Kiernan and guard Ned Deane were also injured and their status is unknown at this time.

The loss kills any chance for an outright conference championship for for the Minutemen, but a tie for the title is still a possibility. UMass is currently 3-2 in YanCon wars, while UConn stands at 3-1.

But perhaps the Minutemen should be more concerned with keeping their record over the .500 mark. They now stand at 4-3 overall, but with Colgate, Holy Cross, and Boston College (who annihilated Villanova 55-7 Saturday) coming up on the schedule and the injury situation the way it stands now, there could be trouble brewing in Amherst.

GREG SPROUT LOOKS on in dismay as Les Solomon blocks the potential winning points.

Booters shine, but edged 1-0

By BEN CASWELL

When you play like that and lose, well, you can almost come away satisfied.

Playing like that refers to the best played game of the year by the UMass soccer team last Saturday as they were edged 1-0 by a UConn team that is rated in the top ten teams in the nation.

The game's only score came with about ten minutes left in the first half when Connecticut forward Lloyd Grant took a pass from teammate Len Santaris and after moving past a fallen UMass defender fired a hard, low shot past goalie Carl Vercollone to his far right.

This game had a little bit of everything. There was fine two way play by both teams as each squad moved the ball fairly well. Both also had some good scoring chances and the two goalies each had a few fine saves.

At the start of the game the Minutemen looked a little tight but it did not take them too long to loosen up. Tom Coburn had UMass' first good scoring opportunity but the UConn goalie came up with a fine kick save.

The first half was filled with the fine play of UMass forward Bill Belcher whose hustle seemed to have him all over the field all the time. He also did a fine job of checking on UConn's high-scoring forward Frances Innocent who is second among all New Englanders in scoring.

In a game like soccer one score can completely change the momentum of a game. After the UConn score that could have happened but it didn't. It seemed after the score that UMass came on even stronger and in no way did it appear that they suffered a letdown. What did appear was the poise and determination of a team that was playing to win.

When the second half began UMass got the wind to their backs rather than playing into it as they had in the first half. This was a factor as it enabled Goalie Carl Vercollone to get off alot longer kick-outs with the help from the wind instead of the shorter ones he had been getting off in the first half when the wind was a hindrance.

Obviously the Minutemen had to score and they pulled out all the stops as they tried to. Tony King had a good head shot go just wide to the left of the net off a fine pass from deep to the right by Tom Coburn. Fullback Mike Parsons make a nice pass out in front that Forward Mo Othman could not get to in time and it was grabbed up by the UConn goaltender.

With about five minutes left in the game Coach Al Rufe brought in another attacker and played with only three fullbacks in an attempt to bolster the UMass scoring bids. It almost backfired when a Connecticut forward came in alone on Vercollone but Carl came out nicely to cut down the angle and made the save look easy.

The Minutemen came very close on a number of occasions but just could not connect. Their passing was sharp and their defense was strong but putting the ball into the net was just not on their agenda and they came up close but short.

"We'll get them in the playoffs," said Coach Al Rufe.

QUICK SHOTS--About 2000 spectators were on hand for the UConn game.

Ali-Foreman battle tonight

By BOB STEWART
UPI Sports Writer

KINSHASA, Zaire — The bludgeoning fists of heavyweight champion George Foreman will strive to still the dancing feet of Muhammad Ali Wednesday at 4 a.m. (10 p.m. EST Tuesday), and thus bring to an end one of boxing's greatest careers.

Foreman, with an awesome 37 knockouts in his unbeaten record of 40 victories, was an 11-5 favorite for the 15-round match in the stadium of the 20th of May, which is expected to hold about 64,000 Zairians, the majority of whom seem solidly in favor if Ali.

Around the world, in over 100 nations, an estimated million people will see the bout — by closed circuit in the United States, but on home television in many countries. The revenue for pay television is what has made possible 5 million dollar guarantees for each man in a production which carries a price tag of approximately 30 million dollars.

The key to the bizarre drama is Muhammad Ali, the most celebrated and controversial figure in boxing for a dozen years, who now, at age 32, faces the greatest challenge of his life.

Winner of the heavyweight title in February 1964 in a stunning upset over Sonny Liston, Ali, then known as Cassius Clay, subsequently resisted the draft and was stripped of his title. He was idle for over two years, during which time the recognized title passed to Joe Frazier. Ali lost his first chance to regain his crown, bowing in an epic 15-rounder to Frazier in March of 1971.

Frazier later was knocked out in two rounds by Foreman, and then Joe lost a close 12-round decision to Ali in January to set up the bout here.

Ali has had 46 fights, losing only two — the one to Frazier, the other to relatively unknown Ken Norton. Norton broke Ali's jaw in the second round of a 12-rounder which went the distance. Muhammad reversed that verdict in a close rematch with Norton, and then Foreman flattened Norton in two.

But because of his showmanship, his stand on race issues, his religious militancy, Muhammad Ali has become more than a fighter to much of the world. His fights have become "Happenings," drawing people who know less than nothing, and care less, about the bawdy old sport of boxing. They come to see and cheer and admire Ali.

But there is no way Ali the fighter can be downgraded. His record against the best of his era speaks for itself. He is to many the fastest heavyweight ever and one of the best boxers of them all.

Even without a truly powerful punch, he has piled up 31 knockouts: the most notable — but sometimes questioned — a one-punch flooring of Liston in their return match at Lewiston, Me., in 1965.

He is a deceptively big man, standing 6-foot-3 with an 80-inch reach. It is his lightning speed of foot coupled with that reach that made possible the slogan "Float like butterfly, sting like a bee." Ali's jabs do sting.

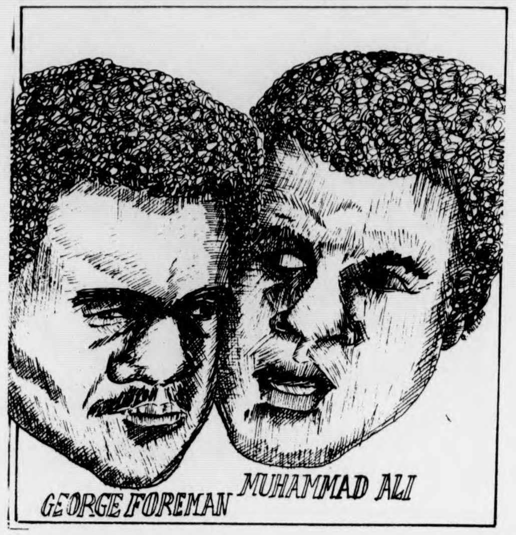
But, at age 32, the speed and guile may be going, and it is Foreman who may speed them on their way. A huge hulk of man in appearance, although he is only Ali's height, George possesses the biggest arms since Paul Bunyan. Once he learned to punch straight rather than looping lefts and rights, he began to leave a trail of victims, knocking them down, again and again, until it was all over.

"I like knockouts," Foreman says. "I don't want any one to get hurt. A knockout is nice and peaceful."

A problem as a teenager in his native Houston, Foreman wound up in the Job Corps in California, where he came under the influence of Doc Broaddus, the trainer who led him to AAU titles and then the Olympic title in Mexico. There George won the hearts of some Americans by carrying a tiny flag in his huge fist after his victory.

Trained now by Dick Sadler, he has not had anything remotely approaching the popularity of Ali or Frazier. An apparently very much reserved person, although he would like to be more of a public figure, he simply lets his fists do the talking.

The promotion here almost came apart on Sept. 16 when Foreman's right eye suffered a two-inch cut in a sparring accident. But both Foreman and the promotion have recovered.



Commentary

Foreman to win

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Sports Staff

With so many new faces on both the Patriots and Celtics, it's nice to see some sports figures that one doesn't have to look in the program to recognize, even if one does have to travel to Kinasha, Zaire, to find them. In other words, George Foreman and Muhammed Ali will be fighting again for the first time.

Contrary to the implications in my last sentence, the World Heavyweight Championship bout is not a Hollywood release; it's George Foreman's idea of training a little late. It seems that at the time of the originally scheduled fight six weeks ago, Foreman, the defending champion, was 15-25 pounds overweight, while Ali was "in the best condition of my life". George would have none of this, hence, either like magic or the hero of a grade "B" movie, a cut over his right eye appeared in the nick of time (no pun intended). For the present conflict, Foreman has trimmed down to a respectable 220 lbs. (very respectable if you know what's good for you) and Ali has put on eight lbs. since last week's reported 209 lbs.

...but maybe in his retirement
Ali can challenge Howard Cosell to a balloon filling contest...

Financially there can be no loser between the two combatants as each is guaranteed $5 million by the Zaire government for his night's work. Foreman's last eight opponents might not think Ali is receiving adequate compensation for his impending hospital bill, as none of those opponents have survived the second round.

The two men have vastly differing syles (Ali likes to dance and jab, Foreman employs the Pulverization Technique) which, during their careers, have achieved much the same ends. Foreman has fought 40 times, all successfully, with 37 knockouts, while Ali has been the victor in 44 of his 46 attempts. (His two defeats coming against Joe Frazier and Ken Norton, both of whom had eye contact with the mat of the ring before the third round versus Foreman.) Ali's "game plan" is to "test Foreman's endurance". Muhammed will try to administer this exam at a distance of at least 79 inches since the champion's reach is 78½.

By now the reader has probably deduced that this reporter believes George Foreman will retain his title. The reader has deduced correctly. Ali, at 32 years of age, no longer has a punch that can deck Foreman, so the former must rely on his legs which, coincidentally, are also 32 years of age. George, however, does have the knockout punch; just ask the 37 people who have left their teeth marks in his gloves.

Ali claims he will "retire after winning" the fight. I wouldn't give much credence to the word "winning", but maybe in his retirement Ali can challenge Howard Cosell to a balloon filling contest to determine whose rhetoric includes the most hot air.

Knicks to utilize Porter and Stallworth as forward strength

NEW YORK [UPI] -- The New York Knicks, striving to strengthen their suspect front line, Monday activated Howard Porter and signed free agent Dave Staliworth.

To make room for the additions to the active roster, the Knicks placed rookies Greg Jackson and Rudy Jackson on waivers and put Mel Davis on the injured list.

Porter, acquired from the Chicago Bulls at the end of last season in exchange for the Knicks' No. 1 pick in the NBA college draft, was expected to take up the rebounding slack created by the retirement of Dave Debusshere, Willis Reed and Jerry Lucas.

But, the 6-foot-8 Villanova graduate hurt his left ankle in the preseason and has played only eight minutes in exhibition games this season.

Stallworth was a first-round draft pick of the Knicks in 1965 from Wichita State. The Knicks also drafted Bill Bradley as a territorial pick in the '65 draft.

After averaging approximately 13 points a game in his first two years, Stallworth suffered what doctors diagnosed as a heart attack.

But, after sitting out two seasons before persuading doctors to allow him to play, Stallworth returned to the Knicks and was an integral part of the great bench strength that resulted in New York's first NBA championship in 1969-70, averaging 7.8 points a game.

Prior to the start of this season, Stallworth was traded by the Washinnton Bullets to the Phoenix Suns for Clem Haskins and then placed on waivers by the Suns.

Rule signed as pivot for Milwaukee Bucks

MILWAUKEE, WIS. [UPI] - The Milwaukee Bucks said Monday they have signed Bob Rule, a seven-year veteran of the National Basketball Association, as a backup center.

Rule, 6-foot-9, replaces Dick Cunningham, who was injured in a weekend game against Washington.

Rule started his career with Seattle and has been with Cleveland and Philadelphia the past two years. He was waived by the 76ers earlier this month.

"I know exactly what my role is going to be," Rule said. "It doesn't bother me at all that I'll be backing up Kareem later on."

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the Bucks' regular center, has been lost to the team until about Nov. 22 because of an eye injury and a broken hand suffered during the pre-season.

To make room for Rule, the Bucks placed Cunningham on the injured list.

Condition critical, but stable

Nixon goes into shock after operation

LONG BEACH, Calif. [AP] — Former President Richard M. Nixon went into shock after phlebitis surgery and is in critical condition, his doctor said last night.

A team of physicians administered "countershock measures for three hours until a stable vascular condition was once again restored," said Dr. John C. Lungren in a written statement.

"The patient is still considered critical," he said.

Lungren said the serious complication was probably caused by "some retro-peritonaeal bleeding secondary to anticoagulation therapy."

The physician had said earlier that there was "somewhat more risk than normal" to the surgery because Nixon had been taking anticoagulant drugs which left him prone to uncontrolled bleeding.

Lungren said after the surgery that there was no excessive bleeding.

"Replacement of blood loss and relaxation of anti-coagulation therapy was instituted," Lungren said.

Retro-peritonaeal means behind the lining of Nixon's abdominal area. Surgeons attached a plastic clip to a vein in Nixon's groin area to keep blood clots from threatening the former president's life.

After surgery, Nixon was described as "doing well" and making a normal recovery.

Nixon went into shock about 12:45 p.m., more than six hours after surgery, Lungren said.

Lungren said that while "vascular stability is still maintained at this time, the patient is still considered critical."

Lungren's statement was read by a hospital official.

Lungren had called the operation a success and said that hopefully there would be no more complications from the phlebitis Nixon suffers in his left leg.

At a news conference 30 minutes after the hour-long operation, Dr. Eldon Hickman, who performed it with two assisting surgeons, said, "Mr. Nixon is doing well ... recovering in the normal manner."

White House aides were being kept advised on Nixon's condition and one indicated that a possible visit Wednesday by President Ford to the former president was under consideration. In Detroit, however, Deputy Press Secretary John W. Hushen said Ford had no plans to see Nixon today.

Nixon was readmitted to the hospital last Wednesday when Lungren concluded that an oral anticoagulant Nixon had been taking at his La Casa Pacifica home was not effective in stopping the clotting.

Nixon had been hospitalized for 12 days in late September and early October for treatment of the same condition.

Nixon's hospitalization is being paid for from presidential transition funds. Ronald L. Ziegler, Nixon's former press secretary, said Sunday that Nixon had no health insurance.

78 eviction notices served

By DENNY MATTEAU
Staff Correspondent

Seventy-eight eviction notices were given to residents of Brittany Manor and Mount Sugarloaf yesterday. The notices were served in reaction to tenants' withholding of rents this past month, according to John O'Keefe of the Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs.

O'Keefe said that the tenants were withholding their rents because they read, in a news article in the Collegian of October third, that they would not be repaid more than one to five cents on the dollar for their security deposits. The article said this was due to bankruptcy of the three real estate firms which own the apartment complexes. Those firms are Colonial Realty. Tri Colonial Realty, and New Colonial Realty Investments. The Firms are principally owned by two men, Robert Waldman and David Dick, neither of whom were available for comment at the time of this writing.

O'Keefe said the rent withholding is not, at this point, a collective political act. He said "The tenants were individually withholding for reasons of their own."

The Student Senate Legal Services Office has filed a suit on behalf of tenants of Brittany Manor asking that they be moved up on the list of creditors to be paid off by the bankrupt companies. Tenants now stand in fourth place, after the attorneys and bankruptcy administrators, banks, and construction contractors. The suit also asks for guarantee that tenants will receive full returns on security deposits. John O'Keefe, speaking for the VCCA, said "If the tenants are not moved up on that list of creditors, and if they are not given a guarantee that they will receive their security deposits, a massive rent strike is planned in Brittany Manor and Mount Sugarloaf."

According to the letter of the law, as explained in the Cambridge Tenants Organizing Committee Handbook, rent may be legitimately withheld only for infractions of health and safety codes.

Jim Starr and Bill Dorsch of the Legal Services Office were not available for comment at the time of this writing. However, a resident of Brittany Manor, said that while he did not receive an eviction notice himself, he did receive a warning at the beginning of this month that eviction notices would be served on all tenants who do not pay on time.

Tenants' Association seeks support of North Village in rent strike

By DEBBIE SHAFER
Staff Reporter

A meeting of the Tenants' Association "to gain the support of North Village residents" in the rent strike has been called for Tuesday night in the Campus Center, organizers say.

Tenants' Association Chairperson Rosemary Whittaker said ideally it's hoped the North Village residents will both join the Association and go on strike. The meeting will be the first between residents of North Village and the Tenants' Association.

The Tenants' Association voted Monday night to incorporate North Village into the Tenant Association "if the residents are willing." Karen Mangan, who was present at the meeting, is gathering support for the Association at North Village and says the "response has been good so far" among residents.

Mangan says North Village residents "are concerned with other issues besides rent" such as maintenance and administrative control. North Village is presently represented only by the Married Student Housing Committee.

The married student Tenant Association also voted Monday night to try and bring their grievances before the University Board of Trustees. This involves setting up a liason committee of administrators and students to determine if the issue should be called before the Trustees. Vice-chancellor Robert Gage was notified yesterday afternoon of the request, and says he will begin the process of setting up a liason committee.

"We want to exhaust all possibilities for working through the University system," said Whittaker. Bringing grievances to the Trustees is "one alternative" towards solving the rent dispute out of court," she said.

Whittaker thinks the administration "will probably stall as long as possible" before setting up a grievance committee in hopes the issue will die down.

But meanwhile, the tenants' association is making a massive effort to gain support. They are canvassing Lincoln and University apartments for more support, and hope to join forces with residents of North Village apartments.

In response to Acting Director of Residential Life Ken Dean's request that the tenants work through the Married Student Housing Committee, it was voted by the Association to remain separate and autonomous from the Committee. Patrick Walker of the Association called Dean's suggestion "an attempt to re-bureaucratize us."

The tenants' association met last week with Gage, Dean and other officials, but nothing was resolved at the meeting. The administration left the next move to the students, and now the students have decided to approach the Board of Trustees who are "ultimately responsible for the budget" according to Whittaker.

"After last week's meeting, the administration really has no basis for an argument," Whittaker said. The rent strike relates to the entire issue of student power, not just married students. A primary aim of the Tenants' Association is to help students gain more control over their lives, money, and living situation while at the University.

Third World defined

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Many people confuse the term "Third World" and thus confuse the meaning and intentions of people who are considered members of the Third World. The following will give a correct interpretation of the meaning and history behind the origins of the term, Third World.

The first world consists of the capitalist-imperialist nations, including the chief oppressor of humanity, the United States, as well as much weaker European nations of England, Germany, Belgium, Portugal, etc. and more recently, Israel.

The second world is composed of the socialist nations led by the USSR and includes Czechoslovakia, Poland, East Germany, Bulgaria, and other white socialist nations of Eastern Europe. These nations have broken the bondage of capitalism and are working to create "socialist societies."

The "Third World" consists of the colonized or formerly colonized countries of the world. These include the nations and peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. They have the unique distinction of having been oppressed and pillaged by the first world, i.e. by the colonialist European and American powers.

The advent of western industrialization brought with it imperialist expansion and oppression of the nations and peoples of the Third World. However, this industrialization also perfected communication and transportation systems which had the effect of exposing the international nature of the oppressor.

Through the process of slavery, African peoples found themselves scattered throughout the world, all victims of systematic exploitation by the Western powers. The Asian peoples likewise, found their lands invaded and pillaged and their cultures and religions trampled upon and repressed.

The original inhabitants of Latin America had the unfortunate experience of having been "discovered" by Europe, and as a result were colonized and their populations completely decimated. After throwing off the chains of European feudalism, the Latin American population — made up of people of Spanish-Indian-African ancestry, were immediately recolonized by their northern neighbor, the United States, and the familiar process of rape, murder and exploitation was continued.

Within the confines of the United States, the Third World consists of the descendants of people from Asia, Africa or Latin America. This community is made up of Afro-Americans, Puertoriquenos, Chicanos, Latinos, Asian-Americans, Native Americans and Eskimos. We have all suffered from the same kind of exploitation and colonial oppression as our brothers and sisters in our homelands.

Nations and peoples can be part of the Third World (by definition) and still be oppressors and exploiters, however, Japan is the classic example of this reality. Several African countries are run by puppets or neo-colonialists and are a further example of this fact.

It would be a mistake, therefore, to think that the concept of the Third World represents an ideology unto itself. When we use this term, it merely describes lands and peoples who have suffered the oppression and exploitation of colonialism.

Some people use this expression in an attempt to "cop out" of the ever-sharpening conflict between revolutionary and counter-revolutionary forces in the world. They talk about adopting a position of "neutrality." In spite of these proclamations, the fact remains that there can be no middle road between capitalism and socialism.

You cannot be neutral in the world today. There can be no fence straddlers. We are engaged in a war to the finish between the oppressed and the oppressors; between those who produce the wealth of the world and those who own it; between those who pursue a capitalist path and those committed to socialist development.

To combat an international enemy (i.e. imperialism) an international resistance is needed, therefore the need for third world unity is imperative.

It is our belief that a socialist is committed to the liberation struggles of African, Asian and Latin peoples, wherever they may be. These struggles must be interlocked with one another in order to obtain the most effective results. It is clear, therefore, that mass migration back to our respective homelands is not necessary for Black and other Third World peoples to achieve freedom.

We must likewise be concerned with the long range results of our struggles. Since we have a common oppressor, we must also have the same goals. We must try to achieve a society which is free from racism and the explotation of man by his fellow man, nation by nations, or woman by man. All third world people have suffered under the yoke of white racism and economic pillage by the imperialist powers.

In spite of cultural differences, this common historical oppression unites us in the struggle to eradicate these evils. The Third World occupy a unique place at a critical time in history. We are located in the belly of the "monster". China has cut off a tentacle; Cuba has cut off a tentacle; Vietnam has cut off a tentacle; Gunea-Bissau has recently cut off another tentacle. But these very important events have only weakened this "octopus." It is up to the Third World peoples living in the belly of the "monster" (U.S.A.) to destroy his ability to reproduce; we must destroy exploitation and world oppression.

Weather Warfare

By CHRIS ROBINSON
Black News Series

• This is part one of a two part series on the question of Environmental Warfare and Genocide. This material was prepared by "Recon", a military affairs newsletter.

A subcommittee of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee recently published the outcome of its previously classified hearings into "The Use of Environmental and Geophysical Modification as Weapons of War".

In the process of these hearings, held January 25 and March 20, 1974, the committee discovered the terrible potential that modern science has for destruction of the environment and for using environmental forces for destruction of a war-time enemy. The committee also got the Pentagon to admit and discuss for the first time its use of environmental warfare against the Democratic Republic of (North) Vietnam (DRV) from October 1966 to July 1972.

The purpose of the hearing was to discover why former President Nixon had been so slow in initiating the work laid out for him in a Senate resolution passed on July 11, 1973. The resolution required the President to seek international support for a treaty which "will provide for the complete cessation of any research, experimentation, and use of any environmental or geophysical modification activity as a weapon of war."

Nixon, of course, dilly-dallied until the Senate called for hearings. Then, a week before the hearings were to begin, Nixon put the Pentagon in charge of studying the topic. In part, this was a token move done with the intentions of satisfying the Senate. It was an attempt to bury the whole issue because the Pentagon is firmly in support of using environmental forces during wartime.

But the most interesting aspect of the hearings was the report by scientists on what potential environmental weapons could be developed by the Pentagon should it decide to do so.

One list, prepared by Dr. Gordon MacDonald, the Henry Luce Professor of Environmental Policy and Study at Dartmouth College included such items as initiation of earthquakes, increasing ultraviolet radiation to damage biological life, melting icecaps to cause flooding, melting the bottom of icecaps to cause iceslides which would produce tidal waves, and modification of the electrical behavior of the atmosphere to influence individual behavior through its effect on the alpha activity of the brain.

Dr. MacDonald said: "I think if you look at any aspect of the environment anywhere, you can see we are beginning to develop a technology that can influence that part of the environment. You have a potential weapon of war, and that is why I think it is so important to stop right now before those technologies develop."

Repeatedly, the scientists called to testify before the committee stressed that the issue should be taken out of the hands of the Pentagon. The reason for this became apparent when Pentagon officials testified in a Top-Secret hearing held on March 20.

After the Pentagon officials testified, the Senate got the military to release the text of this hearing, and it was made public on May 19. The significant part of the military testimony is that they admit for the first time that environmental warfare was used against the Democratic Republic of (North; Vietnam (DRV).

Craig opposed, Nagle uncommitted

Nuclear question debated by local candidates

By DEBBI DiMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

"Nuclear power plants are tombstones to an industry which is playing a con job with our dollars," said Republican Paul Craig in a debate between the candidates for State Representative in the First Hampshire District.

His opponent, William Nagle, took a less definitive stand on the problem of nuclear energy, saying that he would like to see more research conducted before he could vote in favor of the referendum. The referendum calls for a moratorium on the proposed Montague plant and the dismantling of existing plants.

The two candidates from Northampton debated Monday night on WMUA's "Focus" program. Questions were asked by Eilish Broderick, Public Affairs Director for the station, and David Mehler of the news staff. The debate was moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Nagle is a 23-year-old Democrat who is a City Councilman in Northampton. He is opposed in the election by Craig, 36, who holds a BA and a MA in American History from UMass. He has published professionally and professes to have thirteen years of experience over his younger opponent.

Broderick directed the question on the nuclear power referendum first to Nagle who said that he was not in favor of dismantling existing plants because of the need for alternative forms of energy. While he conceded that the plants may possibly be hazardous, he called reports "emotional" and preferred to remain noncommittal until conclusive evidence is yielded by objective investigations.

"I won't straddle the fence," replied Craig. "Dismantling probably transcends the authority of the Commonwealth but I would not like to see any more plants built."

To another question posed by Broderick on Referendum 2, the proposed House cut, Nagle answered, "The cut is necessary to enhance the power of each individual legislator. We have to get down to business; economize and streamline state government."

Craig opposes the State House cut and argued that the cut won't save tax dollars because additional staff members will be needed to accommodate increased work loads. He also said that he wants to see the new districts to insure that minorities and the farmers of Western Massachusetts don't lose their direct voice in state Government. If the cut is approved by Massachusetts voters, Craig would propose legislation which would stipulate that elected officials be ineligible for state, county, or municipal employment for three years after leaving office.

Mehler asked the candidates whether the state should cut funds to hospitals which refuse to permit abortions on their premises. Craig called this an abuse of state power. "I wouldn't support a Right to Life amendment. This constitutes state interference in matters of private conscience."

Nagle contended that once the law regarding abortion is clarified, the budget should be cut by the state if a hospital's policies are in direct opposition to the law.

Other questions were met with either little debate, or criticism of party affiliation. Mehler asked the candidates to differentiate between the major philosophies of the Republican and Democratic parties. Craig denied that the differences were of major significance, and asserted that problems are best solved on the lowest possible governmental level.

Graduate panel starts planning TA policy

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

The joint Financial Aid-Student Affairs Committee of the Graduate Council is beginning its long task of developing a comprehensive policy regarding the working conditions of teaching (TA), research (RA), and service assistants.

The Financial Aid-Student Affairs Committee is attempting to clarify a wide range of issues pertaining to the selection, evaluation, workload, and compensation of all categories of graduate assistants.

Graduate student committee chairperson Robert Jorgensen is currently in the process of sending out surveys and questionnaires to all graduate students, chairmen of graduate departments, and program directors. The information accumulated from the surveys and questionnaires will be used to establish campus-wide guidelines for departments in the following areas: 1) how TA's and RA's are to be selected, 2) duties and compensation, 3) evaluation of work performance, and 4) reappointment or non-reappointment.

Prior to this year, there have been no real guidelines in most departments regarding the appointment and continuation of graduate assistants. The only guideline in existence has been the university's recommended stipend for full-time teaching assistants. This recommendation suggests teaching assistants should receive $3600 over a nine month period for a supposed twenty hour work week. Other than this figure, there have been no qualifications or specific duties written into contracts between graduate assistants and their departments or programs.

Several law suits have been filed against the university by graduate students due to the vague nature of TA-RA contracts. According to Jorgensen, the university is now eager to establish and specify policies regarding the working conditions of graduate assistants.

Jorgensen hopes this joint committee will be able to spell out more concretely the duties of teaching assistants and associates. There have recently been a number of complaints from TA's about the nature of their workloads. Due to the flexibility involved in doing research, however, Jorgensen feels the specific duties of research assistants should be determined by the individual graduate student and faculty supervisor.

Political Science Dept. eases major requirements

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

The Political Science Department has completed two changes in its structure this semester. The changes concern the major requirements of the department and a series of experimental courses to be offered at the basic or 100 level.

According to the previous Political Science Department policy, a student was required to take 12 credits (four courses) at the "upper-division level in related or cognate fields of study." The Political Science Department has dropped this cognate requirement in its major policy. Professor Jerome Mileur of the Political Science Department said, "There is no change in the number or distribution of political science courses for the major, but we no longer require anything out of the major."

The second change in the department involves a series of experimental courses that have been approved for the coming spring semester and the '75 fall semester. The department is offering six new courses labeled 190A-F that will fulfill one of the introductory requirements in the major.

According to the policy for political science majors each student must take two courses at the introductory level which include either American Politics 101, Comparative Politics 131 World Politics 151 or Problems in the Study of Politics 190. The departmental policy now allows that one of these experimental courses can be used to fulfill one of the two introductory requirements although more than one of these experimental courses can be taken.

According to Professor Mileur, the six courses have been designed to focus in on one problem in politics which would give the student a very specific look at a problem instead of taking only survey courses. The new courses have been limited by the department to 25 students in each.

Mileur also said, "I would like to make it clear that these courses are open to all University students and we hope that they will appeal more generally to the people."

The courses being offered are: Participation in Public Policy, Undercover Politics, Politics and Everyday Life, The Idea of Community, Politics and the Quality of Life and Political Misbehavior.

Mileur said that these changes would soon be further publicized at a meeting geared to all political science majors and he hoped that there would be a large audience.

Wood to speak to Student Senate tonight on SGA student demands

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood will appear before the Student Senate tonight to respond to six demands made by the Student Government Association last Wednesday night.

The demands for greater student control were:

"We the legitimate representatives of the student body demand that you respond to following demands immediately, in that it is time that the University of Massachusetts respond to the needs of students and not act as paternal figures to the students:

1) That students at the University be recognized as responsible adults and that they have the right to determine the direction of their own lives. In this regard we demand to have primary determination concerning all facets of the University which directly affect us.

2) We demand that we have control over our own budget. Under no circumstances should the administration ever freeze the budget of the students of the University, or attempt to determine where our monies will or will not be spent.

3) We demand that students at the University of Massachusetts have major decision making power to influence academic requirements and procedures.

4) That the Board of Trustees lay exactly where our power lies so that once we find we have none-then we can fight for what we want.

5) We want you to recognize us as people not because of the structures we create such as the Student Government Association, but because we are people-23,000 to be exact. Hence, we demand that the University recognize our needs and act on them.

6) We demand the right to freely organize around our interests and collectively bargain with the administration over all matter affecting students."

Cindy McGrath, Speaker of the Senate expects Dr. Wood's response to generate a question and answer discussion. The Student Senate meeting tomorrow night will take place at 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

McGrath also said the date for the UMass town meeting will be set by the end of this week. The town meeting, open to UMass undergraduate and graduate students, will be an open forum to discuss the needs of the students.

Students warned not to ignore car fines

By JIMERSON
Staff Reporter

Had a hassle with parking tickets lately? Joe DiCarlo of the parking Appeals Board advises students who have received parking tickets to pay their fine, or appeal it to the board, within seven days after receiving their ticket. If action isn't taken within a week, a summons will be sent from the District Courthouse in Northhampton, where the parking cases are handled. Students receiving tickets should go to Dickinson Hall, and either pay the fine or write up an appeal, stating any extenuating circumstances that necessitated their parking in an area for which they don't have a parking sticker. (e.g. - moving furniture, any kind of emergency, etc.).

Appeals that are granted, like the parking fees themselves, tend to be very arbitrary. Parking officials tend to shift responsibility back and forth until the student, out of sheer frustration, puts up the money, whether or not the fine is justified. According to one student who has been hassled by the board, very few appeals are actually accepted, and the selection is arbitrary.

DiCarlo, expressing his own frustration with the system, advises students to take their grievances to Robert Kittle, director of the parking office, or Al Gross of the Parking and Transportation Council, or contact Joe at 545-0600, for some positive action. There is also some question as to where the parking fee monies are going - anywhere from $5 to $41 per car. There are many unanswered questions, and students are encouraged too: make their voices heard; demand that parking officials take responsibility for their actions; and form a coalition to discuss the parking situation and possible affirmative action to cut through the red tape to find out why their appeals are generally denied, and where their money is in fact going.

Joe DiCarlo will be glad to talk with students who are tired of dealing with the bureaucracy and want to take some action. Hopefully this will be a positive step toward making the Parking Appeals Board more accountable and accessible. Its your money, and you have a right to know how it is being spent or misspent.

Doctors say operation should cure

Nixon has urgent surgery for new blood clot

By TERRANCE W. MOGARRY

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Nixon underwent emergency surgery yesterday after discovery of a new blood clot endangering his life and doctors said afterwards their insertion of a clip on a vein in his groin should overcome the danger permanently.

The 61-year-old Nixon was described as "doing well" and in "Stable" condition after an operation of about an hour starting at 5:30 a.m. PST by five doctors at Long Beach Memorial Hospital.

The "urgent surgery" was ordered Monday night, with Nixon's agreement, by his personal physician, Dr. John Lungren, when a new test showed another clot in the left leg above those found before and closer to the vena cava which leads directly to the heart.

"The new clot threatened to become a pulmonary embolus and thus endanger Mr. Nixon's life," Lungren said.

Dr. Eldon B. Hickman, head of the surgical team, said a plastic clip was placed across the iliac vein in the left groin above the thigh which would partially but not completely cut off blood flow and thus prevent loose clot fragments from passing.

The clip, about an inch long, resembles a bobby pin with one edge serrated.

Mrs. Pat Nixon was in the hospital during the operation and in the former President's room when he returned. She was described as "strained and trying to keep herself up during these difficult times."

Rosemary Woods, Nixon's longtime personal secretary, came to the hospital shortly after the operation. Daughters Julie Eisenhower and Tricia Cox were flying here and were expected to arrive early in the evening.

Former press secretary Ronald Ziegler said Nixon phoned him Monday night and told him about the pending operation. Ziegler said he then informed the White House. He said there had been no word from President Ford since Nixon reentered the hospital last Wednesday.

Ziegler said he poked his head into Nixon's room after the operation but did not speak to him. "The President, being weak, was beginning to sleep," Ziegler said.

Hickman said doctors do not anticipate the need for any further surgery.

"The operation took about one hour and was an uneventful procedure," Hickman told reporters at a news conference along with Lungren about an hour after the surgery was completed.

Nixon's profanity spurs Hunt to tell truth, he testifies

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Master spy E. Howard Hunt Jr. testified yesterday that President Richard M. Nixon's "contemptuous references" to the Watergate burglars as "idiots" and "jackasses" helped persuade him to tell the truth about Watergate.

Hunt, a CIA spy for 19 years and an acknowledged mastermind of the 1971 Ellsberg and 1972 Watergate break-ins, also insisted he had neither blackmailed nor extorted the White House in his demands for money during the Watergate cover-up.

Hunt was cross-examined during his second day on the stand at the Watergate cover-up trial now in its 21st day. Jeb Stuart Magruder, Nixon's former campaign director, was to follow Hunt to the stand. Hunt was convicted in the original trial and Magruder later pleaded guilty to conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Other defendants in the case are former Nixon aides H.R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and Kenneth Parkinson and former assistant Attorney General Robert Mardian, all charged with conspiracy to cover up high-level involvement in the break-in at the offices of the Democratic National Committee June 17, 1972.

Hunt had testified Monday that he decided to tell the truth about after a reading of the transcripts of the White House tapes convinced him "these men were not worth my continued loyalty."

"If these people had met your demands, would your testimony still be they were not worth protecting?" asked William O. Hundley, attorney for former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, one of the five defendants.

"You're asking for a subjective judgment..." Hunt began. "Absolutely," Hundley interrupted.

"Certainly, at the time I read the transcripts of the White House tapes, I felt a rude awakening. I read the President's Richard M. Nixon's contemptuous reference to us who had gone to prison as 'idiots and jackasses.' I realized that there had been wild scrambling for months in the White House to protect themselves and very little thought had ever been given to our plight, much less to money which was the easiest thing for them to give to ease our burden."

Hunt finished his testimony in mid-afternoon.

Ford threatens tough attitude on inflation

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Ford signaled a get-tough attitude to hold down oil imports and said yesterday he "will be open to suggestions" for revising his anti-inflation program if the economy continues to falter.

In a wide-ranging news conference, Ford also reported progress in nuclear arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union, reaffirmed his support for vice presidential nominee Nelson A. Rockefeller and announced a shakeup in the federal energy hierarchy.

Ford convened the surprise White House news conference about an hour after the government announced that leading economic indicators had taken the sharpest one-month plunge in 23 years.

The first questioner cited that gloomy economic news and asked Ford whether he was ready to amend the anti-inflation program he announced earlier this month.

Ford responded that he believes his proposals are a sound, "finely tuned...constructive program" but said Congress must act on portions of it.

"In the interim, if there are any economic factors which justify a change I will be open to suggestions," he added.

The President would not apply the label "recession" to what he acknowledged were "some difficult economic circumstances."

"Whether it is a recession or not a recession is immaterial," he said. "We have problems... we want solutions..."

When Ford was asked about possible limits on Arab oil imports, he responded that he believes his voluntary energy conservation recommendations can achieve the goal of cutting imports by 1 million barrels per day. But he added:

"If there isn't the saving of 1 million barrels per day of oil imports by voluntary action, we will, of course, move to any other alternative, including the possibility of mandatory limitations, to achieve that result."

In answer to another economic question, Ford said he was making "a maximum effort" to trim the current federal budget by $5.4 billion to a $300-billion ceiling, and spoke of the possibility of sharper cuts - perhaps totaling $7.5 billion.

As for the budget he will send Congress early next year, he declared "it will be a tight budget, a very tight budget," but cited no figures.

Promises more nationalization

Wilson pledges to further British Socialism

LONDON [UPI] — Queen Elizabeth II, wearing the imperial state crown and royal gold and silver robes, yesterday read a speech written by Prime Minister Harold Wilson's Labor government promising to take Britain still farther along the road to becoming a fully-fledged Socialist country.

Wilson pledged a big new dose of nationalization and other forms of state control over industry.

His speech called for new soak-the-rich taxes, including a possible wealth tax, bigger social security benefits and higher pensions.

Later, Conservative opposition leader Edward Heath accused the Wilson government of dividing the nation.

"These policies are going to divide the nation," an angry Heath declared. "Many of the measures proposed are irrelevant to our present situation and many of them will be positively damaging."

The Queen unveiled the Wilson government's legislative program in the traditional speech from the throne at the opening of a new parliament.

Accompanied by her husband Prince Philip, Elizabeth drove to parliament in the gilded Irish state coach drawn by four gray horses.

Concerned by recent bombing attacks, including one Monday at the Birmingham home of a government minister, security authorities threw a cordon of thousands of troops and police around Parliament and streets leading to it on the 20-minute drive from Buckingham Palace.

They included police sharpshooters on rooftops. But there were no incidents.

The government announced plans for state takeovers of the shipbuilding and aircraft industries, of land available for building and of Britain's rich North Sea and other offshore oil resources.

It announced creation of a state-run National Enterprise Board, which will buy into and have a big say in running major businesses still in private ownership in exchange for financial aid.

It confirmed government plans to let the nation vote within 12 months whether it is to remain in the Common Market. However, it left open whether this would be through a referendum or another general election.

It announced plans for creation of directly elected assemblies for Scotland and Wales, to give them greater control over their own affairs, legislation to end discrimination against women, continued subsidies for basic foods and more homes for rent.

"At home," the speech said, "my government, in view of the gravity of the economic situation, will as its most urgent task seek the fulfilment of the social contract as an essential element in its strategy for curbing inflation."

The so-called "social contract" is an agreement that the labor unions will keep a voluntary lid on pay demands.

Jordan to boycott Mideast talks if PLO attends as spokesmen

RABAT [UPI] - A high-ranking aide to King Hussein said yesterday Jordan has decided not to go to Geneva if the Middle East peace talks are resumed in view of the Arab summit decision to recognize if the Palestinian Liberation Organization as the sole spokesmen for Palestinians.

The Jordanian diplomat told newsmen the decision reached by the Arab leaders in Rabat would make Jordan's participation in the Arab-Israeli negotiations meaningless.

Observers said the reported Hussein decision was expected to throw further obstacles in the way of peace although some Arab sources said Hussein may change his mind later. Israel had agreed to talk with Jordan but said it would never negotiate with the PLO whom it has characterized as murderers or agree to creation of a sovereign Palestinian state.

The PLO, bolstered by the summit pledge to help establish a Palestinian state, said it will intensify its military, diplomatic and political drive against Israel and possibly set up a government-in-exile soon.

A PLO spokesman condemned Israel's existence as an artificial "product of Zionism" grafted onto Palestine with the aim of assembling in the ancient land all Jews from the world at the expense of other races.

There was no official comment from Israel on the Arab summit recognition of the Palestinian claims to the Israeli-occupied West Bank of Jordan which dealt a major diplomatic setback to King Hussein. Israeli newspapers said, however, that the emergence of the Palestinian guerrillas as the dominant force in the West Bank had struck a heavy blow at Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's Middle East peace efforts and virtually torpedoed the Geneva peace conference.

There was no indication yet whether the United States would notify its position toward the PLO after Monday's summit decision making the PLO the future ruler of an eventual independent Palestine and thus the only legal authority over Palestinians living in occupied territory.

U.S., India pledge to prevent nuclear spread, world hunger

NEW DELHI [UPI] - The United States and India set the seal on their reconciliation yesterday by pledging to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and to cooperate in fighting world hunger.

A join U.S.-Indian communique, published on the eve of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's takeoff for Bangladesh, also confirmed that President Ford has accepted Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's invitation to visit India next year.

The communique made no mention of U.S. food shipments to India. But Indian officials said India expects to receive at least one million tons of U.S. grain this year on easy terms.

Diplomatic sources said the shipments would not be announced immediately because neither side wanted it to appear as if Kissinger came bearing gifts.

Nor did the communique mention the projected U.S. naval base on Diego Garcia atoll in the Indian Ocean, which India has vehemently criticized.

The communique reflected mutual satisfaction that Kissinger and Mrs. Gandhi have eased their strained political relationships. They were reported shouting at each other during their last meeting in November, 1971, in Washington just before the United States made its "tilt" to Pakistan during the Indo-Pakistan war.

Both countries acknowledged "there was considerable scope" for further improvement in U.S.-Indian relations.

Kissinger leaves Wednesday for Bangladesh, the third major stop on his Oct. 22-Nov. 5 tour of nine countries.

The communique said it was hoped the World Food Conference in Rome will find "a way of conserving world food stocks and making them available to the most seriously affected developing nations on more favorable terms." Kissinger will address the conference Nov. 6.

The communique reflected Kissinger's worries over the possibility that the Indian nuclear explosion May 18 might lead to India's developing nuclear weapons and trading nuclear weapons technology to the Arabs in exchange for oil.

Supreme Court agrees to decide if death penalty is constitutional

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday accepted an appeal asking that the death penalty in the United States be banned outright and forever as "cruel and unusual" punishment.

The lives of at least 149 men on death row across the country could ride on the decision the court will hand down in the appeal of Jesse Thurman Fowler of Raleigh, N.C., under death sentence for murder.

Oral arguments on the case will be set, probably early next year, with a written opinion to follow.

The NAACP, which is handling nine appeals from North Carolina and Georgia challenging capital punishment, says 149 men are on death rows in 17 states. North Carolina has the most: 49. Twenty-nine states and the federal government have death penalty statutes.

No one has been legally executed in the United States since Luis Monge died in Colorado's gas chamber on June 2, 1967, for killing his wife and three of his 10 children.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1972 that the death penalty is unconstitutional if applied in an "arbitrary" or "freakish" fashion. Only two of the five-man court majority wanted to ban capital punishment outright. The other three justices said the death penalty is too often applied to the poor and black, and that laws should be rewritten so that persons committing the same kinds of crime all receive the same penalty.

In North Carolina, the state Supreme Court rewrote the law before it was passed by the Legislature last April. That fact could be crucial, since the U.S. Supreme Court could decide to base a ruling on whether the state court had that power.

But they didn't tell the parents

Boston leaders knew busing was coming

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent
First of a 4 part series

BOSTON [AP] — The mayor knew, the governor knew, the cardinal knew. So did the city council, the school committee and the state politicos.

They knew that forced busing was inevitably coming to Boston to correct the obvious racial imbalance in the school system, because it was the law of the land.

But Boston's leaders didn't get around to telling Boston's parents. The winner of every state and city election in 10 years solemnly promised that he wouldn't allow forced school busing in the city.

Suddenly this autumn, black faces peering from yellow school bus windows began arriving in white neighborhoods. This set off a shock wave of street demonstrations, school boycotts and random thuggery that has the city still teetering nervously at the prospect of worse violence.

Many have blamed it all on deep-seated racial prejudice in the city's Irish and Italian communities. But an increasing number of thoughtful Bostonians and interested outside observers see the root cause of this autumn of discontent as the horrendous failures of Boston's leaders to prepare the city.

And in addition to its politicians, Boston also seems to have been illserved in other areas of leadership, making it impossible to do quietly in Boston, the cradle of American liberty, what was accomplished in Denver, Athens, Ga., and other U.S. cities that implemented federal court orders to bus their kids without violence.

The list is a long one.

First, the politicians.

"They kept telling everyone that busing would never come, even though it was the law of the land elsewhere. The politicians kept telling the voters Boston was above the law," said Harvard professor Dr. Thomas F. Pettigrew, a nationally-recognized city planner.

"The politicians have played on the fears of the people, have worked them up to fever pitch," said Forbes Bottomley, a former Seattle superintendent of schools who helped draw up Boston's school desegregation plan last year.

The most vociferous of the politicians is Louise Day Hicks, who 11 years ago as a housewife from the Irish Catholic stronghold of South Boston made her first public stand against racial desegregation generally and school busing in particular.

Mrs. Hicks began winning elections that way. First to the Boston School Committee, then to Congress and now the Boston City Council.

She became a model for ambitious South Boston politicians, particularly State Rep. Raymond Flynn, who organizes antibusing demonstrations from his low-income housing project of "Old Colony," and state Sen. William M. Bulger, who told a cheering audience a week after school began this year: "We won't rest until busing goes to hell."

Vets' bill in danger

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford indicated yesterday he has reservations about a bill increasing veterans' education benefits and said he has not decided whether to sign it.

The veterans education bill would increase by some 20 per cent aid to ex-GIs attending college. The Senate held onto it during the current election recess, apparently fearing the President might veto it as inflationary.

Ford said at a news conference he wants to help Vietnam veterans but noted that Congress had added extra loan and length of eligibility benefits beyond what had originally been planned.

Economic signs drop

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Commerce Department reported yesterday the nation's index of leading economic indicators suffered its worst plunge in 23 years last month. A department economist called it a "signal that bad times are ahead."

"The index seems to be delivering a message," he added in contrast to a "moderating inflationary forces" interpretation by Assistant Commerce Secretary James L. Pate following the report.

Gas stations warned

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts service stations have been warned against buying emission control bypass manuals because state law prohibits tampering with these automobile anti-pollution devices.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn released an open letter to station operators yesterday urging them to reject a solicitation he said many have received from a Michigan Mail order house. Quinn said that while removal of these pollution control fixtures by individuals does not violate federal law, it is against the state law.

UMW calls meeting

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The United Mineworkers Union has called its Bargaining Council to Washington for a Friday meeting, but UMW officials cautioned today against speculation that it could end the threat of a nationwide strike by coal miners next month.

The current contract expires Nov. 12 and negotiators for 120,000 union miners and 1,200 mines were at work on negotiations yesterday.

A UMW spokesman said today that union president Arnold Miller's call for the Bargaining Council to meet Nov. 1 was to advise them of the "progress we've made to that point."

Sawhill leaves energy post due to policy, style conflicts

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford yesterday accepted the resignation of John C. Sawhill as federal energy administrator and named a new team to head the agency. Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton said Sawhill was asked to leave because of policy and style differences.

Ford told a news conference that Sawhill's departure was not connected with the energy chief's calls for possible gasoline tax hikes.

But Morton said later at a White House session with reporters: "I decided that someone else with a different style would serve this council better." Morton refused to get into specifics, saying Sawhill can still serve the government well in other capacities.

Ford explained that he wanted to give Morton, the new overall administration energy coordinator, a free hand to pick his own staff. Named to succeed Sawhill was Andrew E. Gibson, 52, a former assistant commerce secretary for maritime affairs.

Asked if the difference in style came from Sawhill's advocacy of forced energy conservation methods such as a gasoline tax, compared to Morton's preference for voluntary methods, Morton said, "I'll buy that."

"He asked me on the telephone a day or so before he resigned if I thought the President wanted him to resign," Morton said. "I told him I thought the President did want him to resign, and he probably should resign."

Morton said in addressing a problem such as energy the team involved must have "a sense of working together ... of executive compatibility. If there was something lacking it was in that area."

Morton said he recommended that Sawhill be given another job in government since he "is a very, very able person. It's more a matter of style."

If voluntary measures fail, Morton said, then he was in agreement with Ford that "we should come forward with some tougher turkey."

Morton met with reporters following a meeting with executives of the four major domestic automakers, plus some importers, called to set in motion a program to meet the President's role of producing cars by 1980 that will use 40 per cent less fuel than current models.

Morton, Transportation Secretary Claude Brinegar and Russell Train, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, said the meeting was productive but that no commitments were sought from the automakers. They said the session won an agreement from the industry to cooperate in exploring the problem and in starting the fuel conservation program in its early stages.

Nearly 100 discrepancies found in Kennedy testimony

BOSTON [AP] — Following a two-month investigation, the Boston Globe says it has found nearly 100 discrepancies in testimony and statements of several persons connected with the 1969 Chappaquiddick auto accident involving Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

In a copyrighted story yesterday, the Globe also reported "contradictions" between Kennedy's testimony and public statements about the accident, which killed Mary Jo Kopechne, and statements of others involved.

The report also quoted a "highly knowledgeable source" as saying Kennedy's cousin, Joseph Gargan, almost accepted responsibility for the accident, but the senator vetoed the plan.

The souce said the plan was abandoned shortly before Kennedy reported the mishap to police, a report which the senator says was delayed almost 10 hours after the accident.

Kennedy abandoned the plan to shift responsibility, the source told the Globe, because he "decided the alibi either couldn't work, or he couldn't live with it."

Concerning inconsistencies in various testimony, the newspaper's list included the following:

—Miss Kopechne wanted to leave the party she and Kennedy were attending before the accident because she was ill, Kennedy's chauffeur said. Kennedy told the Globe he did not remember the woman making such a statement.

—Witnesses said Kennedy chatted casually about sailing hours after the accident. Kennedy said he was emotionally upset after the mishap and did not join in such conversation.

—Kennedy said he established the time of an event the night of the crash with a clock in a car that the Globe said never had a clock in it. The newspaper said it had located the auto on Chappaquiddick. Kennedy told the Globe he was "mistaken" about the clock and may have looked instead at his watch.

Sargent blames Watergate

Gubernatorial race puts burden on incumbent

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts gubernatorial campaign has become an unusual contest in which the power and prestige of the governor's office have become a heavy burden for the incumbent.

Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent is an underdog, according to even his own polls. A Sargent victory would be a stunning comeback from a huge mid-October deficit.

Democrat challenger Michael S. Dukakis built a big lead against Sargent and has been forced to go on the defensive in the late stages of what has become a hard-hitting fight.

Sargent blames Watergate for his predicament. But, while the Washington scandal was expected to hurt many political incumbents, few experts thought the governor would trail by 25 percentage points with the Nov. 5 election just around the corner.

Instead of defending his record in office, the governor was forced into an unusual role for an incumbent attacking the challenger as if Dukakis was the man he was trying to unseat.

Dukakis started his campaign early — a year ago — built a strong grass roots organization and soundly defeated Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn in the Sept. 10 primary.

Sargent, in political hot water after six years in office, had trouble with the conservatives in his own small Massachusetts GOP, and had to spend valuable time and money in a primary contest against his former commerce commissioner, Carroll P. Sheehan.

The governor was still on an uphill course after the primary and a Boston Globe poll showed him far behind in mid-October. The governor insisted he trailed by "only" 10 points.

Meanwhile, the two candidates focused a major part of their campaigns on a series of television debates. Two of the debates included their lieutenant governor running mates. The campaign was gentlemanly at first, but heated up when Sargent realized he was on the brink of defeat.

Dukakis hammered away at the state's 8.1 per cent jobless rate and Sargent's alleged mismanagement of the state economy.

Sargent began blasting Dukakis, a former state representative from liberal Brookline and the party's lieutenant governor nominee in 1970, for making campaign pledges he allegedly cannot keep.

A major issue focused on Dukakis' charge that the state has had new taxes in each of the past three years. Sargent said that was untrue. The debate narrowed to a semantic argument on what constitutes a "tax" and whether the candidates were counting fiscal or calendar years.

The GOP side also focused on absenteeism in the legislature by Dukakis' running mate, state Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill III.

O'Neill, son of the majority leader of the U.S. House of Representatives, missed 78 per cent of his roll calls this year, while he was campaigning for the party nomination.

Dukakis urges more consumers advocacy

BOSTON [AP] — Democratic gubernatorial nominee Michael S. Dukakis proposed yesterday that the state Consumers Council take the leading role in advocating consumer rights in Massachusetts.

Specifically, he suggested that the council represent the public at rate increase hearings before state regulatory agencies. He proposed that money assessed against utility companies to help pay for the state investigation of their rate hike requests be turned over to the council.

The council could use the funds to investigate the requests and would be the leading advocate for the consumer at hearings on the requests, Dukakis said.

He made the propsal at a news conference called to announce the endorsement of his candidacy by "a bipartisan group of consumer advocates."

Among those listed in the endorsement were a number of Democratic legislators, U.S. Rep. Michael Harrington, D—Mass., and two consumer lawyers in the state attorney general's office.

At the news conference, Dukakis said that during the 1960s' the legislature "put together what I think is the best consumer legislation in the contry.

"The problem is that putting the legislation into the statute books is not enough...What frustrates us is the failure of state government to implement the law."

Dukakis said the Consumers Council was created in the early 1960s to be a "tough independent agency," and it would be logical to have the council represent the public at rate hearings.

The council now sends representatives to testify at many of the hearings. Its statuatory obligation is to keep the legislature, executive branch and the public informed about consumer trends. But it has maintained a relatively low profile in recent years, particularly as the responsibility for protecting the consumer interest spead to more state agencies.

Dukakis hit on special education

BOSTON [UPI] — Advocates of Chapter 766 —the Special Education Act of 1972 —have accused Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael S. Dukakis of pulling the rug from under persons who are trying to implement the controversial law.

At a news conference called last week, the Coalition for special Education said Dukakis' statements that he would not have signed the measure into law without the funding to pay for it, "not only undermines the push for implementation...but also undermines the efforts of those...who have moved ahead to provide education for all our children at last."

HP pocket-sized calculators give you answers you can trust. (Why we chose to be different.)

Most pocket-sized calculators have an = key, and you can pick up one you've never seen before and solve a simple equation by entering values the way they're written and pressing = to see your answer.

Pick up one of our pocket-sized machines and you'll hunt in vain for the = key. Instead you'll see one that says ENTER and you'll wonder what to do with it.

To find out, you'll have to look in the Operating Manual. When you do, you may think, "Why did they go this route when they could have kept it simple?"

But as you work the examples in the manual and practice with your own problems, you'll find yourself thinking, "This is very easy, and I'm getting answers I can really trust."

Easy because you always enter your data the same way—from left to right, the way you read an equation, but without having to keep track of parentheses and brackets.

Trust because you see the result of each intermediate calculation displayed as you perform it, and you can check your progress and correct errors as you go. You can also go back and review stored numbers at any time.

When we started out to design a small, powerful scientific calculator several years ago, we assumed it would have an = key. It did, in the breadboard stage.

But along the way from breadboard to prototype, our designers realized that there was a better method which got around some of the severe limitations inherent in the "algebraic" approach.

These limitations start showing up as problems get more complicated and you have to spend a lot of time figuring out how to put them into an algebraic calculator. "A plus B times C minus D divided by E equals" won't do it.

You find you must write down intermediate answers to re-enter later. You may work your way through a long equation and see an answer you know is wrong. Where did you goof?

Or you may get a wrong answer and think it's right. Disaster.

Our non-algebraic approach, not only makes it unnecessary for you to write and re-enter intermediate results, but gives you the continuous feedback you need to avoid ending up with a wrong answer.

It's an approach we first adapted and applied some years ago, using an unambiguous, parentheses-free language developed by the Polish mathematician Jan Lukasiewicz.

Before you invest in a pocket-sized calculator, you should look beyond its ability to solve simple problems in the most obvious way.

Come into the University Store and get a free copy of the booklet ENTER vs. — to understand more fully the difference between the RPN approach and the algebraic one. Make your own judgement, based on the knowledge of the difference and on your needs.

While you're in the store take a look at it and try one of the Hewlett-Packard pocket-sized calculators.

New gay awareness

By GARRISON L. ROUSSEAU

"Homosexuals are supposed to keep their homosexuality a secret. Their most intimate contacts will usually be with other homosexuals. And thus the subculture thrives - a culture kept beneath the regular culture." ---- John Murphy, in Homosexual Liberation: A Personal View.

Homosexuality is emerging from the closet, and gaining a new acceptance and position in the community. This awareness and frankness has caused the formation of organizations to provide services and a larger source of identity for gay men and women.

To be young and gay at this university is a positive experience. There is sufficient liberality to allow for freedom of expression, and a large enough base to permit the funding of the Student Homophile League and Gay Women's Caucus as Recognized Student Organizations. Both of these organizations serve as outlets where gay men and women can drop in between classes and during the evening to meet and talk with other gay students. For students and members of the community already sure of their sexuality and safe within their gay life, the SHL and GWC serve as social organizations, but for those as yet unsure they offer a variety of services to ease the difficult transitional period.

It is within this scope of aiding other students in identifying their sexuality that the SHL and the GWC see one of their major functions. Coming-out does not necessarily radically change one's lifestyle nor even necessitate making a public avowal of one's new-found social role, but merely to live more honestly with one's self. Both groups try to reach those who suppress their true sexuality and perhaps are miserable because of it.

Coming-out is not the same for everyone. For some, it is a quick effortless transition; for others, it can be painfully slow. No matter how it is achieved, every member of the SHL and the GWC have gone through it, and as such stand ready to attempt to help others through their own personal experience. Nor has each member come to the same conclusions; some have told their family and friends, others are not ready or have decided not to.

Despite one's possible preconceived ideas of homosexual men being limp-wristed fags and the lesbian woman being reminescent of football players - these ideas of gay people as a radical fringe group are immediately dispelled upon visiting either of the two offices. Certainly these stereotypes exist, but no more so than with any other organization. What makes for this heterogeneous mixture? I was told by several members that when one comes out, one does not want to lose touch with one's own identity or values. There are many roads that lead to being gay, and it does not have to take the form of a wild and libidinous lifestyles, as one might tend to suppose. One can live with one's self and still be gay.

The SHL and GWC are primarily social groups and not political in their scope. There are no egregious demands upon Whitmore for privileges or recognition, and they consider themselves students who happen to be gay. There is here a basic belief of working within the system and the society. Upon this premise of being a social organization, the Homophile League and Women's Caucus offer such varied fare as dances, coffeehouses, a Speakers Bureau, a small library of gay-related books, a gay-line, and a gay radio program. All of these functions are designed with more than just the homosexual in mind, and they do more than merely attempt to entertain those already members of the League or Caucus. These programs are also an attempt at disseminating information to the campus community in order to breakdown stereotypes and fears by heterosexual men and women about the gay life, and also to give information to those still unsure about themselves.

Both organizations maintain offices in the Student Union which serve as a place for people to come in and talk, receive informal counselling, or even aid in finding a gay roommate. Also within the office is the gay-line which besides counselling offers information about gay activities at the university and in the community. The line which is staffed by men and women, operates each weeknight on an anonymous basis. For more in-depth discussions anyone can drop in the office or call to arrange a meeting outside of the office. The line is open to everyone whether it is straight people calling for information on how to deal with gay friends, as a referral service for professional help, or to talk with someone regarding gay life.

The Speakers Bureau consists of students and people from the community who visit high schools, other colleges, religious organizations, and social groups in the Pioneer Valley. The Bureau which, on an invitation basis, holds lectures, question and answer periods, the presentation of skits, poetry, and music, is an attempt to provide the truth about homosexuality and to shatter misconceptions that society has maintained. This multi-media approach further aims at opening minds to an awareness that gay people are not significantly different from anyone else.

Besides the many services already mentioned the SHL and GWC sponsor a dance or coffeeshop each month. These can serve as a place where gay men and women can meet other gays, in an informal friendly atmosphere which for new people may help them to gradually come out.

Lest one think it is all fun and no work, it should be noted that the SHL and GWC do take definitive political action at the proper moment. There is a need for concerted efforts to protect the rights and privileges of all homosexuals. In regards to this aspect both organizations have joined the National Gay Task Force. As the national organization for gay men and women, it helps to keep local chapters informed as to Congressional actions, societal conditions, and to help to establish an identity on a national scale.

The offices of the Gay Women's Caucus and the Student Homophile League, located on the second floor of the Student Union, are open Monday through Friday.

Letters to the editor

Like it or leave it education

To the Editor:

It seems that a number of administrators, faculty, and students have had enough of the experimentation and educational innovation which supposedly characterizes the last ten years or so. We are being prepared for an upsurge of the like-it-or-leave-it-ism which would like to imagine that all problems which affect the growth and development of students are susceptible to technical, managerial, procedural solutions.

This managerial attitude toward education, designed to "produce" a class of yes-men and yes-women, may be the most humane way to condition individuals to go through life-as-bureaucracy with a minimum of hassles. At the same time, it makes a travesty of education's role in liberating the individual -- that is, in encouraging in each one of us the ability and experience necessary for us to stand on our own feet without having to kick other people's shins.

Maybe this sounds pretty high-flown. But many of us who don't fit into the slots being fashioned for us may have to go underground. We may have to carve out for ourselves individual programs of educational reform without having the luxury of inviting others to share in them with us. The sixties, however fucked up they might appear to us these days, did try to make the point that the quality of education in the university and the quality of life in society could not artificially be separated.

The push for a return to business-as-usual, to normalcy, is a push toward a return to repression in the name of standards, to anti-intellectualism in the name of vocational training, to Viet Nam, to race hatred, to sexual misunderstandings, to cynicism, to opportunism, to emotional manglings of all varieties, to a crack-the-whip where there is only one acceptable response, to be shouted in unison, when some sergeant-major shouts, "say, kids, what time is it?"

Paranoid? Well who wouldn't be paranoid when one reads in the Collegian story after story about the ways students' trust is betrayed and student susceptibilities exploited? Don McGilvray and Kris Jackson spell it out day after day, and soon they may be silenced.

Anyway, my point is that the problems which confront all of us on all levels require for their possible solutions not the restriction but the development of people's resources and talents. If academic programs can aid in that development, so much the better for us and, in the long run, for the university.

Spalding versus Bellotti

To the Editor:

The contest for Attorney General in Massachusetts has shapened up to a contest between Josiah Spalding v. Francis X. Bellotti. Unfortunately, the voters have a tough decision. Vote for the unknown Spalding or for the inconsistent Bellotti. We say vote for Spalding.

As Governor Sargent said of Frank Bellotti, "All he does is run, and run, and run..." It is our concensus that the voters have been correct the past ten years in not electing Bellotti. To any office he ran for. However, just as Richard Nixon came back from the doldrums to become president (you can fool all the people all the time), Frank Bellotti has also awoken to find himself a contender.

Frank Bellotti is just not the type of man we want as chief law officer of Massachusetts. Bellotti started his campaign with the promise of a full disclosure of his earnings and recent tax statements. The promise was rescinded when it came time for him to do this. Bellotti is inconsistent, and if elected his policies as Attorney General will probably show this.

Frank Bellotti is a politician, not a law officer. He talks like a politician. He answers questions like a politician. Conversely, Josiah Spalding has the law enforcement background, and he has said while campaigning, "My first step when elected will be replacing politics with professionalism in the office."

While Josiah Spalding is not a Great choice for Attorney General, Francis Bellotti is no choice at all.

University credit union?

To the Editor:

The article on the Credit Union on Thursday contained some surprising comments. A credit union is a financial cooperative with all the ramifications of such a self-help organization. The essence of cooperatives is wise management by members through participation and control of the cooperative. For credit unions, wise use of money, in savings and borrowing, is the purpose of having the members manage their affairs. We all learn best by doing, and experiencing the pain of mistakes should produce the wisdom to avoid future problems.

True, when cooperatives become large, their behavioral characteristics change and they may become less of a participatory organization, but to assume that a cooperative shouldn't be started without professional labor seems to be losing sight of what the credit union movement is all about. There are thousands of credit unions who never have had a staff and perhaps never will, but they are run no worse for that fact alone. The Credit Union on campus probably started without a professional staff, as has been the case historically with most credit unions. Therefore, students shouldn't accept the theory of large organizations which would hinder their organizing a credit union. Organizing on a small scale, with member labor and support, is to follow the tradition of credit unions over a century old.

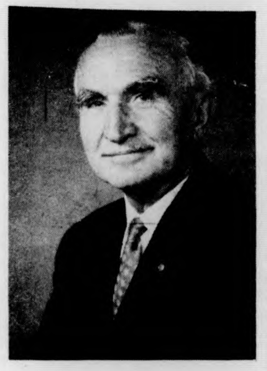
Morse, a maverick

The 73 year old man smiled and waved to the crowd, accepting his party's nomination for U.S. Senate, a position he had held for 24 years previous to his defeat in 1968. He was known worldwide as a fighter for what he truly believed in, and he was ready to start fighting again to regain his former legislative position.

Wayne Morse had served Oregon in the Senate throughout the entire administrations of Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson. He had begun his career as a liberal Republican from Wisconsin, following the doctrines of fighting Bob LaFollette, and he had continued to be a forceful factor in the Republican Party until 1952. Until that point, he had vigorously supported Dwight Eisenhower for president, but during the 1952 campaign, he saw Eisenhower fall into the hands of compromise, and he could no longer have found it in his heart to support him, saying,

"The demogoguery, double-talk and dangerous desertion by Eisenhower in this campaign of his once-professed political principles leaves me no honorable course of action but to disassociate myself completely from his candidacy. The Eisenhower I supported for the nomination is not the Eisenhower who is dangling and dancing from campaign platforms at the end of political puppet strings being jerked by some of the most evil and reactionary forces in American politics."



WAYNE MORSE

With this, Morse switched to the Democratic Party and became a renowned firebrand of liberal principles and ideologies. His dislike for Eisenhower and his administration blossomed, until in 1960, he decided to run for the Democratic nomination for president against John Kennedy.

His presidential campaign was considered by most to be a farce and this was proven by his inability to win the primary in his own state of Oregon. From 1960 on, he continued to support strong antiwar policies, and probably his most well-known move in recent political history was his refusal, along with Alaska Senator Ernest Gruening, to support the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution in 1965, which allowed Lyndon Johnson to escalate the Vietnam War.

Throughout his political career, Wayne Morse was always known as a fighter, bucking his own party when he felt it necessary. He was known as a statesman of great import and prestige and he continued to be a fighter until his death this past summer. At 73, the man was going to wage a comeback to the status he had previously held. He wanted to stand up on the Senate floor and go after Nixon tooth and nail as he had with the previous four presidents in either party. It seems ironic that he and Gruening would both die in the same summer, but such was the case in the summer of 1974.

There are certain characters in American history that must be admired for nothing other than their courage and persistence in standing up for their beliefs and ideals. Wayne Morse was such a man, and although his career was never dignified by a presidential or vice-presidential nomination, he was known and respected by all in the political world as a man who was never really afraid of anything. The worst that can be said of Morse's political existence is that he went looking for trouble. When things became too comfortable, he decided to change them, and when he felt that someone had betrayed him, he was the first to holler about it.

Morse was a leader who was never really in fashion in the political world. His ideas were often far ahead of their time, and it was difficult for him to concede to the defeat of those ideas. He was a maverick in a world full of regulars and he was always out of place.

Russians hoarding our haddock

By MIKE IZDEPSKI

Oh great Ford, where have all the fishes gone? No, Euelle Gibbons won't tell, but fact is, they're into Russian nets crammed every one! Alas, most of New England's cod and haddock stock have in the past years come to final rest in the gastric juices of Soviet bellies (together with an according amount of bread, that is whole grain American wheat bread). Meanwhile His almighty Fordship could care less what is happening here at home, as he meekly seeks refuge in the foreign politics shadow of his memoir writing predecessor, dreaming all along of the good old days back in Grand Rapids, when fish were no issue and football players no politicians.

Granted, ever since detente descended on us unworthy semi-zombies through the divine hands of His Holiness Dr. Kissinger, we had better shut up and be grateful. But does this really give the Soviet Union and other countries (like Japan and East-Germany) the unquestioned right to deplete millions of pounds of our coastal marine life each year with their commercial fishing fleets?

It is a known fact that the fishing waters of the world are not nearly as vast as the oceans themselves. In fact, most of the great fishing grounds are limited to the shallow coastal waters of the continental shelves, which extend about 200 miles offshore. Once the continental shelves drop off to the abyss of the ocean floor, the sea is practically barren of commercial fish life.

Yet so far the President has come out strongly against any legislative efforts to stop the fish slaughter, in fear that detente and allied relations could be jeopardized. Which only goes to show that Mr. Ford's military advisors, as so often, have failed to do their homework.

Otherwise they would know that the Studds (Dem., 12th District, Mass.) — Magnussen (Dem., Washington) bill now before Congress would only extend the fishing rights of the United States from the present 12 miles to 200 miles offshore. This has nothing whatsoever to do with territorial rights, which would remain fixed at 3 miles offshore.

Therefore, all the hysterical jabbering of Pentagon officials that American allies would retaliate against such a move by expelling all U.S. Naval ships from their waters is pure hogwash. Finally, if the Soviets want detente so badly as to allow 60,000 Russian Jews to emigrate each year, then surely they won't let a bunch of scaly beasts get in their way!

Nothing less than America's future is at stake, when alien nets are cast in our waters with meshes so close together that not only mama and papa fish, but also junior, the potential mama or papa of tomorrow, is raised from the fathoms of the deep to make acquaintance with oblivion. Coming generations may well curse us for indirectly obliterating one of man's richest protein sources, if we do not act today.

Also, thousands of New England fishermen, their antiquated boats already being brutally crowded out by flotillas of outlandish echo location ships and mother trawlers (the latter acting as huge storage bins for their fin bearing victims), may soon be out of jobs.

We the enduring people of Massachusetts, Maine and all the rest of those proud states are used to "special" treatment by our much loved government: We forgave, when most of our military bases were closed down, putting countless numbers of fellow citizens on the unemployment list. We forgave, when last winter during the energy crisis Texans adorned bumper stickers boosting our oil allocated morale with the words "Drive ninety, freeze a yankee!" Indeed, we shall forgive again. Only this time we must ask ourselves: can we afford to pay the price, when in some Siberian smokehouse the last American fish is left twisting...slowly in the wind.

Removing the requirements

Every UMie has confronted the core requirements, which consist of three humanities, three social sciences, three math sciences, and two rhetoric. What's more, a student enrolled in CASIAC has an additional humanity, social science and math science, as well as the passing of a fourth level language course. These requirements fill two whole years! Then, the lowly student chooses a major, and works to fill those requirements.

In the past year, there has been one small step in the right direction, but it represents a fraction of the total. This was the two credit Physical Education requirement which was dropped earlier this semester. This brought tears of joy in at least one UMie's eyes.

Requirements can be waived for many reasons, including participation in a program such as BDIC or Honors, as well as a variety of unspecified personal reasons. High college board scores also provide an out, but responsibility of verification lies on the student. Then there is the most frequently used out of all - the "gut" - which fills the requirement with as little input on the student's part as is humanly possible.

In fourth grade, it may have made sense to leave the burden of decision to the teacher. The teacher said "O.K., class, now we're going to read a story," and we did. Then, teacher said, "O.K., class, now we're going to look at George Washington crossing the Delaware," and the class did. Lastly, teacher said "O.K., class, now we're going to make pumpkins out of orange construction paper and we're going to cut out faces." And you'd better believe the class did - if somebody didn't, that somebody ended up doing one of three things: 1, standing in the hall. 2, going to the principal's office, or 3, entered the third grade. This may make sense in the fourth grade, but in a University? If we can't handle an active role in our own educational decision making, perhaps fourth grade is where we belong.

It's 11:15, and French 144. This is it, the last of the language requirement. Most of the class is half asleep, the ones that are taking this course pass-fail. One need only be half awake to pass this course with a D and therefore meet the language requirement. Oh, oh... What's this? A QUIZ??? A number of people abruptly awaken -- the remaining other two answer both questions correctly. They are the two that read the three pages assigned for the class.

This is a ridiculous waste of the professor's and those two student's time.

The core requirements as presently structured do allow a certain amount of freedom. To some extent, students can pick which courses in an area they can take. Certainly, that is better than outright required courses, but not much.

Why should students be forced to this level? One argument states that the real world is like this, so students might as well get used to it now. Swell.

The core requirements could be eliminated. The result might be that enrollment would drop in courses such as Food Science and Nutrition 100 for a semester or two, but it would probably pick up again because that course teaches hundreds of students a year something that they think they might be able to use.

SGA has raised the question of student involvement at this University in such issues as on campus living, mandatory eating in the dining commons, as well as the possibility of eliminating the core requirements. Presently, SGA is moving into the student community with petitions for a show of strength. The chance is there. We can let the concept of student power disintegrate into Whitmore's waiting hands, or we can act.

Mathematician speaks today on education

One of the country's leading mathematicians will take a hard look at contemporary education today in the inaugural talk of the Chancellor's Lecture Series at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Dr. Marshall Harvey Stone will speak on "Quality and Change in Education" at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Members of the UMass community, those from the Five Colleges, and the general public are cordially invited.

Before being named George David Birkhoff Professor of Mathematics at UMass in 1968, Dr. Stone served on the faculties of Harvard, Yale, Stanford, and Columbia Universities and was chairman of mathematics departments at Harvard and the University of Chicago.

Elected to the National Academy of Sciences at 35, he is known for his work in quantum field theory, the Stone-Weierstass Theorem, his representation theorem for Boolean Algebra, and the Stone-Czech Compactification. His grandfather, Fred Stone, was an Amherst resident; his father, Harlan Fiske Stone, was a Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Student Senate ups recycling effort

By MARTIN SMITH
Staff Correspondent

The Student Senate has invested about $18,000 in an expanded paper recycling project at the University, this Fall for picking up trash that is reusable from University buildings.

Managed by Environmental Action, the project is adding a disposal truck, more paper bins and an increased effort to gain more student and administration participation.

The addition of the 20-yard capacity packing truck and 30 more bins has made the expansion possible, Henry Doyle, coordinator of the project said. The Student Senate is financing the $12,500 cost of the truck and the $5,200 worth of paper bins.

Started in 1971, the recycling effort is collecting an average of six tons of paper a week from the bins located around campus. This is roughly three per cent of the total solid waste generated by the University.

The paper is now being sold to P. Alan & Son of Northampton for $10 a ton, which is up from $5 a ton nine months ago, Doyle said.

"The project at this point is just breaking even with collection expenses." Doyle added that with increased amounts being recycled, the profits, which go back to the Student Senate, can contribute to the funding of other student activities.

Pointing out that the present rate of recycling puts the truck into use only 17 hours a week, "It could and would be used if there was more paper to recycle," said Doyle. He also pointed to the need for an increased recycling effort at all levels of the University. "I'd particularly like the administration to support the paper recycling effort with positive action. The administration at present has not set any official university policy."

One action he suggested is that the physical plant incorporate the recycling of paper in buildings and dorms as part of the custodians' duties. The present attitude of the physical plant is that if the custodians want to help in recycling they can, but they leave it up to the individual. "Some do, and do a very efficient job at it. But most of the work, we admit, must come from the students.

"It can mean just getting into the habit of dropping a used newspaper into a recycling box or it can include working with a custodian in setting up a recycling system with a dorm," he said.

Drunkenness not a crime

Law defines rights of intoxicated persons

On July 1, 1973, Massachusetts abolished the ancient crime of being drunk although all the laws having to do with driving under the influence remain unchanged.

The Alcoholism Treatment and Rehabilitation Act (General Laws chapter 111B) governs drunks and drunkeness.

Section 3 of the statute describes a person as "Incapacitated" if he is intoxicated "by reason of the consumption of intoxicating liquor" who "is (1) unconscious, (2) in need of medical attention, (3) likely to suffer or cause physical harm or damage to property, or [4] disorderly."

Section 8 of the statute provides that any person who is "incapacitated" in a public place "may be assisted by a police officer with or without his consent to his residence, to a (detoxification) facility, or to a police station." The police officer may request the person to take a test for alcohol, including a breath test, but it is not required and it is a right of the person to be tested. The results of any such test are not admissable against the person tested for any purpose.

Once at the police station the "incapacitated person has the right to make one phone call.

When an "incapacitated" person is taken to a police station the nearest detoxification facility is notified. If treatment is available the person shall be transported to the facility where he may be held against his will up to forty-eight hours or until he is no longer "incapacitated", whichever is shorter.

the law & you

If the facility indicates that treatment is not available, the incapacitated person may be held at the police station in "protective custody" until he is no longer incapacitated or twelve hours, whichever is shorter.

A person in "protective custody" is not under arrest nor is he charged with a crime. Consequently, there is no arrest or criminal record although an entry is made in the police log of the date, time and place of custody.

In summary, protective custody would seem to require the following steps:

1. The officer must conclude that a person is (a) inconscious, (b) in need of medical attention, (c) a danger to himself, others or property or (d) disorderly by reason of consumption of alcohol ("incapacitated").

2. The officer may then employ reasonable force to take such person into "protective custody" (which he should probably advise such person, and then may elect to transport the person to his residence, a facility or the police station. In most cases the officer will have to take the incapacitated person to the police station if he has made the first conclusion, simply for protective purposes.

3. At the police station the officer in charge or the desk officer will be required to telephone the nearest facility and will probably need to report the apparent condition of the person and the circumstances of the situation. If the facility concludes that treatment is available the person will be transported to it. One may anticipate that this will be a relatively rare occurrence, at least in Amherst.

4. At this point the officer in charge should determine that the person is "incapacitated" and direct that he be held in "protective custody" until no longer "incapacitated" or for twelve hours, whichever is shorter. The person must be advised of the right to take some test of coherencey, coordination or breath. The details of the decision, the reasons, the date and time should be entered in the long.

5. The person must be permitted to make one phone call, but others should not be notified against the wishes of the person.

If the procedures are followed by the police and understood by citizens they should work to the benefit of all concerned with a minimum of anguish.

These provisions do not apply to "drunk driving" where specific rules apply. The rule of thumb as to whether a person has consumed enough alcohol to fail a Breathalyzer test is as follows: 3 in 1 hour, 4 in 2 hours and 5 in 3 hours being the ratio of alcohol in conventional measures of beer, wine and whiskey to time span of consumption. DO NOT FOOL YOURSELF. 15 ounces of beer more than equal 1¼ ounces of whiskey or 5 ounces wine!

Tenant farm union leader speaks today

H.L. Mitchell, a co-founder of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, will discuss his trade union organizing experiences in a lecture today at 4 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the UMass Student Union.

Mitchell, 68, served as the STFU executive secretary from 1934 to 1939, the period of significant union activity in Southern agricultural industries. In 1960 the union merged with the Amalgamated Meat Cutters, AFL-CIO. Mitchell was appointed agricultural representative for the Meat Cutters and spent years organizing dairy, rice and sugar employees in Southern states.

The lecture is sponsored by the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center Student Colloquia. All members of the UMass community are invited to attend. The lecture is open to the public without charge. For more information, call Gino Sorcinelli, 5-2884 (LRRC).

Army plans to freeze blackbirds to death

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Environmentalists have opened a fight with the Army over a plan to kill 14 million blackbirds this winter by spraying them with a chemical that will cause them to freeze to death.

The project affects two Army installations — Fort Campbell, Ky., and the Milan Army Ammunition Plant in Tennessee — where the Pentagon says huge flocks of the birds pose hazards to human health, aviation and farm crops.

The Environmental Defense Fund is threatening to take the Army to court because it says an environmental impact statement should have been filed. Such a statement, the fund said, would allow environmentalists to scrutinize the project to determine if it is really necessary and whether there is any human hazard involved.

The Army said it had determined that "the project will not create significant local, regional or national impacts on the environment and that no significant environmental controversy is associated with the project."

The fund said it was also concerned because the project may be the start of a nationwide effort by the Army to solve the bird problem, and the fund wants the rules made clear at the start.

The Army plans to employ helicopters and airplanes to drop a detergent-like chemical mixed with water on the roosting areas when the forecast calls for rain and falling temperatures. The chemical takes the protective oil away from the birds' feathers and when the temperature drops below 45 degrees they are chilled and eventually die of freezing.

The bird populations involved consist of 50 per cent starlings, 25 per cent grackles, 20 per cent cowbirds and 5 per cent red-wing blackbirds.

Ford defends Rockefeller

WASHINGTON [UPI — President Ford, urging prompt action on Nelson D. Rockefeller's nomination as vice president, yesterday characterized the ex-New York governor's $2 million in loans to his friends and family as the legal prerogative of a wealthy man.

Ford, speaking firmly and gripping the lectern, told a news conference his support of Rockefeller was unchanged by recent disclosures about the former governor's financial dealings.

Praising Rockefeller's past accomplishments, Ford said: "These disclosures indicate that he does believe in helping his friends, and a man of that wealth certainly, in my judgment, has that right to give as long as the law is obeyed, and as I understand, he has."

Ford added that he assumed Rockefeller would use the experiences of the past few weeks as a guide in dispensing any more loans in the future from his family's vast fortune.

The President added he was confident Rockefeller will be confirmed by Congress but he suggested the 25th Amendment, under which he became President and nominated Rockefeller, should be changed to provide for faster action.

"I think, for example, the Congress ought to study the desirability of putting a time limitation on the time that the Congress should have for the consideration - approval or rejection. But these are matters that Congress can, in the remaining days of this session, or in the next session, investigate, because of the experiences of the last year," Ford said.

Rockefeller has released two lists of loans he made over the past 17 years, totaling more than $2 million.

Interns needed for alternative education

There are two full time internship positions available for spring semester at the King Philip alternative education project for secondary school students in Greenfield. The King Philip Project is funded under the Special Education Act, Chapter 766, and is directed towards students who have dropped out of school or who are not making it well in school, and who need work in basic skills (reading, math), counseling, vocational skills and craft skills.

One volunteer is needed with strong skills in remedial math and one is needed as a general resource person. In addition, part time positions are available both now and in the spring. If interested, contact Laurie Klapper, director of the project at 774-2318, or come to the Outreach Office, 409 Goodell.

The Western Mass. Legal Services is in need of 6 to 15 full time interns beginning in the spring semester. The basic foundations of Legal Services is to further the cause of justice by providing free legal advice, representation, counseling, and education in non-criminal cases, for those persons unable to get it otherwise.

Paralegal positions are available in areas of welfare law, housing law, family law, and consumer law. The paralegal's role is to interview clients, do legal research pertaining to the individual's case, ascertain the facts, and consult with supervising attorneys as to the proper course of action in the client's case. Students will be assigned to the Holyoke, Pittsfield, Springfield, Northampton, or Greenfield offices. To study uncontrolled development

Two UMass environmentalists get state tasks

Two faculty from the Institute for Man and Environment at the UMass have been given assignments with the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

Dr. Carl P. Swanson, associate director of the institute, has been invited by Secretary of Environmental Affairs Charles H. W. Foster to head a team of UMass professors to assist the state in the identification and designation of "areas of critical environmental concern" where uncontrolled or imcompatible development could result in irreversible damage to the environment.

Dr. Ervin H. Zube, director of the institute, assumed part-time duties, at the invitation of Secretary Foster, as director of the Coastal Review Center of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. His work will involve evaluating major coastal zone activities and developing relevant information.

Dr. Swanson, a professor of botany, will develop criteria for the classification of critical land areas in the Commonwealth in terms of use, scarcity, vulnerability and other factors for the purposes of their identification and designation by appropriate state agencies. The types of areas to be classified include the coastal zone, wetlands, rare and valuable ecosystems, rivers, natural areas, buildings, structures or sites of special significance, lands of prime productivity, parks and wildlife areas, and others.

This process of identification and designation is a step toward land use legislation. Dr. Swanson is to submit a final report to the Executive Office by Nov. 15 for consideration by the legislature in early December of this year.

Working with Dr. Zube, who is a professor of landscape architecture at UMass, will be Professor Charles Terrell, a biologist on leave from Salem State Teachers' College.

Olevsky gives solo piano recital tonight

A recital of solo piano music will be presented by Estela Olevsky tonight at 8 in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

The program is open to the public free of charge. On the program will be works by Mozart, Beethoven, Albeniz and Prokofieff.

A native of Argentina, Estela Olevsky made her concert debut in Buenos Aires at the age of eight and studied piano at the National Conservatory there. She recently returned from a concert tour in New Zealand and is a member of the Music Department at the University of Massachusetts.

Five college exchange meets today

UMass and five-college students interested in spending a semester at one of the other campuses at no extra charge should attend a meeting of the Residential Exchange Program tonight in the UMass Campus Center.

The residential exchange program, begun this semester, is being organized by the Five College Student Coordinating Board.

The meeting will be in Campus Center room 917 at 6:45 p.m.

PAGE OF FOUR LETTER WORDS cost Student Government at UMaryland $411.26 in the Diamondback, campus publication, recently.

The ad was purchased by SGA to urge students to vote. It contained at least nine variations of the English language's most common four-letter expletive for sexual intercourse.

"We felt it would get results, if it had shock value," one SGA officer said.

NUDE CENTERFOLDS PREDICTED FOR ANNUAL at UBridgeport, according to a page 3 interview with Wistarian yearbook editor Lyn Weinberg in a recent Scribe.

"Any volunteers?" she is asking, after announcing "serious consideration" for a double centerfold "to liven up the 1975 book."

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK appears on page one of the Miami-Dade (Fla.) Community College Catalyst. "Inside Today: From rape to dance."

MEANWHILE, out on the Central Michigan campus, Life reports that "Women's Perspective" has appeared as a newspaper to counter the male chauvinism of the established campus press.

Sponsored by three campus women's groups, the publication will include articles of interest to both the liberated woman and the "woman who finds liberation either undesirable or unattainable."

Supported by ads and individual contributions, the paper is distributed free on campus and in the community.

QUICKIES is a column that appears in the Cape Cod Community College student newspaper. The label headlines announcing coverage, recently, include "Women", "Folk Event" and "Rape Seminar."

Hopefully, not in that order.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 30 — Born today, you are a reformer at heart. But you are also a realist and know full well that you cannot change the world to suit your own private and idealist image of it. You are practical and are therefore willing that mistakes should be corrected slowly, that other people should change their characters in minute ways, gradually perhaps even painfully. You know that there can be no forward movement without an occasional step backwards, that there can be no progress with now and then a period of retrogression.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Conserve your energy during morning hours if you would feel well enough to take advantage of an exceptional opportunity for gain during afternoon and evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Any problems which require for their solution entry by you into the affairs of others should be avoided, at least for the present.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Intuition — your own and that of a close friend — may prove to be your best bet when it comes to finding solutions to long-standing difficulties.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You will need to exercise considerable mental powers this morning. Don't be alarmed should you feel the need of a partner in thought.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is a day which presents you with a new way — if you will greet it with a new will. Don't expect gains to come effortlessly.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Leave social activities to others as you go about the business of furthering your career. An associate may cause tension during afternoon.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Concentrate on the development of an old theory of success. If you spend too much time look ahead you will miss a moment in the present for action.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Replenish your energy during morning hours. Get more rest than usual even if you have to shelve an enterprise or two for the time being.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that another's boredom doesn't rub off on you. You have plenty to keep you busy — if you will get down to work. Stop feeling sorry for yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Seek out new people and a change of scene. This is not the day for attempting to begin again on a project that seems doomed to failure.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Plan the day with another's long-range objectives in mind. You can be of great help to one who would do for you were he in a position to do so.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Make every effort to be receptive to another's ideas for advancement. You may be burning your bridges before you've crossed them.

Sports and the Black ethos

By ANTHONY BARNES
BNS

For a Black youth growing up in America, there is a constant barrage of mental hypocrisies flooding his mind. In his search for manhood he is taught that in this "free country" these doors are open. Many times the temptations of crime and lawlessness take over. He finds this is the way to make it in America. Usually the only other way is sports. Consequently, the sports market in America is flooded with black athletes.

In Black communities all over America you can find thousands of Black youths struggling to achieve manhood. They see the world so full, with so much to offer, but not to them, yet they still yearn for it. The entrapment of the ghetto gives them the feeling of total helplessness and frustration. The Black youth must become a big man in the tiny surroundings of his own community in order to combat this feeling. This causes many Blacks to grow up never experiencing a complete childhood.

There are certain symbols of ghetto society that determine the stature of your manhood, hustling and pimping are a couple, simple things such as having hair on your face at an early age, keeping large amounts of money in your pocket, using drugs, belonging to a gang or being good in sports are others. Being a good fighter is the most useful and widespread of all the symbols because in the Black communities life is truly a dog eat dog existence, a survival of the fittest situation always exists there.

> ...to be unable to defend oneself is a terrible shortcoming for any ghetto resident. You learn to fight at an early age and just going about the business of surviving develops this skill...

To be unable to defend oneself is a terrible shortcoming for any ghetto resident. You learn to fight at an early age and just going about the business of surviving develops this skill. The Black ghettos consequently become training grounds for potential heavyweight champions.

George Foreman is a good example of a ghetto youth using sports as a means of escape from the entrapment of the ghetto. In many ways he is a classic case. He was in and out of trouble during his teen years, the degree of his education is questionable, and though it hardly needs to be mentioned, he comes from a poor family.

George Foreman and Muhammad Ali came a long way from poor childhoods to their five million dollar fight last night.

George spent part of his early life in the Job Corps and other similar government pacification programs. It was in the Job Corps where George began to realize his skill as a boxer and under the influence of Doc Broaddus, his trainer, he won the Amateur Athletics Union (A.A.U.) title and the gold medal in the Olympics in 1968. It is probably because George gained fame in boxing while he was in the Job Corps that he has stated that although he doesn't believe that America treats it's Black citizens fairly, he feels that America has been good to him and gave him a chance in life that he wouldn't have gotten elsewhere. This is a good example of the success that pacification programs such as the Job Corps had on it's enrollees. His patriotic display of the flag at the 1968 Olympics was done because, as he stated, "I wanted the people to know where I am from." His actions at the Olympics gave him a large following amongst the people of America. Not surprisingly, this following was comprised mostly of Whites who could relate to Foreman's patriotic actions better than Blacks could. George Foreman was "their boy" so to speak. Foreman's actions cause Blacks to this day to look upon Foreman unfavorably and makes the fight between him and Ali much more interesting than it may ordinarily have been. It pits the man who is looked upon by most Blacks as the "People's Champion" against a man widely accepted by Whites in the same manner that Joe Louis and Floyd Patterson were, "their boy."

Muhammad Ali's popularity is world wide, but it is naturally strongest in the Black communities of America, and, as the people of Zaire have demonstrated, all over Africa. He is a product of the Black communities and can relate to it totally. And he has in a way that no other sports figure ever has. He was and to many still is the heavyweight champion of the world. He knows it, he tells you in full confidence that he is the "people's champion". His boxing style reflects the uniqueness that many blacks try to achieve in everyday life. He is brash, arrogant, speaks his mind and is uncompromising. He is a true Black idol in a country that tries to deny it's Black citizens such a person to look up to. His Muslim philosophies only strengthen his support among Blacks. His separatist and sometimes supremist points of view gives comfort to frustrated Blacks living frustrated existances. Blacks also get the satisfaction of seeing him back up the things he says with intelligent reasoning.

In this environment of fear and helplessness that is felt toward White people by many ghetto residents, it gives Black people a strange feeling of pride in seeing a Black man who knows who he is, what his role in life is, they love to see him taunt the white man, disobey his laws in favor of his own religious beliefs and get away with it, this is truly a charismatic Black man.

Jealousies were aimed at Muhammad Ali because of his religion and his "pureness". He didn't drink, smoke or use drugs which is a statement that most people, Black or White found themselves unable to make. Ironically, these jealousies, instead of damaging Muhammad Ali's popularity, only aided to increase it, especially in the Black community where it turned him into a kind of martyr.

Thank you, Ali

By DEAN TUCKER

Thank you Muhammad Ali. Thank you for when I was watching TV in 1963 and you were riding around in your bus screaming that you were the greatest and that you would do this and that and lick the big black bear Sonny Liston. Thank you. It was a good laugh, and coming attraction to the great theatre you would show me for the next ten years. Old folks called you a loud mouth nigger then and they still do today. Thank you for getting their warped minds into an arena or theatre to see quality personified.

Thank you Muhammad Ali. Thank you for putting big bad Sonny Liston away twice. Liston the illiterate, convicted felon thug who thought he could outstare the world. Baleful Sonny. Thank you for floating and stinging. Thank you for after the fight telling the world that your name was Muhammad Ali and not Cassius Clay. While the government played games with people's lives in their bureaucratic racist ways, you said no, I will not bear the name of a slave owner. I am black and proud.

Thank you Muhammad Ali for reviving the bum of the month club and taking a dead sport out of the grave and giving it life if not more. I watched you do in Patterson Chuvalo, Cooper, London, Mildenburg with ease. Thank you for all that. Thank you especially for the fight with Cleveland "Big Cat" Williams. It was not your best but when shortly afterward you gave Uncle Sam the finger with the now famous words "I ain't got no quarrel with them Viet Congs," and lost your title without a glovesmack I would rerun those beautiful seven punch combinations and the Ali shuffle through my mind's eye and think, "oh you sweet dancing jab flicking black man."

commentary

You brought many draft resisters through the torment of their own decision with your cool headed optimism. It cost you a million and half dollars to let the world from LBJ down know that the black man was not going to pull the wagon while the murderers rode to glory. The Supreme Court decision in your favor proved many of us right. Your courage to hang with it while your fighting skills dulled helped us to believe that all costs we could overcome.

Thank you for keeping the spirit of freedom alive during the sixties when we saw so many of our heroes stopped in their tracks. King, Kennedy, Evers, Kennedy again, Daniels, and on and on. During America's death trip to Viet Nam you kept us propped up.

Thank you again for the theatre. When the slaveholders of the World Boxing Association let you have back your birthright to earn a living and you fought Jerry Quarry in Atlanta and brought all the world together again for those few moments, inside we knew that we would win the freedom fight again. Just to have you back from your illegal disbarment was enough to keep us from cracking under the oppression and lies of the neofascist Richard Nixon who had made it to the throne in 1968.

The theatre again. The date: March 8, 1971. It's you and Joe Frazier, no slouch; like yourself a black man and Olympic Gold Medalist, but unlike yourself quiet, inarticulate and unable to comprehend the need to make an issue of being black in a land of racism. The FIGHT. Glorified, ballyhooed, the best of the biggest. That was the night. I can't say thank you for losing, but I can say thank you for coming back.

Throughout the draft rip-off you lived through, many young people who were in the struggle against the war gave up after the murders at Jackson State and Kent State. When you lost (if you did) to Frazier, and then picked up the fight again in a few days many of us took example from your spirit and pushed on. Thank you.

Thank you again for coming back from the Norton fiasco. That spirit. While the country was watching a weeping dog cry baby president lie and cheat his way to disgrace and bring us as a country into shame, you worked on picking up the pieces, living clean as always, to prepare for the last showdown with a man whose fight skills are as touted now as yours were when you were twenty-four.

At this writing five hours before the fight I am tense. I want you to beat George Foreman. You are the last hero of the sixties, truly an American hero in your own way.

Men's and Women's IM finals today

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

It will be TEP vs the James Buckeyes and SAM vs the Squad in the finals of the intramural men's and women's football playoffs to be held today at 4:30.

In the men's division, TEP devoured the Gorman Pines, 21-0 and the Buckeyes squeezed past BKP, 13-7, last night in the semi-finals to advance to today's game.

The TEP-Pines game was supposed to be close but TEP scored on a Bruce MacNamara pass to Jim Black. The teams traded interceptions until MacNamara hit Black for another score and TEP took a commanding 13-0 lead. The fierce TEP pass rush put constant pressure on the Pine quarterback and sacked him numerous times. the Pines' sweep was stopped effectively by the TEP defense as the Gorman squad only had three first downs in the entire game.

Black used his height advantage over his defender to snare a lob pass for the final TEP touchdown. Pines' qb Steve Wood was tagged in the end zone by Tom Culhane for a safety to complete the scoring.

The Buckeyes' victory proved costly as quarterback John O'Brien injured his shoulder late in the game and is doubtful for today's game. Dave Schoen replaced O'Brien at qb but he couldn't move the club. Putting Schoen at qb weakens the Buckeyes doubly because he is the club's best receiver.

The Buckeyes jumped off to a 13-0 lead on two Dave Schoey touchdowns but two safeties and a field goal brought BKP close. BKP had chances to take the lead late in the game but the Buckeyes were equal to the task.

In the women's division, SAM edged the Van Meter Vikings, 6-0 and the Squad bopped the Crabtree Trees, 14-0, last night to move into the finals today.

SAM, which has yet to give up a point this year, only used six (instead of seven) players on defense in shutting out the Vikings. Quarterback Ruth Ellen Sandler, the team's seventh player on offense, was limited by an injury to only playing quarterback. SAM, a coed frat, scored the game's only touchdown when Gail Cross returned an interception for a TD.

The Squad, an independent team, was the first opponent this year to score against the Trees. Chris Moloneaux threw two touchdown passes to Kathy MacDonald for the Squad. Ann Foley caught a pass for the extra points after the first touchdown.

IM INFO: TEP and the Squad seem to be the favorites in today's games. John O'Brien must be able to play for the Buckeyes to have any chance. The Squad's passing attack seems too strong for SAM to stop.

BKP will meet the Pines at 4:30 today for third place as will the Vikings and the Trees.

You have done so much, Muhammad

By BILL ELIAS
Sports Staff

The late George Frazier called it "duende", others think it charisma, but whatever, Muhammad Ali has that ability to emancipate people from the boredom and meaninglessness of everyday life. Whether kidding with construction workers in New York City, or taunting an opponent before a fight, Ali is the harmless relief that we all need more of. He differs from the Evel Knievels of this country in that he needs no gimmick, no canyon to jump into. Ali is one of the few naturals around, he is magnetic, and few have captured the spotlight for as long.

Ali could have been an actor, or much worse, a politician, but he chose boxing. And instead of laboring in the footsteps of straightmen like Floyd Patterson and Sonny Liston, Ali made glamorous a sport that was not. With cries of "I am The Greatest", he won the heavyweight title and revived the dying trade of boxing.

commentary

Then the champion Ali defeated every opponent he faced: Chuvalo, Cooper, London, Mildenberger, Williams, and Terrell, all fell prey, very few were competition. Ali was in his prime, shuffling, weaving, or dancing, he was seldom touched. Each fight was looked forward to and all were on national television. Ali was more than a great fighter. He was an entertainer. However, soon the entertainer would meet reality...the United States Army was calling.

When finally cleared to fight again, Ali was not the same boxer, but what he lost in the ring he made up for with his mouth. Always the promoter, Ali set the stage for the "fight of the century". It was Ali vs. Frazier and millions of people paid millions of dollars to see the fight.

Last night, Ali once more did his thing. The outcoming is not that important — Ali will always be around. But what was important was that for a single moment we were in a world far away from crime, racism, and rising inflation. A place where something as inconsequential as a boxing match took on meaning.

JV gridders topple URI 35-25

Monday, the UMass Minutemen sub-varsity went looking for a winning record. They found it in Kingston, Rhode Island.

The final score read Minutemen 35, Rams 25, a marked difference from Saturday's "Beanpot Bowl", which left their big brothers on the short end of a 10-9 game.

The varsity's loss served to spark the little Minutemen, and before the first half was over they has put 28 points on the board while shutting out the Rams.

The offense clicked behind the direction of both Joe Harrington and John Czerapowicz as the running game and passing attack could not be stopped.

Two touchdowns can be attributed directly to the arm and accuracy of Harrington. UMass' first score came on a pass to tight end Pete Rankowitz, who made a twisting, diving grab in the end zone, and another TD was set up by Harrington's 60 yard bomb to wide receiver Dan Clerico.

Steve Cirella, fullback, had another outstanding running game, playing before his home state fans, and accounted for the other two scores.

Unlike last weeks game against West Point, though, the Minutemen fell into a contented state and soon the Rams were only three points behind. The big mistakes were an intercepted pass and a quarterback pitch which was picked off in mid-flight. Both were ran back for a quick 14 points.

The big play of the game was set up as the Rams had closed the gap to 28-25. With Rhode Island threatening to pull ahead, driving down to the UMass ten yard line, defensive end Jim Penta knocked down a pitch to the halfback, and scrambled to recover the loose ball, preserving the UMass victory.

This Sunday the Minutemen sub-varsity travels to the big city, to face the UMass arch-enemy Boston College, in a 3 o'clock game

Stickssters win finale, 1-0

"It was a nice way to end the season at home," Coach Albert said of her field hockey team's victory yesterday over Plymouth State College.

Only fifteen minutes into the game Joanne Lorrey was assisted by Judy Kennedy and they scored a UMass goal, which was enough to clinch the win, a 1-0 shut-out.

The most outstanding player was Barb Martell, better known to teammates and fans as "Space." She was certainly the most valuable player, particularly on defense. Her presence continually stunned the opposition, while her stick work and hustle instigated several Plymouth turnovers.

Coach Albert was very impressed with Barb's play and could only sum it up, "She played an outstanding game."

Coach Albert was happy to end the season with a victory and said, "There were five graduating seniors playing their last home game and they were very up for it. I was also glad for the opportunity to put substitutes in."

The junior varsity's winning streak was furthered as they too played a shut-out. In a game shortened to thirty-five minutes because of darkness they beat Plymouth State College 2-0.

Ali wins title by KO in eight, now it is for sure he's great

By BOB STEWART
UPI Sports Writer

KINSHASA, ZAIRE [UPI] - Muhammad Ali, still proclaimed "People's Champion," proved it tonight with a stunning eighth round knockout of George Foreman, which regained for Ali the World Heavyweight title.

The knockout came at 2:58 of the eight round.

The bout began with a fury rarely matched in savagery to anthing ever seen in the former Congo. The two men went at each other, with Ali deliberately heading into Foreman's power. He took what Foreman had to throw and again Ali waited on the ropes. Ali moved from corner to corner and his jab was even then making Foreman blink.

The crowd of 50,000 immediately responded between rounds when Ali asked them to chant.

In the second Ali came out flat-footed and began shooting a series of jabs. Then he went back to rest on the ropes and inviting Foreman to punch away.

The third was more of the same and then Ali began. It was time to slug it out once again. He connected with three, then four, rapids jabs in succession. When he stepped back Foreman lunged forward, and now the champion was getting rattled. He started to throw punches the way he used to, in roundhouse fashion, instead of straight ahead, the way he did when he knocked out Joe Frazier in two rounds to win the title in January of 1973.

One could sense in the fourth that Ali felt he had it won. He peppered Foreman with left jabs and right and then rested in Foreman's corner while George hit away at him. Ali grabbed George and then yelled over Foreman's shoulder to trainer Dick Sadler, "Be Quiet."

It was now the fifth round and the first time since October of 1971 that Foreman had had to go beyond four. He came out swinging wildly and Ali spent the entire round resting on the ropes, moving along them, tying up Foreman when necessary, and scarcely throwing a punch. It was a crazy but also a crafty exhibition on Ali's part. When the bell rang, Foreman was all but exhausted.

Foreman tried to rush out to start the sixth, but Ali had anticipated the move and ran directly into him. The impact halted Foreman and Ali sent a rat-a-tat of jabs bouncing off Foreman's puffy face. He then again practically reclined on the ropes and talked, and talked, away at Foreman--psychological jabs it seemed.

In the seventh, with the crowd in absolute frenzy with glee at the performance of a man who has become a national figure, Ali disdainfully flicked off the lumbering, powerless, blows Foreman was now throwing.

Dick Sadler and Archie Moore worked frantically on their man in the corner but it was obvious, even on their faces that all was lost.

And so to the eventful eight round.

Ali was in excellent voice after the fight and a bloodshot right eye and a little puffiness around the cheek were the only souvenirs he had to show for the 24 minutes he was in the ring.

Ali said that he talked to Foreman from time to time during the bout.

"I kept telling him he has no power," Ali said. "They said he was too powerful, too strong, hah."

"Regardless of all the pressure and everything else, I made it an easy night."

Then, in one of his typical speeches, the new World Champion said, "I told you all I was the greatest of all time. Never again say I'll be defeated; never make me the underdog until I'm 50."

Asked if he was going to retire, Ali, who said this would be his last fight before entering the ring, now changed his mind and said "Maybe."

"They told me he was strong," Ali said. "Didn't I look stronger than him?"

Always proper and circumspect, Ali didn't realize he was on camera all over the world when he pulled off his drawers. It was an x-rated moment, but again Ali, unwittingly, saved the night by ducking behind a partition.

Ali was flatfooted after the first round, although he had said he would dance all night. He said he did that purposely.

"Standing on the ropes is a beautiful thing, when you make him take his best shots and he's missing," Ali said.

Again, in reply to a question to whether he would retire, Ali snapped, "I'm going to hold my title a few months. They took my title unjustly and now I'm going to hold onto it for a while."

Leaving the ring, Ali waved his right arm aloft and led the crowd in the Kinshasa cheer, "Ali Boom-aye-ai."

Foreman walked dejectedly to his dressing room, head down, and with only a few fans at his side.

Prior to Ali, the only Heavywieght to regain the title was Floyd Patterson when he knocked out Sweden's Ingemar Johansson in 1960 after losing crown to Johansson on a knockout in 1959.

What makes Ali's victory, his 45th in 47 fights, even greater than Patterson's is that it came 7 ½ years after he was stripped of his title for refusing induction into the armed forces.

Ali was exiled from boxing for 3½ years before he was finally upheld by the Supreme Court and, except for a few exhibition bouts, didn't return to the Ring until Oct. 26, 1970 when he scored a third round technical knockout over Jerry Quarry.

Ali's victory over Foreman came exactly 14 years to the day after he began his professional career by scoring a six round decision over Tunney Hunsaker on Oct. 29, 1960. Ali turned pro shortly after winning the 1960 Olympic Light Heavyweight title.

Ali, though a prohibitive 7-1 underdog, first gained the crown by scoring a technical knockout over Sonny Liston in Feb. 25, 1964 in Miami. He successfully defended the title nine times until stripped of it in April, 1967 when at the peak of his career.

His first attempt at regaining the championship ended in failure when he lost a 15-round decision to Joe Frazier March 8, 1971 and by the time Ali avenged the setback with a 12-round decision nine months ago, Frazier had lost the title to Foreman when he was knocked out in two rounds Jan. 22, 1973, in Kingston, Jamaica.

White leads Celts over Cavs

CLEVELAND [UPI] - Jo Jo White spoiled the Cleveland Cavaliers' debut in their new Midwest Coliseum Tuesday night when the veteran guard flipped in 24 points to spark the Boston Celtics to a 107-92 victory.

The Cavaliers, playing before the largest home crowd ever -- 13,134 grabbed a 60-59 lead with 7:09 left in the third period but the Celtics reeled off 12 straight points and took an 81-64 bulge into the final 12 minutes.

The victory was the third in six games for Boston, which got a 23-point effort from John Havlicek. Jim Ard added 19 points for the victors.

Naviaux nabbed

The Connecticut dressing room was alive with shouts of joy following the 10-9 squeaker over the Minutemen. A score of writers gathered around UConn coach Larry Naviaux, a very happy man due to the momentous victory.

A short fellow, wearing an old, tattered raincoat that hung loosely over his shoulders, broke through the crowd of sportswriters and addressed Naviaux.

"Uh, excuse me, sir. I'm a columnist for the local paper. Name's Columnbo. I moonlight as a homicide detective". He stuck out his hand to the coach.

"Sir, if you're not too busy", Columnbo went on, "I'd like to ask ya a few questions about the game..."

"Go right ahead, Columnbo", replied the confident Naviaux.

"Thank you. Uh, Mr. Naviaux, you're the coach of the Huskies, correct?"

"Correct".

"So that means you're responsible for the actions of your team. Like, mmmm, f'instance, the 43 yard field goal and the game-winning extra point kicked by Greg Sinay?"

"Yes, I hope I'm at least partly responsible for our kicking game. I make Greg practice kicking during the week".

"Oh, I see. So, likewise, you're responsible for the 27 yard Bernie Palmer to Allan MacLellan touchdown pass and—", Columnbo looked down at Naviaux' ripple-soled sideline shoes, "—Say, how much those cost ya'?"

"Twenty dollars", replied the coach, taken aback.

"Gee, I wonder if you know a place that sells a pair like that for about twelve-fifty? The wife's been buggin' me to get a decent pair a' shoes. Anyways, what I really wanted to ask, sir, is if you're the man primarily responsible for the defense that blocked Greg Sprout's try for the game-winnin' field goal?"

"Yes, of course I am! So what? I'm the coach! What are you getting at, Columnbo?"

"Nothin' really, sir. Ummmm, I was sittin' up 'dere in the press box, ya' know, and I wrote down a question that I really wanted to ask ya". Columnbo dug through the pockets of his raincoat until he finally came up with a scrap of paper.

"Here it is. 'Can you pick up a dozen eggs and some milk on the way home?' Oops, sorry sir, dat's a note my wife musta stuck in dere. Thank you very much for your time, sir. I better go get those groceries".

Naviaux breathed a sigh of relief as the columnist-detective left.

Ten seconds later, Columnbo stuck his head back through the door of the locker room. "Pardon me, sir, I'm back again. Just one more question. It just came to me". Columnbo tapped his forehead with his fist. "You never did like UMass, did you, Mr. Naviaux?"

"Of course not, you fool, they're traditional rivals".

"Dat dere clinches it", said the detective. "Coach, I'm sorry to say you've pulled your last, uh, 'Conn' job. I'm bookin' you for premeditated murder of UMass Yankee Conference title hopes. Your thugs did the dirty work, but you were the brains behind the devious scheme".

"But UMass isn't dead", replied the frightened coach, now breathing heavily. "If they win their final conference game against New Hampshire, and we lose our last two in the YanCon, then they can still tie us for the crown!"

"Yeah, dat's what they all say, Mr. Naviaux," countered the writer-sleuth.

The coach knew the jig was up. He started to sob. "I had to do it. I had to beat UMass. They wanted to take the Beanpot away from us — you didn't know that, did you? Yes, they wanted to take from UConn all that stands for superiority in this great conference of ours. But I showed them, didn't I?"

"Yes, you did, coach. Now, if you'll just come with me down to the station to sign a statement..."

New Veterans' Rep program may be phased out

By LARRY CARPMAN
Staff Reporter

After 75 days of operation the Veterans' Representative On Campus (VROC) program, a Veterans Administration project which places two federal employees on campus to help solve veterans' problems, is surrounded by controversy and, according to one source, will be phased out by the end of this academic year.

The VROC program, begun in mid-August of this year, was set up to help veterans receive education checks. But now various officials in the veterans' programs, both here and elsewhere, are asking whether VROC is superfluous, whether it represents a case of misplaced manpower and whether the program is in fact helping to solve problems like late checks.

"I have no reservations about these 'vet reps' they do all they can," said Francis X. Cotter, Director of the Veterans' Affairs Office in Whitmore. "I just think it is a bad program."

"When the program was first introduced," Cotter said, "I fought it; it was redundant."

Cotter believes the extra two men placed on campus by the Veterans Administration would be better utilized in the Boston office of the agency.

Meanwhile, Charles Sweeney, Director of the VROC program in Boston said, "he (Cotter) is totally wrong; he's totally incorrect" about using the two representatives in Boston rather than on campus.

"He's just looking out for his own job," Sweeney said.

At the same time Russ Ruffino, Program Officer in the Boston Health Education and Welfare office said: "No matter what quality the program has there is no fiscal support; it (VROC) is going to die."

"I had misgivings about starting the program Ruffino said" and i still have questions and misgivings about it."

Paul Neville, one of the representatives on campus disagrees with both Ruffino and Cotter.

"I don't think we'd be better in Boston," Neville said. "We take out the middle man here, I think that is a big asset," he said.

"There are certain limitations with office space in Boston," said Gary Garstka, the other Veterans Administration representative on campus.

Wood calls for unification at Senate meeting

By CINDY ROGERS
AND LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporters

UMass President Robert C. Wood addressed a full Student Senate body last night to discuss the debates and resolutions of the past several weeks between the student senate and the administration. He called for more student participation in university policies and the unification of students, faculty and administration. "We need them," Wood said, "in many ways if the university's going to go forward."

Wood clearly stressed that he was, "happy to acknowledge over the past several years, the aid and assistance this Senate, in its collected form, has given the University and the University administration."

Wood stated his "doctrine of reciprocity" and "principle of shared powers" in order to achieve a high quality of education at the lowest possible cost.

Full text of Wood's speech in Friday's Collegian

"Down through five years," Wood said, "student leaders have raised clear and specific issues, where they have been appropriately addressed to the University administration and...we've undertaken a response." He cited two examples: the fight in 1972 to keep University tuition low and the prevention of the division of this campus during the University reorganization in 1973.

Wood stressed the three constraints that affect the administration's capacity to deal effectively with the affairs of this University. These constraints were Massachusetts General Law, Chapter 75, which invests a "final non-delegable authority to the trustees."

Secondly, the debt service requirements that cannot be voted down by "a memo from the President, or from a vote by the Trustees." Also, the educational restraints that must ensure students that they have spent, "four years on something worthwhile."

Wood ended his address with the hope that the student senate and the administration together could "present a stronger, more varied, more complementary educational program. But to split, to divide, to secede, is to simply weaken our capabilities and cheapen our education."

Senators were then afforded time to question President Wood. Senator Jay Mardis broached the subject of the 18-year-old residency and food service requirements on campus.

"What recourse do we have of these constraints and the rights of litigation when student funds for legal services are frozen and Vice-Chancellor Gage sends a condescending commentary down from his office? How do we go about changing, for instance, the 18-year-old residency and the food service requirement?"

In response, Wood suggested there would be necessary amendments the Senate would have to follow. Yet, he stressed, it is an "Economic, not legal problem."

Wood emphasized that these restraints were involved in the inflationary cycle and that as far as the food services and dormitories are concerned, "we get what we pay for."

One senator questioned President Wood on rationale of the trustees of the University for not allowing a lawyer, who has been hired with funds paid by the student, to defend the student in criminal court.

Wood clarified, in response, his unmitigated support of student legal aide in the amendment of Chapter 75. Wood supposed there would be some discussion as to whether or not it would be acceptable to the new funding requirements of 1975 that "two present lawyers are responsible in criminal and civil cases as well as in counselling to the student bodies."

"But there's no problem about the fact of having student legal support. There hasn't been for two years. And there have been questions about whether you wanted to go on with Dick Howland on a consultant, or whether you wanted a more regular basis. That's the question, but it's an operative question, not a matter of yes or no," Wood said.

Senator Joe Carter questioned Wood as to his support of the memo Dr. Gage sent to the Student Senate. It concerned administration

Dukakis, Sargent volley strong charges in debate

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON [AP] — Political charges were bandied back and forth Wednesday night as Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent and Democratic challenger Michael S. Dukakis held their final debate before the Nov. 5 election.

The debate, at WGBH-TV studios, featured a new format in which the two candidates spoke directly to each other and make their strongest personal attacks yet.

Sargent said Dukakis was guilty of "the fast talk of a man who may be better at running for office than the people's business."

Dukakis labeled Sargent a "political funfighter" for his attack in the past two weeks on the Democrat's criticism of the Sargent administration.

Sargent asked the television audience to disregard Dukakis' "reckless" campaign pledges to improve the state economy, cut the state budget and said he failed to take into account America's hard economic times.

Dukakis, in his opening statement, blamed the governor for failure to help the state dig out of "deep financial trouble at the State House" and for spending valuable public funds on a political patronage office.

He criticized the governor for turning the campaign into a stream of "last-minute personal attacks and wild charges." The Democrat said that he is the alternative between a program "to get the State House moving again" and "four more dreary years of tired and increasingly ineffective leadership."

It was the sixth debate for the pair, four televised and two before private audiences.

Political attempts to thwart Med School won't succeed, says Dean Soutter

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

UMass Medical School Dean Dr. Lamar Soutter told a group of physician-hopefuls here last night that there has been a "political move to try and stop the UMass Medical School," but that "it won't work."

Soutter said the Sargent administration has ignored vital equipment requests and has attempted to keep the school's operating budget low by limiting the number of students.

Characterizing the legislature as responsive to the voters wishes, Soutter said that body has over-ridden the governor and pushed on with the medical school's expansion.

Soutter smiled broadly and drew loud applause from the audience when he said, "One hundred students will be admitted this year...Dukakis is going to be governor."

The Dean also noted how government in general is presenting problems for medical schools and ultimately the patients themselves. He said state and Federal agencies lure medical schools into accepting more students through grant programs.

Soutter said this can be bad because the faculty-student ratio is then lowered meaning less training for each medical student.

"But we don't get into that type of temptation," he said.

Soutter also noted there are bills before Congress which would grant aid to schools and students who commit themselves to practicing medicine for a certain time in areas without physicians.

"What are they going to practice with?" he rhetorically asked, "A stethoscope and a bottle of aspirin? They need laboratories and equipment."

Soutter emphasized that the UMass Medical School has a strong committment to the Commonwealth to upgrade the medical care its citizens are receiving.

He said the state badly needs family physicians saying some 75 per cent of the people have no doctor they can call on the phone for medical advice. He told the young audience there are too many specialists in this state and country.

Soutter, brought here to speak by the recently formed Pre-Med Society, had previously outlined the progress of medical education in America.

He said the University in the early 1900s eliminated many of those institutions, one such school being in St. Louis which was giving medical degrees to those who sent them $100.

Over the past 20 years, the Dean said, there have been "absolutely enormous" improvements in medical care and "it's still going on."

Artist Agnes Denes finds "universal truth" with X-rays

By ANNE HAMBURGER
Staff Reporter

Agnes Denes, a well known post-conceptualist artist, showed slides and discussed her work in Thompson hall Tuesday night.

Denes says she is searching for a "truth approximation" of our existence through philisophical, psychological, and scientific phenomena. Denes says she believes that if the mind has universal validity, art reveals the univeral truth, which she tries to find by looking for inherent patterns and structures, and exposing them.

Denes organizes, compresses and divides the information according to a method called Dialectic Triangulation: a visual philosophy. This process is a systematic rebuilding of hypothetical relationships.

In the triangle one has the given, it's opposite and the synthesis, which is the art. Denes described this as intellect, instinct, and the combination or synthesis, which is intuition, the "creative evolution" of the two.

She further stated the more personal meaning of the triangle "It probes to locate and expose the center of things, the true inner core of inherent but not yet understood or disclosed meaning."

Interested in an easy and simple way of "looking into things", Denes physically explored objects by means of x-rays and magnification.

Her most effective use of this principle was "Introspection III, Aesthetics", where she made x-rays of actual paintings by Picasso, Van Gogh, and Rembrandt to reveal the "inner life of the paintings."

By controlling the light passing through the x-rays and using various printing methods, Denes physically uncovers the layers of the paintings in three stages, paralleling the process of painting.

The first stage, the x-ray exposes the painting to the greatest physical depths. The artist's personality is revealed. Hazy drawings are seen with parts of the back side of the canvas exposed for the x-ray reads right through the canvas.

The second step involves the main execution of the painting. It is structured and filled.

The third stage is composed of the finishing touches and glaze, which the viewer sees as the finished product. Thus, her x-rays attempt to get at the artists' meaning directly, by penetrating the physical surface of the painting.

Denes' concern for grasping the "approximate truth" led her to the statement "Dialectic triangulation exposes the workings of hypotheses instead of hiding them behind symbols." What seems to be a contradiction is this: In order to comprehend Denes' systemic structures fully, one must study and ponder them at length.

The complexity of the work demands much time for comprehension, more than can be grasped in one viewing in a gallery situation. Denes states that the charts can be viewed from a purely visual sense. Viewing the charts in this way disguises the working of the hypothesis, hiding them behind the symbol of Dialectic Triangulation.

Denes is striving to achieve a nearly impossible task, searching for a visual image which encompasses her symbolic logic and achieves a "truth approximation."

Her visual images are unique to the particular idea which she is working with at the time, which was at first disturbing. However, Denes leads the way to opening up new freedom for the artists to follow her.

There will be the freedom from a specific format or mode which the gallery expects from a showing artist. Agnes Denes needs these freedoms to achieve the comprehensive overview of the immeasurably vast field she wants to cover through visual art.

Vet program slated to be scrapped

"He's just looking out for his own job," Sweeney said.

At the same time Russ Ruffino, Program Officer in the Boston Health Education and Welfare office said: "No matter what quality the program has there is no fiscal support; it (VROC) is going to die."

"I had misgivings about starting the program Ruffino said" and I still have questions and misgivings about it."

Paul Neville, one of the representatives on campus disagrees with both Ruffino and Cotter.

"I don't think we'd be better in Boston," Neville said. "We take out the middle man here, I think that is a big asset," he said.

"There are certain limitations with office space in Boston," said Gary Garstka, the other Veterans Administration representative on campus.

According to Sweeney one of the main reasons checks are late is when his office does not receive the enrollment certificates (proof that the veteran is taking a specific amount of courses) on time.

"I like him (Cotter) as an individual," Sweeney said, "but he should get those damn documents in here on time."

Meanwhile, Tom King, director of the Veterans' Affairs office at Greenfield Community College said he sent in all the necessary certificates on time and he still had about 85 veterans out of 270 without their checks.

Referring to the Boston office of VROC of which Sweeney is director King said: "They are nothing but a two bit bunch of political hacks that could care less about veterans. I am up to my ears with Boston," King said.

King also referred to a Veterans Administration Circular dated August 14, 1974 which states: "In those cases in which an advance payment will not routinely process...to assure a check will be at the school when the veteran enrolls a special payment will be processed instead."

King alleges there were no special payments received for those veterans whose checks were late.

"I disagree entirely," said Neville about King's opinion of the Boston office.

"Certainly Tom King is concerned," Neville said. "Perhaps there is a lack of understanding between him and Boston."

"I'm not looking to pick a fight with the Veterans Administration," Cotter said. "We screw up; they screw up. But I have a back up mechanism to help the veterans, they don't."

Eviction issue remains unresolved

By DENNY MATTEAU
Staff Reporter

The eviction controversy at Brittany Manor and Mount Sugarloaf continues with a meeting of the trustees of the Manor, the Student Senate Legal Services Office, and all interested tenants being planned for next week, according to Jim Starr, a paralegal worker in the Legal Services Office (LSO).

"The meeting is being held so that all tenants who have questions and complaints may state them to the trustees and present managers of the apartments," he said.

John O'Keefe of the Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs said that group would see that the meeting is well-publicized as soon as the place and time has been set.

Seventy-eight tenants have been served eviction notices by Hancock Management of Brookline after having withheld rent on the grounds that they want a guarantee of receiving their security deposits when they move out of their apartments.

They feel the need for this guarantee because the owners of Brittany Manor and Mount Sugarloaf Apartments filed bankruptcy on September 23, and a number of tenants have not received their deposits since then.

One tenant, Nina Reich of Brittany Manor, said that she and her husband have moved from one apartment to another within the Manor and have not yet received the deposit from their first apartment. Reich, upon encountering difficulties by October first, placed her rent money in an escrow account, to be held until she is satisfied that she will not be ripped off. She wrote a letter to the management to this effect, and received an eviction notice the day before yesterday.

"According to the management here," she said, "they forwarded the letter to Brookline (where the Hancock Management is located) and that office did not acknowledge it."

"This means that there's two hundred and fifteen dollars plus interest on the first apartment which we should have received, besided another two hundred and ten which we put down for the second apartment which is now in jeopardy," she said. Reich is one of the tenants being presently represented by the LSO.

The case is presently in Federal District Court in Boston, under Judge W.A. Garrity. Federal District Court had original jurisdiction over the bankruptcy case.

Starr said, "At this point we suspect that summons pursuant to summary process by Brittany Manor will be issued by the court."

"Right now", he explained, "we have people moving out, people staying but withholding, people planning to move in six months, etcetera. We're trying to cover every situation, and force the court to make a quick decision regarding the security deposits."

While the LSO and the Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs does what they can at this end, two state agencies have entered the scene on behalf of the tenants.

The consumer protection division of the State Attorney General's office has asked to become an intervenor in the court hearings before Judge Garrity on behalf of the tenants.

And the Secretary of State's corporations division is known to be conducting an investigation of the Colonial realty firms to see if they were mismanaged financially. A completion date for the investigation has not been set.

Halloween festivities rooted in Irish folklore

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Writer

Halloween, as celebrated in America, originated in Ireland during the Anglo-Saxon Period.

The name "Halloween" though, is derived from the name of the Christian holiday, All Hallows Eve, which precedes All Saints' Day, dedicated in the honor of Christian saints and martyrs.

In Medieval Ireland, it was known as Samhain, the last day of the Celtic calendar.

In celebration of this day, the Pagan Celtics sacrificed their first born as tribute to the gods for a fruitful harvest, opened burial caves to allow spirits to air out and built huge bonfires on hill tops to frighten evil spirits away.

According to legend, the forces of evil in the guise of witches and warlocks, also celebrated the end of summer, because it heralded the coming of winter and the strengthening of the evil forces.

If someone was interested in learning the future, Samhain was the only time you could invoke the help of the devil in pursuit of those ends.

Halloween was brought to the United States by Irish immigrants.

During the nineteenth century, the celebration of Halloween in the United States reached great heights of violence, with groups of boys and young men running around smashing windows and tipping over outhouses.

The following are a few lines from the poem "Hallow-e'en 1915" by W.M. Letts.

"Will you come back to us, men of our hearts, tonight... Will you leave the alien graves where you sleep and steal away... Forgotten awhile the weary trenches... Ghosts of our well beloved dead."

Provost wants more input from UMass grad students

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

Provost and Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern urged graduate students to take control of their education by increasing their input at the departmental level.

In an address before the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) Tuesday night, Gluckstern outlined what he sees as major areas of concern for graduate students.

The GSS agenda also included discussion of four motions regarding: 1) allocation of funds to the Collegian, 2) allocation of funds to the UMass transit system, 3) removal of senators for unexcused absences and 4) support of SGA President Rick Savini's recent letter to the UMass Board of Trustees.

Gluckstern admitted that a lack of clarity exists in the process used to determine the overall number of graduate assistantships. He placed partial blame for this confusion on budgetary constraints.

Although control over these decisions is now at the departmental level, Gluckstern said, "It is our intention to keep the number of graduate students at least the same and hopefully (we can) increase them in proportion to the campus population."

Gluckstern noted the existence of inequities among graduate assistants regarding the various responsibilities and obligations which are supposed to measure the level of work performance. He indicated an attempt is being made to address these inequities through the specification of obligations and responsibilities.

The Provost said it was his belief that the implementation of graduate student grievance procedures on an interim basis would occur within a short time.

However, according to Acting Dean of the Graduate School Vere Chappell, several areas of difference still remain to be worked out by his office and William E. Searson, general counsel to President Wood.

Gluckstern urged graduate students to become involved in various departmental activities at a decision-making level. He also encouraged the Graduate Student Senate to focus its attention on academic matters.

In other news, the GSS unanimously passed two significant motions concerning the allocation of GSS funds. Student senators approved the expenditure of $15,000 over two semesters for support of the UMass transit system.

Robert Godding, transit system chairperson, briefly outlined the transit system's budget and services that are available for the current year. Unfortunately, the GSS funds will only enable the transit system to maintain the present level of operation rather than allow for an expansion of services.

Vice Chancellor Robert Gluckstern says that "It is our intention to keep the number of graduate students at least the same."

Senate members also unanimously approved the allocation of $1,000 per semester to the Collegian. Consideration of full-funding of the school newspaper for fiscal year 1976 was included in the motion.

Speaking for the Collegian, News Editor Mike Kneeland reaffirmed that the Collegian wants graduate students to be part of the community as well as part of the Collegian.

This allocation of funds not only ensures continued coverage of graduate student news but also enables interested graduate students to work for and be a voting member of the newspaper staff.

Kneeland said he hopes the involvement of graduate students on the staff that graduate students will attempt to take control of the Collegian.

"The Collegian wants to give fair and equal coverage and consideration to graduate students and to the Graduate Student Senate" commented Kneeland.

A third motion concerning the removal of senators for absences from two consecutive meetings was tabled after no consensus could be reached.

GSS President Jim Lindsey indicated he will continue to urge the passage of this motion throughout the year. Lindsey described this motion as an attempt to encourage active and interested students to remain involved in the GSS.

The final item of business was the passage of a motion which directed Lindsey as GSS president to support in principle a letter which has been sent by SGA President Rick Savini to the Board of Trustees. Much debate centered around the support of the letter due to the nebulous wording of the six demands passed by the SGA last week.

Graduate student senators will be asked to vote on the constitution of the Residential Life Governing Board at the next GSS meeting, November 11.

Zotos Brothers will perform in Northeast

The Zotos Brothers have played at nearly 100 colleges in the country and have opened acts for a great many big name groups, including Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks, Bonnie Raitt, Bo Diddley, Tom Rush and Al Kooper.

Tom, Paul and Alex have been making their own guitars for years, a skill that has been in their family for generations. They write all their own music as well, using maracas, congas and acoustic guitars in their performances.

At the concert tonight — Halloween night — there will be prizes for the best costume and beverages and food will be available.

Nixon condition improved but still critical

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard M. Nixon, pictured as a man who almost died Tuesday but has a strong will to live, was described by his doctors yesterday as improved but still in critical condition.

The 61-year-old Nixon was under watch around the clock with emergency resuscitation equipment at his hospital bedside.

A midmorning medical bulletin said Nixon appeared to be in more stable condition after sinking into a state of shock Tuesday following an operation on his groin.

"It appears that his internal bleeding has stopped," the bulletin said.

"His vital signs are stable." Ronald Ziegler, former White House press secretary and one of the few aides to remain with the former chief executive after his resignation Aug. 9, talked with newsmen briefly at Long Beach Memorial Hospital at noon.

"I don't think I need to tell you that we almost lost the former President yesterday afternoon," Ziegler said.

"The doctors pulled him out of a very dangerous situation." Ziegler was asked about "reports" that Nixon's mental and emotional state is such that he has lost the will to live.

"I know the former President has not lost the will to live," Ziegler said.

"I think he has viewed the entire hospital stay with a great deal of courage. He's a man of great strength and courage and he'll pull out of it."

Lungren said he had talked with President Ford's White House physician, Dr. William Lukash, Tuesday night and Wednesday morning and that Lukash "expressed President Ford's deep concern over Mr. Nixon's condition."

"He asked me to convey to the former president and Mrs. Nixon that his prayers are for his full and complete recovery," Lungren said.

Ford was scheduled to appear at a campaign rally in Los Angeles Thursday and stay overnight. There was no word whether he might stop off at adjoining Long Beach to visit the man who appointed him vice president and then stepped down in disgrace.

U.S., Israel warned to accept PLO role

By United Press International

King Hassan II of Morocco said yesterday Israel and the United States must bow to the Arab decision to back the Palestinian Liberation Organization in setting up an independent Palestinian state or risk a new military showdown in which millions of oil dollars would ensure victory for the Arabs.

Speaking at a news conference in Rabat as chairman of the just-ended Arab summit conference, Hassan called for speedy Israeli and U.S. acceptance of the conference's decision recognizing the PLO's right to establish a sovereign Palestinian state on territories the Arabs want to regain from Israel by peaceful talks or force of arms.

"It is up to Israel now to make the next move," Hassan said. "We will seize upon the slightest chance of liberating even one square inch of Palestinian territory.

"We must not wait any longer to cool off the Middle East region. The Arab nations have taken the initiative for peace if peace is to be achieved...the longer we wait, the more the two camps will arm themselves, the more the distrust will grow for the opening of talks. And in this arms race we are going to win since we are the richer ones."

The four-day Arab summit set up a joint military, command for Syria, Egypt, Jordan and the PLO and created a war chest of $2.35 billion from Arab oil revenue.

Yasser Arafat, leader of the PLO, said in a separate statement Israel is mustering its forces for a "preemptive" fifth Arab-Israeli war and was using "blackmail" in an alleged bid to weaken Arab nations.

Lightning blacks out Central & Sylvan areas

The spokesman said when lightening strikes, sensors in the street lights interpret the bright flash as daylight, and shut off the lights for about five munites.

There were no other effects from the off-season lightening.

control of their legislation. Wood falteringly answered, "I one...have not...you mean the Gage memorandum as reported in the...now that's a campus matter in which I haven't made a judgement yet...I haven't decided yet."

After Wood's exit, the Senate called upon Dr. Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, to speak. Gage answered questions relating to the Oct. 11 memorandum concerning veto power, and student control of monies, and student unions.

Gage told the Senate he would like to see "living in residence halls as voluntary." He also suggested a checkoff on student bills as a way of controlling student monies.

"Then you can go off campus and spend it whatsoever way you want," he continued.

As to the memorandum, Gage said, "if I was part of this body, I would be offended if the vice chancellor failed to take notice."

He also said he has "no intention of rejecting legislation passed. He later said it would be "rare if I send anything back rejected."

He said if the Senate disagreed with his evaluation of their legislation, their normal recourse would be to first go to the Chancellor and then to go to the Board of Trustees. Gage said this "recourse is open to anyone."

Frequently during the discussion, there were questions of Gage's authority for veto power. Gage repeatedly answered, "I'm not hung up on veto power, I don't care whether it exists or not."

When asked his opinion on student unions, Gage said, "The union of students is a fine thing, I'm just not sure how it operates."

Magruder says Nixon pleased by coverup

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Jeb Stuart Magruder testified yesterday that two days before he lied to a federal grand jury he was informed that President Richard M. Nixon was "particularly pleased" with his efforts in the Watergate cover-up.

Magruder, said Kenneth W. Parkinson, a lawyer hired by the Committee to Re-Elect the President and a defendant in the Watergate conspiracy trial, and White House Counsel John W. Dean III helped prepare him for his grand jury appearance Aug. 16, 1972.

"Dean came by my office and told me how pleased he was with my efforts in keeping the truth of Watergate from coming out. He said how pleased everyone at the White House and CRP re-election committee was. He particularly mentioned the President, how particularly pleased he was," Magruder testified.

Magruder, who was Nixon's deputy campaign director, testified for a second day at the five-week-old Watergate conspiracy trial. Magruder is serving a prison sentence of 10 months to four years for conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the nation.

Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, who were Nixon's top White House aides; former Assistant Attorney General Robert C. Mardian; and Parkinson are charged with conspiracy in the cover-up of top-level involvement in the Watergate scandal.

Assistant Watergate Prosecutor Jill W. Volner led Magruder through an account of the alleged cover-up activities in the months following the bugging arrests at the Democratic National Committee in the Watergate complex June 17, 1972.

A week later, Magruder, testifying he felt responsible for what had gone wrong, offered "to step forward and take the blame."

"Mr. Mitchell told me they had discussed it at the White House and they had rejected it because I was too close to Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Haldeman and it would be unreasonable for people to believe that I had the authority to approve such a project."

Magruder said he contrived a "cover story" to account for the $250,000 used for the Watergate break-in. He said Herbert L. Porter, scheduling director of the re-election committee who later pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI, agreed to testify he had a budget of $100,000 for protection of persons who spoke on Nixon's behalf. The remaining $150,000, Magruder alleged, was budgeted for security at the Republican National Convention.

White, School Committee failed to face busing

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent
Part 2 of a 4-part series

Not only have few voices ever been raised in favor of school busing in Boston, there continues to be a chorus of invective against it, as though a little more pressure could reverse it all.

This attitude is strikingly apparent in the Boston School Committee whose chairman, John T. Kerrigan, placed his daughter in a private school this fall to avoid busing. Kerrigan is trying to organize an economic boycott of Boston's downtown financial community to further pressure the city.

Like the other four Irish Catholic school committee members, Kerrigan has based his political career on the guarantee that busing would never come to Boston.

It was the responsibility of the school committee to draw up a suitable desegregation plan after the state legislature, in a decision reflecting the civil rights spirit of the times, passed a racial balance act in 1965. It forbade schools to have more than 50 per cent black enrollment.

The act was quickly under attack and has been watered down beyond recognition. And the school committee kept delaying its school plan, the responsibility eventually passing to the State Department of Education. It came up with a plan without a requirement to hold public meetings to consider the issues.

It was this plan that was ordered in court, forcing Boston parents to accept a plan that had no public inputs from them. Some of its weaknesses include the requirement to bus children from the worst black areas to the worst white ones, meaning there will be no real hope for rapid educational improvement.

Even when forced busing became inevitable early this year, the school committee made no effort to arrange meetings before the recessed summer vacation so that programs for the children's safety could be worked out.

"In Seattle we spent millions of dollars in getting the community ready for busing, but there was very little preparation in Boston," said said Bottomley.

Many observers feel the mayor's office could have done much more to help. "Kevin White didn't let the city burn down," a taxidriver said. But others feel that Democratic Mayor White was as culpable as the others in not confronting the busing issue head on.

White confined his activities earlier in the year to meeting small groups of people over coffee, insisting that while he personally was against busing, the law had to be enforced.

And when violence did stalk the streets and schools of Boston, White was fond of telling reporters: "The city is not out of control. Not one child has been hospitalized overnight."

"I think he would have ordered a quadruple amputee out of the hospital by evening just to keep making that point," one reporter said.

Critics say White helped to inflame the situation when, during the first troubled weeks, he threatened to disobey a second school desegregation phase if federal authorities did not provide marshals, a stand he soon reversed.

White's job was not made easier by President Ford's press conference comment that while he deplored the Boston violence, he felt that busing "was not the best solution to quality education in Boston."

White said that President Ford "is taunting Boston into becoming another Little Rock."

State utilities expected to file $200—300 million rate increases

BOSTON [AP] - The chairman of the state Department of Public Utilities said yesterday that Massachusetts utility companies are expected to file for between $200 million and $300 million in rate hike requests next month.

DPU Chairman Robert Meade also said in an interview that Massachusetts consumers will be paying considerably more for utilities by 1976 than they are now.

Asked how consumers are going to be able to foot the bill, Meade said, "I'm beginning to wonder. If everything continues at this rate, it's going to be tough."

The November requests, totaling $200 million-$300 million, are expected to come from New England Telephone Co., Boston Edison Co., and New Bedford Gas and Electric Light Co., Meade said.

"I don't expect any others next month," he said. "But there will be others before the year is out." Meade said he did not know how much money the other requests will involve.

The Associated Press reported last week that some $11.5 million in utility rate hike requests are pending before the DPU currently.

At that time, The AP quoted DPU Executive Secretary Francis Hickey as saying, "I think that three weeks from now, it's going to go from $11 million in requests to 10 times that amount. In fact, I know it's going to be more like 20 times that amount."

Hickey said the utilities were waiting until after the Nov. 5 election to file for the increases.

In yesterday's interview, Meade attributed the anticipated requests to inflation.

He said state law allows the DPU 11 months before acting on the requests, but the agency has tried to finish rate cases within six months "of the filing of documentary evidence."

That means the brunt of the new increases won't hit consumers until mid-1975 at least.

The pending $11.5 million in rate requests involve some $6.3 million for electric companies, $4.4 million for gas and $695,068 for water.

New England Telephone, which Meade said will file a request in November, recently received an increase of some $40 million.

Disabled Vets chief hits U.S. inaction

BOSTON [AP] - The national chief of the Disabled American Veterans is vigorously opposed to "arbitrary" decisions of the White House Office of Management and Budget that, he said, have "illegally inactivated" key programs for veterans.

DAV Commander Walter T. Greaney said the budget-cutting actions reflect the "same governmental short-sightedness" that crippled rehabilitation programs for World War I veterans in the 1930's.

Greaney, a resident of the Jamaica Plain section of the city and an economics professor at Boston College, spoke at the Veterans Day ceremony in the State House Hall of Flags.

He said despite published reports about the alienation of Vietnam veterans, their similarities with veterans of prior conflicts are "far greater than the differences."

Nevertheless, he said, veterans of the Korean and Vietnam wars have not received the "wholehearted support" of the government that was granted to World War II vets.

He said important parts of the 1972 Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Act are not being fulfilled and further laws for medical care and other services are being illegally held up.

Students charmed by overseas experiences

By JUDY EPSTEIN
Staff Correspondent

In a program sponsored recently by Alpha Lamda Delta and the International Programs Office, students spoke on their experiences studying, teaching and working abroad.

Pheobe Pepper studied on the UMass semester program in Grenoble, France and the summer program in Pau, France. Although a high competency in French is not required for admission to either program, Phoebe assured the audience that at the end of the semester, with the initiative of meeting French students, UMies could return nearly fluent in French.

Phoebe also noted the cultural and social advantages of studying abroad and experiencing a different culture. She suggested that interested students contact Professor Nancy Lamb in the French department.

Stephanie Sabloff spent a semester at the University of Tel Aviv and remarked that one of the more practical advantages of her particular program was that she accumulated 28 credits for only six months work.

Although the number of course hours was greater than at UMass she mentioned that professors understood that many of the foreign students were in Israel for an experience other than the purely academic one, and, consequently, were lenient on deadlines, etc.

Betty Lancaster participated in the UMass academic year exchange at the University of Lancaster in England. Betty expressed her personal surprise at the differences between American and English culture and peoples — a difference she thoroughly enjoyed! Her stay in England, including travel throughout Europe, did not exceed the cost of an equivalent period at the Amherst campus.

The Summer Seminar at Oxford, England was represented by Mark Spengler. The program, initiated by UMass ten years ago primarily as an English literature seminar, has since expanded into Sociology as well. Students receive UMass credits and grades which are all transferable.

Study in Greece, Inc. is a small program of 25 students, and with courses taught by Greek nationals and-or Greek Americans in Athens. Suzanne Chamberlain, who participated in the semester long experience, stressed the different aspects of the program such as living with a Greek family for a month while learning Greek and doing field work, and the course work in Athens which might consist of work on an archeological site with an advisor or working directly at a museum in Athens if one is an art major.

For education majors at the University, there are teaching programs in Western Europe for which one receives accreditation. Jeffrey LeBlanc spoke of the experience he had teaching at a primary school in Bristol, England.

Dana Beth, a participant in the summer program in Florence, told the advantages of study in Florence for students of such subjects as Renaissance art where one is able to view original works. The classes in Art History and history or taught in English and Italian language courses are also offered.

Kevin Garganta, who pioneered the Internship program in Social work in England, suggested his work as a viable and preferable alternative for students of sociology. He worked full time in a Social Service agency in London and received academic credit through Outreach.

For further information on any of these programs and others, students may contact the International Programs Office at 239 Whitmore.

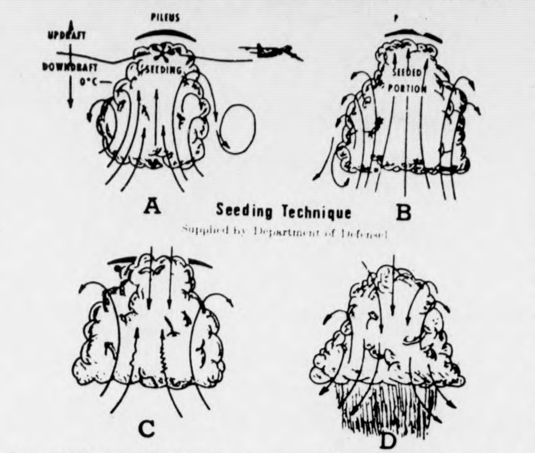
Environmental war

By CHRIS ROBINSON

This is the second of a two-part series of articles dealing with the question of Environmental Warfare. Published by "Recon," a Military Affairs Newsletter.

During October 1966, the Pentagon ran a series of tests to see if they could increase the rain fall over parts of Indochina. According to Lt. Col. Ed Soyster: "the program was to increase rainfall sufficiently in carefully selected target areas to further soften the road surfaces, cause landslides along the roadway, and to wash out river crossings. These events normally and naturally occur anyway during the height of the rainy season. By seeding the clouds it was intended to extend the period of occurrence beyond the normal rainy season and to supplement the natural rainful as required to maintain the resultant poor traffic conditions."



Seeding Technique

Supplied by Department of Defense

Soyster further said: "By November 9, 1966, the Commander in Chief, Pacific (CINCPAC) reported the test completed and concluded that cloud seeding to induce additional rain over infiltration routes in Laos could be used as a valuable tactical weapon." By March 20, 1967 the Pentagon was ready to go with regular cloud-seeding operations over the DRV, using WC-130 weather reconnaissance and RF-4C photo reconnaissance aircraft. The accompanying chart shows the growth of the program over Laos, the DRV, South Vietnam and Cambodia, which cost a total of $21.6 million.

Actually, the anti-war movement became aware of this new weapon some years ago when Huynh Huu-Nghiep, vice pres. of the Union of Vietnamese Intellectuals in France, wrote to the Chicago Collective of Science for Vietnam asking them to look into the matter. Huu-Nghiep sited an article in the French scientific review "La Recherche" which indicated that the U.S. was involved in Project Blue Nile using climatology for military purposes. Huu-Nghiep said: "We would ask you to find out whether this information is accurate or not, and if it is, to denounce this new form of war to the American public. In that case, we would also like to get any data related so that we could forward it to Vietnamese Scientists".

Science for Vietnam spent three months doing the research and prepared a preliminary report entitled "The Big Gun in the Rain", April 1972. The report concluded that the U.S., military was using rain as a military weapon against the DRV. The report states: "This report shows the lengths to which the U.S. Government is willing to go in its efforts for economic and political control of the world. The military has subverted what might have been legitimate research on improving agriculture or on the prevention of natural disasters; with the aid of a scientific establishment designed to serve capital rather than people, the military has turned weather modification into a tool for destruction of human and natural ecology."

Major contractors under Project Blue Nile cited by Science for Vietnam were: The Ran Corp., Santa Monica, University of Ill., Urbana, Yale University, New Haven, CT Nuclear Research Associates, Hyde Park, N.Y. Systems Science and Software, LaJolla, TRW, Inc., Redondo Beach. Now that the Pentagon has admitted the whole thing in public, Senator Claiborne Pell (D-RI), chairman of the subcommittee, drew the following conclusions:

"My own view is that we should not open the "Pandora's" box of harnessing nature, of changing weather or developing techniques to create typhoons "

It's Halloween-the only day of the year when weirdness is normal. Many of the younger set will be on the streets and in front of doors with trick or treat bags and-or bars of soap. But what about the students at the university? Will they maturely stay in their room studying, or will they regress for a night and celebrate this mid-autumn holiday?

The question-Should college students celebrate Halloween?

Karen Rubin-Sophomore from Lynn living in McNamara majoring in Business. Yeah, why not? I was thinking about getting dressed up and just going around. I haven't any idea what my costumes' going to be yet. Something original. I'll definitely go to parties and buy trick or treat stuff for other people...I was thinking of buying a couple of six-packs for people who came around. You never forget about Halloween.

Nancy Garrand-Freshman from Turners Falls majoring in History. Well actually, I don't like it too much. I think it gets a little too malicious, like the destruction of property and the breaking of pumpkins. I liked when I was very young, but as I got older, I liked it less. I think as it gets more malicious, it's just going to disappear, or maybe it will become something for the very young and people will treat it as such.

Julian Roldan-Junior from Puerto Rico living in Washington majoring in Zoology. This is a quite a thing because I know they are going to do a lot of crazy things that night...They really don't really care about Halloween...They'll do a lot of crazy things, like throwing rocks and eggs. Trick or treating is a very dangerous thing for little kids.

Chuck Sheehan-Visitor from Falmouth, Mass. I enjoy getting dressed up into a costume on Halloween especially because it's pretty bizarre time of the month...I'll be going to Europe for Halloween this year, on a broom if I can find the right witch. It's a good time to get back at people that got you all year. It's a fun time.

Lee Gordon-Junior from Wendel majoring in Veterinary Science. Sure, to maintain the Halloween Spirit...I don't live on the campus, but indeed I partake very much so in the Halloween spirit...I'm basically into sharing myself with other people on Halloween and enjoying as much of the festivities and the air of Halloween as I possibly can with people.

Warren Smith-Prospective UMass Music student from NYC living in Brittany Manor Apts. It depends on what else you have to do, what is more important, what your priorities are, what you feel is better for you. If you feel you should dress up like a clown for a night, then that's cool, but I personally being a musician have better things to do. I'll be practicing trying to get my own music together, you know, so I can cut a record or two or three.

Letters to the editor

You and your mind

To the Editor:

I feel compelled to express an optimistic attitude towards education and academics. As is being exemplified in the columns of Mr. Nathaniel Clark, a strive for excellence and fulfillment in one's college experience and in life are the goals we must attain. The ideas and expectations of Mr. Clark are not to be scoffed at. All areas and disciplines are constantly expanding and improving. Much knowledge has yet to be gained, information to be discovered. The world is an ever-changing classroom where much can be learned. There are unlimited possibilities and opportunities one can pursue, whatever his field of interest. Now is the time to begin to explore these frontiers of education. By means of this educational search, keen minds can be developed. It is the synthetic mind with the ability to originate with which we learn new techniques, acquire new knowledge, and discover new facts. Brilliant minds do not grown on trees, however. YOU must develop your mind, forming a firm background or basis from which to work with. If a little knowledge is dangerous, where is the man who has so much to be out of danger? YOUR MIND is a wonderful and cherished possession; it seems foolish to waste it.

WMUA voices on McGilvray

To the Editor:

Re: Scott Bacherman's Letter to the editor 10-24

We would like to comment on Mr. Bacherman's statement concerning the events of the last WMUA station meeting. Everything Mr. Bacherman stated was accurate with the exception of his assertion that no one considered his suggestion that we allow McGilvray to do a few more cartoons and evaluate them at a later time. The consensus of the group was in favor or "firing" McGilvray.

As we were not station members, we did not feel that we had a voice in the proceedings, but we would now like to express our opinion on what took place. The final outcome seemed pre-determined almost immediately after it was brought up for debate. There was little open-minded feeling present among the members. Had we been able to vote, we would have voted with Mr. Bacherman in support of McGilvray's cartoon.

Although our votes would not have changed the final decision, we feel that our participation might have opened more discussion and led others to give the matter more fair and serious consideration. This issue was not rationally debated, but rather vehemently shot down. It turned into a "hate McGilvray" rally rather than an impartial discussion.

Granted, perhaps this is not the most monumental issue the station will be up against, but it is a case in point. In the future, we hope that matters will be considered with no prejudice regarding personalities, but whether or not it is to the benefit of the station. This has been a learning experience at the expense of Donald McGilvray and possibly WMUA.

DeBoard just horny

To the Editor:

What really burns my ass is men like Pat DeBoard who run around asking, "Why can't men and women love each other, why can't we get out of this social routine of male-female games?", when what they usually mean is, "Why can't I meet more women who want to fuck?"

At least, that is what Mr. DeBoard comes across with when he says, "..wouldn't it be wonderful if all these opposite-sex people were pushing love on me and I could sit back...", etc. I don't get the impression that he wants much more pushed on him than a body of the opposite sex, with legs spread.

Of course we are all stuck in our social routines and of course we are all hampered by roles we are forced to play. But love between two people comes from intimacy, sharing, and affection, not from wishing more women would come along ready to hop in the sack. I feel that the only support Mr. DeBoard needs is a new definition of love, or maybe just a new jock strap.

And if the men that read this think that I think all men are out for a piece of ass, just consider where I might have gotten that impression.

Rosanna Falabella

Leave the students alone

To the Editor:

After reading Dr. Gage's remarks in the October 25 Collegian, I believe that he summed up perfectly the alienation that all students feel on the campus. His last statement that "...they [students] don't want us to be their advocate" sums up the attitudes that many administrators and faculty possess on this campus. I do not need, nor do I feel any other student on this campus needs, anybody to be their advocate. That, I feel, is the whole issue in this campaign by both the Undergraduate and Graduate Senates -- to involve each student in the many decisions which daily effect their lives.

It is my view of higher education that what it is supposed to do is to teach people to think for themselves, to gather all of the relevant information and to reach a final decision or take action as they see fit. Individual students on campus are being asked to put their education to the real test of its validity. Are you willing to gather the facts about the environment you are learning in, measure the efficiency and value of the services provided which you are paying for, and voice an interest in terms of commitment and time to the future of your University? That is what we are trying to find out. It is not student government's University, it is your University. Unless you decide to take an active role on this campus, it will no longer belong to you.

Dr. Gage accuses a small number of students, which I am sure includes me, of not understanding the dynamics of decision making. It would be easy to say that I am a 29 year old adult and know what is best for me, however, unlike Dr. Gage, I am willing to admit that I do not make all the right decisions. Dr. Gage, however, misses the main point and, that is, that whether a decision is bad or good it can only be made by the individual. No one person or entity has the right to determine the decisions an individual can make. This coming academic year could be an important one for the UMass community. So what student government leaders are asking is not that student government continue to control the lives of each student as it has in the past but that each student control the life of their own community.

James A. Lindsey, President
Graduate Student Senate

Nonsense demands

"We the legitimate representatives of the student body demand that you respond to the following demands immediately," and so the notorious petition begins. The very wording of the petition goes to the very root of what this university is all about. When the petition says that UMass should "respond to the needs of students", it implies that the university exists primarily for some other reason than to do just that, which I deny. The very assertion insults the many faculty, administration and staff who have dedicated their lives to students and their "needs". Perhaps I have missed something and what is actually meant is that educating students for many years was not responding "to the needs of students".

Let's now look at each of the demands.

(1) This demand submits that students "have the right to determine the direction of their own lives". In no way has this assertion ever been challenged. UMass has always allowed, far more than other colleges, students to make it or not on their own. Certainly the advisor system which is a disgrace to this university denies that UMass has ever been "paternalistic". It goes on to demand "primary determination concerning all facets of the university which directly affect us." At the start, what aspects of this university do not directly affect us? There are very few areas left to administrative control by these criteria.

(2) On budget matters students have already exhibited their magnificent ability to spend incredible amounts of money with very little result and so no more must be said.

(3) On academics the demand states that students "have major decision making power to influence academic requirements and procedures". Very easily said, very disasterously done. Major academic decision making power should never fall into the hands of students. Academic decisions on a university level demand (1) a knowledge of what is required to compete in any given field. Students do not have access to such knowledge. (2) A knowledge of how goals and standards can be best attained academically. This requires both experience and competence, both dirty words in student government. And (3) a genuine ability to be able to reason and to be reasonable in decision making. When a group demands rather than suggests, they clearly do not possess such reasonableness. To be academically superior a university's administrators must be able to make tough and often controversial decisions. Here .student's and faculty's futures are at stake. Students cannot make such decisions.

(4) The Trustees should "lay out exactly where our power. lies..." I agree.

(5) This demand asks recognition of students as "people...because we are people." What, in the cloudy minds of the authors, does the university recognize us as now? The demand is both confusing and insulting, I think.

(6) Yes, students should have the "right to freely organize" and should certainly be able to "collectively bargain with the administration over all matters affecting students."

In fact demand No. 6 is exactly what should exist in terms of University structure. Students should be able to meet with and advise the administration and faculty in their decisions. Students are the reason for this university; this it has always been. A university demands highly competent individuals to run it and to make the major academic decisions. Students simply are not capable of being impowered to govern any major aspect of this university. In fact it would be grossly unfair to ask us to do that for we are students and our primary responsibility is in the classroom.

Editorial Points

Nixon has no insurance, Sarge is taking loans from his wife, and Guzzi has a second mortgage. Isn't it heartening to see that we have such selfless public servants?

Or is it that they just can't say where their real money is coming from?

Really, folks, can you envision Nixon in a breadline? Wearing his Republican cloth coat?

Energy crisis headline of the week - "Take two WIN buttons every hour-and pray."

Which will probably get us further than a certain Ford we can all think of.

Plight of the UMass married

By PATRICK WALKER

The plight of the married students of this university is no different from yours. Whether in regard to dorm life, or to the SGA, or to curriculum determination, or to faculty selection and composition, the problem is the same - we have relatively no control over the persons and institutions which determine our lives. We as students are the epitome of the exploited consumer. We are in our learning and living processes being preconditioned to fit into the world at large, a world in which the majority of us live in passive powerlessness, our lives being determined by the powerful and wealthy few.

We, the students, together with our families, pay for the University of Massachusetts, yet, contradictorily, we have no control over it. The institution is supposed to exist in the interest of the students. It does not. It exists to further the survival of the economic system under which we live.

The tenants of Lincoln and University Apartments are taking concrete actions in asserting their determination to control their rents and their apartment units. We hope that the student body will recognize their struggle as one in the same with ours.

We oppose this rent increase because:

1.) It is being levied on us mostly to cover the costs of the University blunders at Lincoln and University Apartments. The University tries to disguise this by changing rent determination to a per square foot calculation, which is even more unfair to Lincoln and University Apartments because of the greatly disproportionate differences in quality between them and North Village. The University also justifies rent increases now, for the proposed installation of $36,000 of garbage disposals! We do not want to be manipulated, and we won't be bought off with promises of garbage disposals. We can only afford and will only pay an increase in line with the cost of living.

2.) We feel that it is the University's obligation to provide, especially for married students with children and for foreign families, a buffer from the competitive rental market. With the new increase, all the University apartments are now in the market range, and most of them are below market quality, all of which is further exacerbated by the fact that the poorest of us have no means of transportation, which makes it much harder to choose to go to more distant non-university apartments.

3.) The higher rents, though, are causing higher vacancy rates. The richer tenants go elsewhere, and the poorer tenants get poorer, as the rents necessarily go higher. For instance, how can foreign students, whose income is almost completely determined by graduate assistantships, pay such a rent increase when their University determined income remains disproportionately lower? Also, the foreign students dare not complain for fear that their visas will be denied.

We hope that all the tenants and students will see that it is in their good, as well as ours, to support the married students of the campus.

A feast of fools

I had the weirdest dream last night. It was Halloween. Everyone was there. At my Halloween party.

I dreamt that as the people starting coming into my house, the phone rang. It was Henry Kissinger. He had promised me earlier that he was going to be dressed as the Messiah, but the phone message was that he wouldn't be able to make it after all.

But everyone else showed up.

Gerry Ford was there, dressed as the great white savior of the elephant. But he was L.O.S.E.-ing (Loving Our Socialist Economy) because the elephant was quickly becoming extinct as the people lusted for elephant meat, which was cheap in the time of inflation.

Oh, Yeah, Gib was there, too. After all it was his birthday. He was dressed as the Guru Mahara Ji. The Guru came to my Halloween party as Nelson Rockefeller. While Nelson Rockefeller appeared as Santa Claus, spreading gifts and joy among the people.

And the people wanted music at my Halloween party. So in came Grand Funk, dressed as musicians.

Ambassador Ruth Farkas was there, costumed as the map of Costa Rica. On her back, someone had pinned a note saying, "isn't $250,000 an awful lot for Ruth Farkas?"

There were local people at my Halloween party. Bill Densmore came as a human. Scott was there straight. Dean was there sober. Cliff came while still awake, while Linda came immediately. And much to our surprise, Louie came, organized.

And then Ted Kennedy arrived. Dressed as a Chatty Kathy Doll, you could pull his string and he'd say, "I don't recall." With him, Ed Brooke arrived, in his Oreo costume.

This is absurd, I thought to myself in my sleep. But as I tossed and turned, I kept dreaming.

There was Geraldo Rivera, as Walter Cronkite in drag, interviewing Randolph Bromery as the Great Compromise.

Oh yeah, Haldeman, Ehlichman, Mitchell, Stans, and Dean were there too. Although costumed as puppets, they spent the entire evening severing the strings that were attached to them as E. Gordon Liddy, in his Superman outfit, looked on.

Kate Millett, posing as Burt Reynolds watched Linda Lovelace, as Emily Post, tell everyone what good taste she had.

At my party, Angela Davis and Pope Paul were dressed as Siamese Twins. Joe Namath came as the Prom Queen, while Ron Zeigler was there as the court jester standing in the unemployment line.

I laughed in my sleep. I couldn't believe what was going on. I chuckled as I saw Louise Day Hicks as a bus driver, George Wallace as a chorus girl in a minstrel show and Stevie Wonder as Lawrence Welk.

And me? I was there too. Dressed as a spectator in a Fellini film watching this bizarre feast of folls.

But was it really a dream?

Our government's two party system

By RICHARD WRIGHT

Although our nation's chief executive sounds a little hollow when he decries the possibility of a veto proof Congress, there is more substance than empty political chortling to his comments. Our basic two party system has withstood the torment of many variations of imbalance between the White House and Capitol Hill over the years, but a complete sweep for either party would spell more trouble than one might at first suppose.

One of the basic elements of soundness in our governmental system is the compromise elicited when opposing points of view realize that to not act at all and maintain the purity of each ideological position is not conducive to effective governance or progress. The resultant compromises more often than not demonstrate the judicious give and take tactics that facilitate government with fairness and acceptance by the majority. When one is forced to compromise his position to accommodate the demands of the opposition, the trend is necessarily toward less radical and possibly irrational moves. With a veto proof majority, a Congress might find itself whipping toward one kind of extremism or another that might prove to be eventually irrevocable and dangerous. Just the threat of a veto poser over one's head necessitates a pattern of lawmaking that requires a more highly developed and thoroughly investigated approach. For each argument that legitimizes the planned legislative move, the proponent must carefully consider those excesses the opposition may call to task. A veto proof legislative body may find the tediousness of preparing for rebuttal removed and therefore not bother to independently seek out the loop holes, excesses, and inconsistencies of various legislative proposals.

Another ugly development to be feared with the veto proof Congress is the blurring of definitions on just what is the position of any particular party. Without a strong loyal opposition, there is the risk of fractures occurring in the majority parties structure, with the resultant dilution of platforms, and unity. Such splintering would present a weakened front and would tend to harm the credibility of the party as a viable alternative to the dufunct second party that only just succumbed to the veto proof majority.

Some may point out that if the track record of such a Congress was so poor that the people rebelled the next time at the polls by resurrecting the defunct second party, all would be well again. As far as it goes this is quite possible. However, the break neck pace of the pendulum in such a case would endear us to few of our allies around the world who might fear the inconsistency of government might spell inconsistency in foreign policy and therefore prove to be a distressing situation. The impact on our potential enemies would be even more damaging. Our vacilation might be interpreted as instability and thus embody a position of weakness that might precipitate ominous steps on the part of those countries where our relations are balancing on very delicate strings.

Simply having the impediments to swift actualization of legislative proposals removed by an overwhelming political majority is not reason enough to support a veto proof Congress. The viability of our government requires a strong two party system, marked by the give and take of compromise, and the thoroughness and aforethought necessary to implement laws of fairness and progress.

"No parking"

To the Editor:

It has come to my attention that the parking area around the inside of the horseshoe in Southwest--previously designated as part of lot No. 50--has now been changed to a tow zone. You might ask why. Well, the Amherst Fire Dept. couldn't get their trucks around the horseshoe to the fire at Coolidge a few weeks ago.

I would have complained earlier but when I talked to my friendly parking officer he said they weren't going to tow; they just had to please the Fire Dept. by putting up the tow signs. Today [10-29-74] they towed every car parked on the inside of the horseshoe.

The reason I'm so mad is that I spent a lot of time and money and running around last semester trying to get into lot No. 50. Since I live in Emerson the horseshoe is very convenient. Now that I wasted all that time, what the hell good has it done me? I have next to no chance of getting a parking space now; neither do about 44 other people.

It's not fair. I think that either the parking office should refund about 44 people their money [which would never happen] or...they should let lot No. 50 people park for free at the meters [the outside of the horseshoe]. Something has to be done!

McGilvray seeks revenge

To the Editor:

I belong to the Women's Media Project and I fiercely resent McGilvray's advertisement of WMUA on October 23, 1974. It's not the ad for WMUA that I find insulting but his soundoff of biased and prejudiced opinions underneath the advertisement which was ridiculous on the Collegian's part to even print. McGilvray seems to find himself superior to the "prong toothed, power crazed, assholes" that are supposed to makeup the W.M.P. He is grouping every woman in the group just as derogatorily as he says they did him. I know that he did not speak to all 20 members of the project because I for one was not contacted by him and neither did I have any part in making a decision as to whether or not his ad made the paper. It seems that McGilvray has much too much power in the Collegian which he uses for juvenilistic revenge on groups and specific people for the public to read.

Ban handguns!!

To the Editor:

Ban Handguns!!, but why stop everyone except the police and security guards. Take their guns away as well. Why should they need firearms if no one else has them. Why should they fear loss of their weapons.

If 25,000 deaths were caused by the flick of a finger and most of those were "crimes of passion", [that would be a great name for a motion picture] how many humans die from other means?

Surely a few are knocked off by the use of knives; homemade kitchen variety or even historic replicas. Some people are killed daily by rocks, bottles, bricks.I wonder how many people are killed by automobiles each year, maybe we could ban them, because it certainly must be the machine that's responsible and not the human occupant, or just limit their use to police and security guards. I guess having a badge and so-called training makes them better than Karl Pole or any citizen in this country.

It might be a swell idea to "limit handguns" but before we take such a drastic step in limiting one of our freedoms, why not think and look to pass limits on other rights and try to get everyone concerned together and not alienate both parties or a multitude of parties.

Studying the consequences is on all million sides is by far a better step off a thousand foot cliff.

Boston busing bad

To the Editor:

[re: "END THE DISGRACE OF RACISM IN BOSTON]

I AM DISMAYED AT THE OVERSIMPLIFIED ANALYSIS OF THE BUSING problem in Boston, represented in the SGA letter to the Mass. Pols.

First of all, I am doubtful that busing is, in itself, any solution to the huge problem of unequal education in America. It is impractical in terms of time and money, and more importantly has a disintegrating effect on any attempts for community control, which I feel is necessary in education. And secondly, it masks the need for real economic change, that is the crucial issue in equality, be it of education, income, housing, etc. It is at best a band-aid measure applied to a fatally ill political system.

And even if busing was assumed to be a step in the right direction, the manner in which it is being instituted defeats its purposes from the start. It cannot be effective, unless it is carried out among all possible racial, and socioeconomic groups. If the issue is equality in education, then the whole city of Boston must surely be considered an impoverished area. Of course busing already existed in Boston. If you were lucky enough to have the money, you went to parochial or private schools, anything to escape the Boston School System! What busing within the city of Boston does, is pit the poor whites against the poor blacks, it does nothing to really improve the equality of education. As usual, it threatens the poor whites, who are in an insecure economic position as it is, rather than their middle and upper class counterparts, who escaped to the suburbs. The only way busing could be of any value, is if all areas of the state were included. Just try busing the children out of the suburbs, and the middle class liberals who are so appalled at the "racism" in South Boston, will start singing a different tune.

Free the resisters

To the Editor:

Let us not forget nor overlook that the complete pardon of our "generous" President to a Richard M. Nixon ill compares with the punitive features of his so-called "amnesty" - towards war resisters.

President Ford and his supporters apparently still consider the most determined opponents to the totally unjustified war as the kind of "criminals" who should atone.

Should young Americans who showed premature wisdom be penalized by a President-non-elect who never condemned the most brutal and most illegal war in all history?!

This writer joins the huge number of Vietnam War Veterans who just signed the magnificent Sunday-Ad in the N.Y. Times of October 13, 1974 demanding Full and Immediate Amnesty for all those who in any way opposed and resisted our criminal war against the Vietnamese and the people of Indochina.

English Dept. wants student input on Journalism Studies proposal

Comments and assistance are invited from any students who have recommendations regarding the proposal to limit Journalism Studies majors to an English "track," rather than permitting various majors in conjunction with journalism.

Send written statements to Walker Gibson, Bartlett 252, within ten days. The time the committee has set aside for oral presentations has been entirely taken up by JS faculty members, but if a student wishes to amplify his or her statement in person, Gibson will give as much time to that purpose as possible.

Student's housing rights discussed in noon talk

Today, at 12:15 in Room 168 of the Campus Center the United Christian Foundation will sponsor a talk by Peter d'Errico of SBA and Legal Studies on the rights of students to choose between on and off-campus housing. Several groups on campus, including the Student Organizing Project, have been raising this issue recently, and this program is presented by UCF as an opportunity to hear the latest developments on the subject from a legal point of view.

The half-hour talk will be followed by a question and discussion period. All interested persons are welcome to attend and participate.

The United Christian Foundation, an ecumenical ministry located in Hampshire House, offers a regular Thursday noon series of forums on issues of concern to the university community.

Horror tale airs tonight

The withcing hour approaches. It's the time of the year for ghosts, goblins and things that go bump in the night, and national public radio catches the Halloween spirit with a special tale of horror, "The 415 Express."

Broadcast locally on WFCR (88.5 FM) on October 31 at 10:30 p.m., the hour-long drama concerns itself with the strange disappearance of John Drearyhouse from off a speeding train, and of the efforts of his friend, William Langford, to find him.

Set in modern-day Britain, the story is an adaptation of a mystery by Amelia B. Edwards, a victorian author of supernatural stories.

French radio presents author

Thursday's Tout en Francais program features an interview with Henri de la Grange, author of the much applauded 1,000 page biography of Gustav Mahler, published last year by Doubleday.

During his interview with Marie-Jeanne Pecile of Amherst College's French Department, M. de la Grange discusses, among other things, Mahler's use of folk songs and choice of texts, the value of the re-constructed Tenth Symphony, and of course, his relationship with Mahler's prodigious wife, Alma, in the course of his research.

Tout en Francais is heard on Tuesdays and Thursdays over WFCR (88.5 FM) at 6:30 p.m.

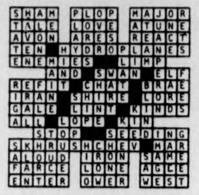
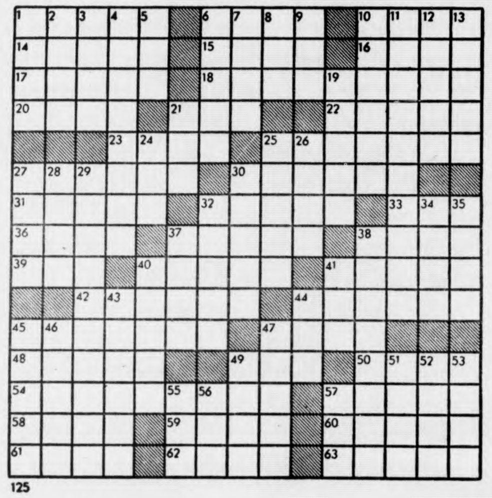
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved:





ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, October 31 — Born today, you are one of those reasonable, generally happy persons who is quick to forgive others their transgressions and just as quick to ask forgiveness for yourself. You have little patience with those who carry grudges but even less with those who have not stopped to think in the first place and thus have placed themselves in positions where forgiveness is necessary.

Alway constructive in your criticism, you believe completely in your ability to help others improve through frank evaluation and creative suggestions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take stock of business affairs before you go any further with a new deal. You may be in the process of biting off more than you can chew.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Present profits should be enough for you. Any more might prove detrimental to a budding relationship. You can make more gains later on.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Execute plans for a new project as early in the day as possible. As long as your ideas are practical, you should have no difficulty.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — An old friend may depend upon you more than you would like today. Nevertheless, do nothing to disturb another's peace and trust.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You would do well to broadcast your abilities to all in authority. Advancement is in the wind: give it a chance to fill your sails.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You have a distinct advantage on the employment scene. Make sure that those in authority realize this. [illegible] a friend up on an offer of aid.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The wise Taurus will blow his own horn — but not so loudly that others will think him conceited. Acknowledge another's share in your success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The more confident you are of your own abilities, the more apt you are to impress others with your gifts. Don't allow modesty to hold you in the background.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You need have no fear of being found wanting should you be weighed in the balance today. Make sure others know of your recent success.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You should have an opportunity to increase the family coffers by a good bit today. Be certain, however, that you are well prepared for the job at hand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can make a success of things today regardless of what others may say. All you need do is apply talents long left unemployed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Effective action, not merely action, is what is needed if you are to make gains before nightfall. Know where your loyalty lies during night-time.

For all the fair weather fans

By MIKE BERGER

For all those fans who wanted Jim Plunkett traded to the 49ers for Steve Spurrier, Cedric Hardman, and two no. 1's - please report to the nearest dining commons for your FILLET OF CROW.

Also, will those who thought that:

A. Randy Vataha and Mack Herron are too small to play the game.

B. The Pats should have drafted Ed Marinaro instead of Sam Cunningham.

C. The victories over Minnesota and Los Angeles were just flukes.

Please pick up your seasons tickets for next year's New York Giant games.

It is now Jim Plunkett's 4th year and those 4 years have been a gigantic roller coaster ride for Patriot fans. Remember the 52-0 debacle to the Dolphins and the year long feud of Upton Bell and John Mazur, the fumbles, interceptions, the first and goal from the 40 for the Pat's offense, and the revolving door of the Pat's training camp where the motto of the Upton Bell Employment agency was "Here today, and gone tomorrow." In addition, how many still have their autographed pictures of Ron Berger, Odell Lawson, Larry Carwell and Joe Kapp instead try to remember the 21-6 Foxboro opener against Oakland, the 34-13 shocker against Miami and the year ending Colts victory in 71, the back to back Falcons and Redskins squeakers in 72 and the present season of 74. Some fans may call those games freaks of nature. But the elements of the Oakland victory in 71 still remain.

Plunkett, Vataha, Bolton, Ashton, Rucker, Morris, Julius Adams, Lenkaitis, Gray, Neville, and Windsor. Those are the veteran ball players from the Mazur-Bell 1971-72 era. Added to that the names of Barnes, Durko, Smith, Tarver, Cunningham, Herron, King, Tanner, Hamilton, Lunsford, Hannah, Stingley, and reminisce how the New England media just last year remarked that the Patriots at the most had a dozen adequate N.F.L. players and that the team was at best 3 years away from playoff contention.

The biggest improvements have been in the linebacker and offensive line. Rumor has it that the press releases of 71-73 termed the Linebacking Corp - the Swiss Cheese gang. When Jim Plunkett called up for Chinese Food and ordered SPARE RIBS, he could hardly keep a straight face. Now the linebackers are called the Rocks of Gibralter and Plunkett has enough time to eat breakfast, lunch, and dinner and still complete a pass.

When you give a team stability, the authority of one Chuck Fairbanks, confidence, (this team can score against anyone) and recognition (support from the New England fans, media, and Howard Cosell who embarrassingly says every Monday "We will have them on next year," the future is unlimited for the Red, Blue, and White machine.

Poloers 2nd in New England

The past weekend marked a pretty decent ending to the best season the UMass Water-polo Club has enjoyed in its 3 year history. The 4 best club-division teams in New England met at Brown on Friday and Saturday for a round-robin tournament in which UMass placed second only to Southern Conn. State College. The lead for the title was passed around like a hot potato until S.C.S.C. came out with it largely due to a 12-1 wipeout of Trinity College.

UMass started out Friday night by beating S.C., the defending champs and tournament favorites, by a decisive 9-4 score. In that game, high scoring Henry MacLean netted 5 and Duncan Lomas and Kevin McGinn bagged a pair each while goalie Marc Gordon read the New York Times to pass the time.

The tables turned, Saturday morning, when B.C. (with some help from UMass) handed the UMass squad a 9-4 defeat. It was a frustrating match for UMass who poured 34 shots on goal to B.C.'s 19 but only 4 of them found the mark. In the first half, UMass dominated the action stamping "Voit" all over the B.C. goalie and goal posts. It appeared to be only a matter of time before the scoreboard would begin to tell the story. As Coach Bill McCafferty remarked at the time, "We had possession of the ball for about 12 of the 14 minutes but the score was still 4-1, B.C."

Except for a slight shift in momentum, the second half was much the same as the first with various combinations of substitutions failing to produce that magical connection. In the losing cause, first year man Russ Yarworth and Captain Bill Bridgeman each came up with their first goals of the weekend. Russ's was a bouncer which finally broke the ice for UMass on the third power play. Bill's was a well timed shot which faked B.C. goalie Mike Quigly up in the air and then blew by him as he sank to the bottom.

After an afternoon of rest, the UMass squad returned to find that S.C. had beaten B.C. for them and it was necessary to beat Trinity by 11 goals or more to take the championship; or 3 goals to take second ahead of B.C. Coach Bill McCafferty pointed out, however, that blowing somebody off by 11 goals is against all the principles on which the club is founded. He sent the team off, therefore, to play "our regular game," substituting freely and coming away with a highly satisfying 13-9 victory and a final standings superiority over archrival B.C., which is not to imply that Trinity was a poor team prepared to play patsy. They are, after all, the fourth best club in New England and had nearly beaten B.C., losing a tough one 10-9 with one second left on the clock; which did little for the UMass cause. In fact, Trinity put on a burst through the end of the half and into the third quarter which put them ahead 9-6! But, waking up from their midgame doldrums, UMass began to click, shutting out their opponents and running off 7 straight goals for themselves. High scorer was Duncan Lomas with 4 goals and some impressive 2-way swimming. Kevin McGinn and Henry MacLean netted 3 apiece; McGinn's included the second place clincher in the fourth period and MacLean adding an insurance tally in the last minute. Ron Boucher, along with numerous steals, added 2 scores and Russ Yarworth another.

Some things that don't always show on the scoreboard were the outstanding defensive performances of John Nordby and Bill Bridgeman who manhandled some of the best players in the East this season.

Credit is due to Ben Crooker, Spencer Sullivan, Tom Rhodes, Ed Fouhey, Dicken Crane, and Steve Latter who were constantly contributing, each starring when the time came.

The club looks forward now to some pressureless swimming, and an even better Spring season.

Zaire aftermath: Where's the old Ali?

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

KINSHASA, Zaire — A shattered George Foreman said it best, unknowingly: "He won the fight, but I cannot say he beat me."

In the squared 19-foot ring, the phenomenal Muhammad Ali was deadly. He made a shambles of the powerful fists that had wrecked in minutes such warriors as Joe Frazier and Ken Norton and had won Foreman the accolade as the ring's new "dark destroyer."

But in the recesses of the big fight's aftermath — in the cool reflection of the dressing rooms where men's souls and not their fists are tried, Ali was the vanquished.

Foreman carried the day in the department of true sportsmanship, graciousness and humility.

Ali's finest hour turned out to be Ali's greatest tragedy.

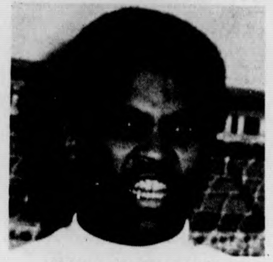
The handsome, charismatic black who three times emerged from the ring's graveyard to recapture the sport's most cherished prize proved to be an arrogant, thoughtless, inconsiderate champion, a man of no compassion.

What a shame.

How all of us would have loved to have rallied behind this gifted, imposing figure and joined in shouting his praises as the Africans did Wednesday: "Ali, Ali, Ali."

But Ali wouldn't have it.

His bitterness, his vengeful heart, his bent to strike back at those who had hurt him, warped his sense of decency toward a callow youth who — from all accounts — had never done him a wrong.



Where is he now?

Even here in darkest Africa, the first tenet of sport is: Don't kick a man when he is down. Ali not only kicked, he figuratively stepped in Foreman's face. And then pivoted.

Why? Why, really?

Over in the loser's dressing room, the dethroned champion was telling a cordon of newsmen, "Ali is a true champion. He deserves respect. He has been a credit to his family, his race and boxing."

This fight brought to the surface in Ali's personality an ugly streak which earlier had manifested itself in bouts with Ernie Terrell, whose nose he rubbed into the ring ropes, and with a sore-backed Floyd Patterson, whom he carried 12 rounds just to torture and humiliate him.

It is difficult to overlook Ali's deplorable conduct in the ring prior to Wednesday's fight.

As the band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and then the Zaire national hymn, Ali leered at the champion — standing there stiff-backed in his red, white and blue robe — and spat profanities. It was a deplorable scene.

Ali may be justified in hitting back at authorities who took his crown without cause. No one disputes his right to fight for his race. But why degrade an opponent who was innocent of any of these offenses? Why knock an America who is sorry for its past transgressions and has made Ali a folk hero and a millionaire?

The question all of us are asking today is this: What happened to the laughing, poem-spouting, prankish kid we knew as Cassius Clay? When did the cold, taunting, insensitive Muhammad Ali arrive?

UMass women's eight finishes 10th of 44 in Head of Charles

By LAURIE GULLION
Sports Staff

Despite strong northwest winds gusting to 25 mph, 547 boats — from single sculls to the best eight-oared crew in the world — sped through the starting gate and raced individually up the Charles River to beat the clock Sunday in the Tenth Annual Head of the Charles Regatta.

The Head featured more women's eights this year than in the three previous years that women have competed. There were 44 eights with Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia winning in 18 minutes, 24.4 seconds. Close behind were Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and B.U.

The first boat from the UMass Women's Crew Club finished tenth in 20 minutes, 24.1 seconds. The second boat slid over the finish line in 21 minutes, 24 seconds to finish 21st.

While challenging the oarsmen's endurance, the three-mile course also puts the coxswain's steering to a test. The Brown eight had a near-miss in a tight squeeze under a bridge, and a pair bumped into the Eliot Bridge but were able to continue. One woman flipped her scull and bathed in the river.

UMass coxswain Marianne Coderre was apprehensive at the start but said "the time passed quickly because the course demands a lot of attention."

"It's really crucial to take the shortest course around the bends and through the bridges, every second counts. And it's all worth it when I see the expressions of satisfaction and relief in the boat."

The Regatta, which started before the B.U. Bridge and wound along Memorial Drive under seven bridges to finish in Brighton, attracted thousands of spectators who picnicked on the riverbanks all afternoon.

Frosh harriers end season 6-0

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The UMass freshman cross country team ended it's regular season last Saturday at Storrs, with a pair of victories over UConn and Newport Naval Prep.

The harriers topped UConn 19-44 and whipped Newport Prep 19-79 to compile a perfect 6-0 record.

Cliff Staples, who will move up to the varsity squad for Saturday's Yankee Conference meet, paced the first-year thinclads. Staples ran the five-mile course in 24:35.5, while teammates Frank Carroll, Dave Kramer, Rolf Meyer, Dino Lamacchia and Bob Neil captured the number three through seven positions. Carroll, Meyer and Neil ran consistently throughout the season, but Kramer and Lamacchia performed well in the last few meets. Freshmen coach Mike Muska commented that Kramer has improved considerably during the last two races.

The freshmen harriers totalled six wins, including victories against junior varsity teams from Boston College, Providence and Harvard, two triumphs over UConn's freshmen squad and a win against the New Hampshire varsity.

The runners will enter the championship part of the season on November 11, competing in the New England Junior Varsity Championships and will go on to the IC4A Division I Junior Varsity Race a week later.

TEP trips Bucks for IM crown

By BILL DOYLE

TEP captured their third straight men's title by virtue of a 24-12 victory over the James Buckeyes and the Squad took the women's crown by making SAM cry uncle, 16-0, in the intramural campus football championships last night.

You can't make mistakes against a championship club and expect to get away with it. With just a minute left in the first half, TEP turned a poor Buckeye punt and an interception into a touchdown and field goal to take a 24-0 lead at intermission.

With exactly one minute remaining in the first half, Dave Schoen punted a low line drive out of his own end zone. Dave Graham, the TEP captain, caught the punt on the run and returned it inside the Buckeye ten yard line. A quarterback draw by Bruce MacNamara on the next play made it 21-0 with Ron Beaurivage adding the extra point. With just seven seconds left in the first half, Dave Graham provided the heroics again by picking off a pass deep in Buckeye territory. Ron Beaurivage then kicked a field goal to give TEP a commanding lead.

The Buckeyes didn't quit though as they came out roaring in the second half and made a game of it.

Sean Cronin threw a touchdown pass to Dave Schoen (who else?) to put the Buckeyes on the scoreboard. The try for the extra two failed so it was 24-6, TEP.

The Buckeyes gave TEP a scare late in the game when TEP got a little sloppy. With a minute left in the game, Larry Heaton scored a touchdown on an interception to give the Buckeyes a life. The James boys pulled off a successful onsides kick but TEP held them scoreless the rest of the way.

The Buckeyes seemed psyched out before the game even started because of the loss of their quarterback, John O'Brien, due to a dislocated shoulder suffered in Tuesday's semi-finals. O'Brien was replaced by Sean Cronin who was hampered by a knee injury. The TEP pass rush took advantage of Cronin's lack of mobility as they sacked him six times and forced him to hurry most of his passes.

TEP's first two touchdowns were passes from MacNamara to Pete Backstrom and Jim Black.

It was the third consecutive campus football championship for TEP and their 31st victory in a row. TEP hasn't lost an intramural football game since 1971.

TEP beat the James Buckeyes in the men's intramural football finals yesterday to capture their third straight campus championship.

Collegian sports

In the women's finals, SAM wanted the game postponed because of the lack of players due to injuries. Unfortunately for SAM, the game was played with the Squad winning, 16-0. SAM played without their best two players, QB Ruth Ellen Sandler and Olympic runner Kathi Lawson. According to SAM team officials, their replacements "had never stepped foot on a football field in their lives."

The Squad, who came in second place last year, scored when Nancy "Funky" O'Neil returned an interception for a TD. Kathy MacDonald ran for the extra two. This score marked the first time all year that SAM had been scored upon. A pass interference call set up the Squad's other score as they were presented the ball on the SAM three yard line. After three unsuccessful tries, Kathy MacDonald ran it in for the score. Anne Navoni caught a pass for the extra two points to complete the scoring for Coach Pat Glispin's girls.

TEP 24 James 12
Squad 16 SAM 0

IM INFO: Both championship clubs received plaques from the intramural department. TEP looses only four players to graduation from this year's team.

In the consolation games for third place, BKP used two Neil Pitchel touchdown passes to Ron Plumb and one to Curt Stegerwald to crush the Gorman Pines, 18-7, in the men's division and the Van Meter Vikings won over the Crabtree Trees in the women's division by a forfeit when the Trees failed to show up.

Cy Young to Hunter

HERTFORD, N.C. [UPI] - Jim "Catfish" Hunter missed five deer and lost seven dogs Wednesday, but winning the Cy Young Award helped salvage the day for him.

"I was surprised," said the Oakland Athletics' pitcher who has been instrumental in the team's three straight world championships.

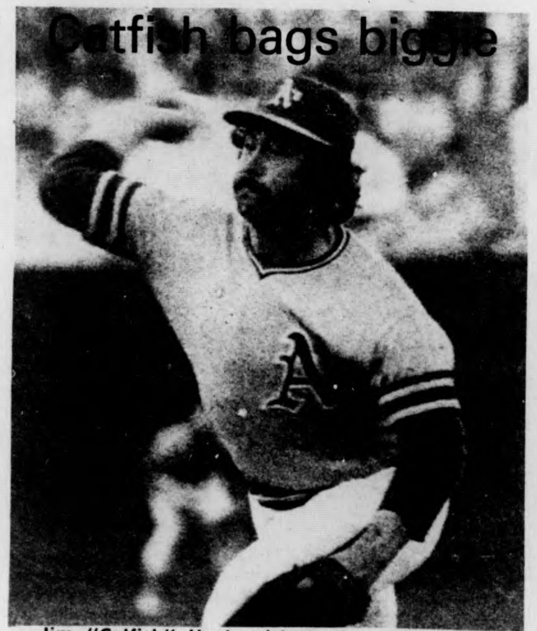
Hunter said he and some friends had just returned from a hunting trip at 5 p.m. and had missed five deer and he had lost seven hunting dogs. His wife ran out to meet him and gave him the news.

"I thought Ferguson Jenkins with the (Texas) Rangers would get it," said Hunter. "We both had (won) 25 games and ail. I thought they might have given it to him because I was pitching for a better team than he was."

Hunter, who lives in this coastal North Carolina town with his wife, two children and about 50 hunting dogs, said the award "does mean a lot to me on my contract."

Hunter has been the subject of controversy since his contractual dispute with as owner Charles O. Finley.

Catfish bags biggie



Jim "Catfish" Hunter (shown here during third game of World Series in Oakland), a leading contributor to the string of three straight World Championships rung up by the Oakland A's, won out in a duel of 25 game winners when he edged Ferguson Jenkins of the Texas Rangers in voting for the American League's Cy Young Award.

Celts edged Bullishly 105-104

BOSTON [UPI] - The Chicago Bulls, helped by Chet Walker's eight second quarter points, built up a 19-point halftime lead Wednesday night and held on to beat the Boston Celtics 105-104.

The Bulls started the game with an 11-2 surge helped by Walker, who finished with 26 points, and Center Nate Thurmond. But, the Celtics, the defending NBA Champions, used Center Jim Ard's 9 points to close the gap to 26-21 after the first quarter.

After a long jumper by Celtic Guard Jo Jo White made it 26-23, Matt Guokas brought the margin back to 5, then Walker went to work sandwiching two layups around two free throws to make the score 34-23. Quokas turnaround jumper made it 36-23 before Don Chaney broke the drought with a corner jumper.

After a standoff third quarter, the Celtics, now 3-4, launched a comeback led by Guard Paul Westphal's 17 second-half points that fell just short. Rookie Kevin Stacom, playing almost the entire quarter, also impressed, scoring six points in the final drive.

Volleyballettes win

The UMass women's volleyball team defeated Mount Holyoke College 14-12 and 15-9 last night to even their season's record at 2-2. The JV team split giving them a season's record of 1-3. The games were played at NoPE gymnasium.

Floating and stinging

"Float like a butterfly, sting like a bee..." it's for sure who's the greatest, Muhammad Ali.

All you Ali denouncers out there, whatever your reasons, denounce no more.

All you Foreman flagwavers out there, you just keep on waving because George can't.

What happened in Kinshasa, Zaire two nights ago has to rank as one of the greatest comeback feats in the history of sports.

This fight was not just one man fighting another man. It was an era, a belief, a movement (for those who remember what they are) battling the past, a pseudo-champion, and a world of disbelievers.

Almost everyone said he couldn't do it. Foreman's too big, too powerful and too young...Ali won't last five rounds, and after all Foreman has never lost a bout and has knocked out his opponent 37 out of 40 fights.

Muhammad Ali's justice could not have come any more appropriately than his knocking out Foreman. Anyone who thought Ali would win most likely never thought of a knock-out. They thought that if Ali was to take Foreman it would be on points. Ali could possibly wear out George but he could never knock-out George.

The disbelievers have called him a loud mouth for sure, the greatest loud mouth of them all. The loudest mouth to ever speak up and out at the fiasco we once were mistaken to call government in this country. He told them he wouldn't be their boy. And he told them loud. And he told them at the risk of losing the prime years of his boxing career.

Can the perverted priority policy makers now see that they could not stop him? They took away those best years and they could not do it. They never liked him because he talked too damn much and so they thought they'd shut him up. They didn't know that as long as he breathed he would never be shut-up.

He could have easily become a showcase for our beloved Armed Forces. He never would have fought anyone besides the opponents he would have had in the hundreds of benefit fights he probably would have all over the world. He could have kept his title and everything would have been fine. That would have been the easiest way out. That was the way he did not go.

Instead he fought in a different way. He fought for what he believed. He fought for his principles and ideals that meant more to him than any glory from boxing. And at first he lost. The three and a half years that he was exiled from the boxing world were years of frustration and waiting. Waiting until he would finally win like he knew he would all along and, of course, said he would all along.

And once the highest court in the land (I wonder what they smoke to get that title?) said he won, it was only a matter of time before he would complete his victory in the ring.

Losing to Frazier, which everyone thought was a setback, was actually a stepping stone. It enabled the final blow to be against the flag-waver. More justice than anyone ever could have dreamed of.

Two nights ago in Zaire was much, much more than just a fight between two men. It was the settling of a feud between a man and his oppressors. It was a monumental event not often equalled in all of time.

It was Muhammad Ali, "the people's champion", floating and stinging, doing what he said he would, like no other loud mouth ever did.

A legend in his own time? The greatest fighter that ever lived? A leader of leaders? He is and will be forever all of these things and more.

SPECIAL UPSIDEDOWN ISSUE!

The power of 20,000 of U

Students As People

by B. J. Roche

French, BDIC, Phy. Ed, no matter what your major, sex, or musical tastes, one thing is probably certain: If you are a student at UMass, you have or have had a complaint about something around here. The Student Government seems unresponsive, the Collegian loses your letter to the editor, the Administration is no help, and there seems to be no alternative route to improving conditions. One student organization is working toward an alternative, and its success depends, to a large extent, upon the responsiveness of the student body.

The Student Organizing Project, (S.O.P.) began work last Spring on the organization of a Student Union on the UMass campus. The rationale for the union is that it provides an effective voice and bargaining power for students in dealing with the administration.

Hope on the horizon?

The organization of the union is still in the planning stages; it is hoped by the Project that a founding conference will be held the weekend of November 23. Much of the planning will be left up to the students themselves, according to Alwin Schmidt, a worker for the Project. "Hopefully, several hundred people will take an interest, thus giving us a wide range of students and varied interests. There will also be representation on terms of special groups, for example, Spanish speaking students." Schmidt termed the need for a solid backing as being the most important factor in the organizing of the Union. Once organized, the Union's actions will be determined by its membership, possibly serving as a regulating body, holding hearings, making investigations, and making recommendations for action either through the SGA or directly to the Administration. Its main power would be the fact that students would be solidly behind any demands made.

A question which has arisen is that of how much actual power the Union would possess, and whether or not a Union would settle into the complacency of the Student Senate. S.O.P. worker Nesta King replied. "It would be impossible, since the Union would be independent of the Administration." She pointed out that the SGA is an advisory body to the Administration, and possesses no real power. "If students had the right to collective bargaining, they would have a real source of power. A Union would be an autonomous organization."

The Project is involved in many other, activities, all relating to student interests. One undertaking is that of an investigation into the on campus housing situation. November 4-8, the Project will be holding hearings in each of the residential areas. Present will be Project members, members of the administration, faculty members with special interests, as well as residence area directors.

"There is a general disgust on a large scale regarding housing, and it should be dealt with," said organizer John Pepi, adding that individual cases may be responded to. The intended effects of the hearings will be a concrete set of grievances to present to the administration, as well as pressure for some type of response.

Students are urged to attend the hearings in their areas, to air complaints and meet the Administrators who make the rules.

In addition, the Project is working on a law suit contesting the residence requirement. "There is a strong indication that the residence requirement may be abolished by next fall," said Pepi. Tenants Union, on and off campus, appear to be another possiblity for the Project.

Another activity of the S.O.P. is the development of a Credit Union for students on campus. The Credit Union would provide loans and savings account services, at interest rates which would be slightly lower and higher, respectively, than commercial banks. The Credit Union will be a democratically run organization, with members making fundamental policy decisions.

The Charter is presently waiting for the approval of the Federal Government; it had been examined by Atty. Bill Dorsch, who foresaw no major difficulties in getting it passed. Once approval is received, the Credit Union will become a member in a statewide group.

All of these projects represent a positive step forward for students; a student Union would provide a different, new kind of voice for the student body, and many people believe it's worth a try.

Next week, a look at Student Unions across the nation, as well as the Administration's views on the subject.

> "The truth was doomed to die. It was being downtrodden, was being drowned, burned, ground to ashes. But look — it has survived, it lives, it has been printed, and nobody ever will be able to wipe it out."

Below The Salt has been the kind of magazine that would print peculiar work. We pledge to uphold this tradition, but can't promise everybody's peculiar work will fit. Your's must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces to the line. The deadline for each Thursday's edition is noon the previous Tuesday; but you can write to us anytime.

Below The Salt is a weekly fine art - real world magazine of the UMass Daily Collegian, student newspaper, Amherst, Mass.

DUMB THING DONE

Last week, for a number of interesting reasons, a picture of Creative Source was run instead of the Puerto Rican group Taone. Below The Salt is sorry for any possible difficulties.

IN PASSING

On October 20, V. Alexander Mackie, Jr., a Below The Salt staffer who wrote under the name of Alexandre, died in the UMass infirmary due to a severe attack of diabetes brought on by blatant neglect. We at the Salt regret this death and express deep sympathy to all who knew him.

George not the only sleeper

GEORGE WASHINGTON SLEPT HERE
by the Mt. Holyoke Laboratory Theater

The Mount Holyoke Laboratory Theater revival of George Washington Slept Here is an admirable attempt at a mediocre play. Its weak lines and strained plot makes it one of George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart's most uninspired and unimaginative comedies. Still, the Mt. Holyoke production has enough good comic performances to make it pleasant, light-hearted entertainment.

Written in 1940 (director Jim Cavanaugh wisely keeps it in that period), the play is a farce about the difficulties involved when a family of city-slickers make the move out to the country. Easy-going city man Newton Fuller buys a decadent old farmhouse where George Washington supposedly slept, without telling his skeptical city-bred wife, Annabelle and their daughter, Madge. Predictable complications arise when they discover there's no water, discrepancies in property lines, a slow-witted local handyman, unexpected guests, grumbling servants and an unpaid mortgage.

Undoubtedly, the play was written for actors, as it is here where the play shines. Jim Cavanaugh, playing Newton Fuller as well as directing, is perfect as the romantic city man fulfilling his dream of owning a home out in the sticks.

As a contrast to Newton's sincere, energetic confidence, his wife, Annabelle, played by Ellen Kennedy, is cynical and sarcastic. "Annabelle" is supposed to carry most of the play's wise-crack comedy, but Kennedy was often unconvincing, which may or may not be her fault.

Some of her lines that should have been funny fell flat because she seemed too concerned with diction and making herself heard and not concerned enough with timing and the right tone of voice. However, as written, some of the lines are just plain dated, and it seems that playwright Kaufman, who was undoubtedly the first and foremost proponent of the wise-crack, used quips in this play that lack the earnest poison of his other works. Some of Annabelle's scenes though, especially the drinking binge at the end, were the high points of the show.

In supporting roles, Jon Nyberg is marvelous as Mr. Kimber, the pre-occupied farmhand with a mind like a farmer's almanac, as was Alan McGee as boring, talkative Uncle Stanley, particularly when he talked about his childhood, "When I was a little shaver..."

As the love interests, Kit Liset as Madge and Zev Trachtenburg as her boyfriend, Steve, are good enough for the straight roles that don't offer much but to have a lover's quarrel and then get back together again. Boring but necessary.

The best comic performances, however, are from Regena Magness Weiss as the sweet, neighborly Mrs. Douglas whose map finally saves the Fuller property; Susan J. Spano as the flaky, goofy maid, Hester; and Guy Anderson as the Fuller's 14-year-old spoiled bratty nephew.

Gloria Muzio, David Hyatt and Kate Ireland also give fine performances.

The set is very neatly designed, considering the drastic changes it goes through, from a ramshackle farmhouse to a quaint, country home. Costumes and lighting were also exceptionally well done.

In the end, the Mt. Holyoke production of George Washington Slept Here makes the most of a play that didn't have much to begin with, but the few fine touches of Kaufman and Hart brilliance along with the fine cast make it well worth seeing.

Final performances are November 1, 2 and 3 at 8:30. Call 538-2406 for reservations.

Journey

I will answer a knock,
but I'm through pedaling myself
from door to door.
Simply asking what people have to offer and not more.

Wanting to leave to look at my feet against miles of highway
...the world spinning, flashing by.

Stripped of rules,
standing defenseless against regulated highways only numbered exits.
On my way leaving my habits
behind;
I could not call them friends.

Searching for a friendship not only for 24 hours a day, or seven days a week.
Needing unmeasured amounts of love,
a walk-in friend with no appointment necessary.

Ordered digits of shadow against a sun whitened dial cannot measure time apart or together.
Friendship a warm night
the rushing world gone to bed infinite star worlds winking eyes transmitting, attracting each other.

Space is three dimensional.
Added to time
you get four dimensions.

I want five.

Blue Jean Country Queen Linda Hargrove (Elektra 7E-1013)

The title "Country Queen" I would have said belonged to either Tammy Wynette or Lynn Anderson. That was until I heard Linda Hargrove's Blue Jean Country Queen which is the best collection of twelve country tunes since Edna Miller's calf got ran over by a pack of Hell's Angels.

Linda Hargrove has talent. Along with real fine singing, she writes all the songs (waal — a couple the gal had a little help) by herself. She probably wrote them on the back porch while petting the neighbor's dog, Twang, on his hot head.

Linda says a lot on the back cover which reflects her music style like: "Hope you all enjoy listening to my new album as much as Pete (Drake) and I and our Nashville picker-friends did making it for you." And "Thanks to Leon Russell and Willie Nelson for being nice guys. And last but not least, thank you for listening. Love, Linda."

Blue Jean Country Queen by Linda Hargrove is Country & Western that can't miss. It should be required listening for Country & Western Music Appreciation 101 — so I think you all should go on out and buy a few copies.

CALIFORNIA SPLIT

by Jeffrey Polman

Directed by Robert Altman; written by Joseph Walsh; starring Elliot Gould and George Segal.

Robert Altman's films since M-A-S-H have not been too well-received by the public. Brewster McCloud, a foolish farce about a "Birdman of the Astrodome" did poorly at the box office. So did McCabe and Mrs. Miller, a realistic Northwest-western, although the college audience has responded in favor of it recently. Images, a subtly-made suspense yarn, and The Long Goodbye, a contemporary Phillip Marlowe thriller, never seemed to succeed past New York City. Altman, however, is one brand of director, much like San Peckinpah, who will continue to make "his kind" of movies whether the reactions are good or bad.

California Split, Altman's latest, serves up two sure-fire audience pleasers, Elliot Gould and George Segal, in a fast-paced comedy about the gambling world. It is also an attempt at cashing in on the con-artist genre begun with The Sting (and Richard Nixon), but Altman does not totally give in to the commercial formula. In California Split he uses his patented technical gimmick which has stayed with him through all of his films: overlapping dialogue. In M-A-S-H it worked, because the zany atmosphere and multiple character portrayals allowed for some perplexing communication scenes. McCabe and Mrs. Miller applied it in guttural tones, which was more true-to-life but severely turned off the adult audience. California Split uses it once again, but this time it is over-used. The gambling house and bar scenes welcome the technique, as it is rather fun to listen to ten or fifteen people talking at the same time and try to discern what they are saying; but the scenes depicting Charlie (Gould) and William (Segal) as they go about their personal lives should have been left alone. Not even the Marx Brothers went through an entire day interrupting and talking over each other like hyped-up idiots.

The overall concept of California Split, though, is funny and interesting. Altman's knack for filling his backgrounds with colorful characters and everyday idiosyncrasies of American life makes the film very enjoyable in places. For instance, in one scene, a breakfast of beer and Froot Loops isn't really comical until someone pours a tidal wave of milk into the bowl and spills it all over the table. Altman seems to be doing everything he can to show us the intangible "fruitiness" of the gambler's life, the hot and cold, winner-loser elation and frustration he goes through day and night. At one point Altman hands us George Segal's feelings of spiritual emptiness sub-consciously, simply by placing a vacuum cleaner in the foreground of the picture.

Elliot, George and the audience eat it up.

There are certain elements of character and theme, however, which disgusted me and will prevent me from seeing this film again. One is Altman's portrayal of women. Aside from the withered, eccentric golden agers who abound in the poker parlor scenes, almost all of the remaining women are either prostitutes, alcoholics, neurotics, in other words — losers. In a film with the central theme being gambling, there is no excuse for the prohibition of even one honest woman's role.

The other atrocity is the idea of Gould and Segal showing off for the audience. Some of it is like watching one of those insipid White Owl Cigar commercials where some jackass is shoving his cute, bombastic talk down your throat. Maybe this is because I am totally against the star system, the idea of going to a film on the absolute basis of seeing a particular actor or actress. Nowadays you cannot just be satisfied with the new Dustin Hoffman movie unless the movie is good. As far as I'm concerned, Elliot and George could be the best actors in the world, but if their senseless quibbing is giving me a headache (which it did at times), then I begin to feel that I'm being made a fool of.

Altman Again . . .

But since most audiences still try their luck with movies featuring their idols, California Split will make some money. Then we will wait as Robert Altman comes back with another steaming, personal vision of man struggling within his irrational environment, shot hauntingly through cheesecloth, while the average moviegoer sits trying to sift out the mumbles, and says (totally misunderstanding the director's art), "Gee it's nice, but why don't they clean off the projector lens?"

Consloditate yor feces (Get your shit together)

by Parsons Nebdevitch

For too long the University has suffered the pangs of hunger associated with growth and frustration. For too many years students have come to UMass to bang heads and get banged. The time has come.

The University as we know it, was not meant to be a panacea for corruption and idolatry, but the results of it. As indisputable as it is incompatible, the only end a tolerant person can accept is that which with dubious distinction is known as the "Bluewall Bouncer Syndrome". It's been a long time since the "gay nineties." Some of us may not be ninety but some sure are gay. It's a well known fact.

Item: The amount of waste products excreted by all of the Caribou in Labrador is equal to the thrust exerted by the nuclear reactor aboard a single Trident Submarine. And what have the good people of UMass been doing about it? Electing more and more politicians who vote for this shit. The time has come.

Students are considered to be the clay vessels of antiquity filled with the bountiful wine of the present, aged so mercifully by the kindly mentors that terrorize Academia. It's a sure bet to succeed if only some way can be found to get the top off. Off a pig today, and do your duty. Your duty is to your home, your family, your god and your pig. The time has come. It's a well known fact.

Students at this University must be bussed to Howard and Grambling Universities to achieve racial integration. All of JQA and Pierpont must be razed anyway for the construction of a new Interstate Highway that will go from Whitmore to Hardees. Students bussed South may complain of the long hours commuting every day between Amherst and the South, but they may ponder all the while about Little Rock, Justice Douglas and the knee-jerk oppression exhibited with so little scornful malice by those in the know. It has gotten to the point where we may no longer ignore.

Students have for too long abused the entirety of this University. With as little logic and development as this wonderful piece of prose, they have dominated the cultural entities around us and relegated them to the woes of a Pufton Village. The pages of the Collegian Opinion Page have for too many months been filled with such verbiage and litary livered ejaculations that even the Kappa Sigs can't follow it. And the wondrous readers who so dutifully axe every deviant comma, as if the republic hung in the balance (The Republic, rest assured, is well hung) are playing ping pong with their brains. Where else can such prose as this get such an eager reception if not a skid row soup line. The time has come — we can longer ignore it.

And so my fellow UMies — Drop out before you get dropped out, Screw before you get screwed. And remember it's not what you can do for your University that counts, it's what you can do for me. For a good time call 586-9675. Ask for Josherina. Hi Ma. Hi Pa. I told you I'd get printed sooner or later. Remember: "The Heaviest Indictment is that which is yet to come." (Kung Fu — "Caine Goes to the Races"). Long Live The Honduran Liberation Struggle.

Parsons Nebdevitch is a Collegian Commentator.

Letters to the editor

Good Work, Ferd!

To The Editor:

In all my years as editor of The New York Times, I have never read such marvelous prose (outside of my own pages, of course) as Fred Weissted's column of today. "It had reverence, poise, and sparkle." — Book X, Verse V, New York Times Auto Section. Fred, keep up the good work, Fred. Perhaps one day you could be in charge of our campus delivery at UMass.

English language twisted

To The Editor:

These pages clearly exhibit the masturbatory twisting of the English language by those mental Neanderthals who pose as students. They should all, with due process, revert to taking Rhetoric 100, Introduction to the English Language. Due to the present largesse of the Commonwealth, the course is intended primarily for Rhesus Monkeys. I find it most indubitably difficult to comprehend that the average student lacks the ability to compose a few meaningful lines, despite the labors of us members of the distinguished faculty, who labor in vain at your behest. Polish Night worthwhile

To The Editor:

I would like to commend the people of the Dining Commons who have continually provided us with fair meals at fair prices. Polish night was especially worthwhile. The golumpkis and pierogis were delightful, the water was exquisitely delicious and flowing, and apple crisp is still my favorite laxative. I've lost 250 pounds this semester alone.

Students here naughty

To The Editor:

You people have been very, very naughty. Trying to organize yourselves into a meaningful coalition of concerned students — HA — that's creeping socialism. Cut the shit S.G.A. or I'll send you all back to high school.

Cheap laughs

To The Editor:

After reading the crap published on these pages today, I can only express my dismay at the lengths you fuckers will go to get a cheap laugh at the expense of those of us who are conscious, aware, and dedicated to life, liberty and the pursuit of a conscious consciousnous.

Joyce twists

To The Editor:

Joyce Kosnovski twisted the facts in her verbal piece of garbage printed today. I really feel sorry for her if she just can't hack living. It's time for people to start becoming aware of becoming conscious to the consciousness that is lacking in writers such as Joyce. She would be better off wrapping fish.

Twisting the facts

To The Editor:

I don't know what kind of bullshit Nestelbaum Ugolini are trying to pull off on these pages today. I've been here a long time and I know what has taste and what is tasteless. THIS IS TASTELESS!!!!! Their energies would be better employed if they would go bark at the moon or break rocks for the next 99 years. They have twisted the facts consistently in their tasteless protrayal of a typical Collegian editorial page.

The time has come

An era of decline. We are all approaching, and very quickly in the not too distant future, an era where we won't have everything we need. According to the Bible — The New York Times Home Improvement Section (Book V, Verse IX), America will soon have shortages of everything.

Can you face it America? Can you face waking up on Sunday mornings without the smell of bacon fat permeating your ever sensitized nostrils? But yet according to the New York Times House and Garden Section (Book III, Verse III) the pig industry is going to the dogs. TO THE DOGS! Now we all love dogs but not with our pigs.

Can you face it America? Can you face having shortages of the sweet smelling spring, or not enough of our beautiful balmy summers? Not enough bright fresh snow or a lack of those hauntingly shimmering autumn leaves. Ohhhh!!!! And yet the New York Times Book Section (Book I, Verse IV) predicts these various calamities.

Wake up UMass. Wake up before we lose the hubcaps off of our wheels, the tips off our pool cues, the logic off of our thinking. Wake up before those things that we value most highly along with Mom and the New York Times, are flittered off from beneath our noses, like so much confetti at Times Square. Wake up before it's too late.

We've got to do something. And that means you! Wake up UMass from your Hotbed of Apathy and proclaim your sovereignty. There are still things that you can do, befofe the fall. Write. Oh Write on UMass. Write your local Congressman. Tell him we don't want to lose our birthright. Tell him we want the Times at our doorstep every morning. Yes even twice every morning. Write a letter to the New York Times (Book I, Verse II) explaining our dilemma. We've got to capture what we've lost. Write columns for the Collegian. It's easier than you think. They'll print anything. If they print this every week you know that it's true. Write poetry about sunshine, sing odes to the goddess of the morning. Sample the bright clean mist every fortnight. Do something concrete.

The future is in your hands. It's up to you. Civil Rights, National Health Insurance and Free Speech are dependent on your very next move. The Constitution won't stand for anything less than your best shot. The fate of the Republic hangs in the balance. So twitch your eyebrows, my fellow UMies, and fold that New York Times under your sweatshirt, and walk out there, equipped to do battle with the enemy all around us, and show what free enterprise and UMass are all about. Tell em Fred sent ya.

Getting rolled the hard way

I'm fucked over. You know what I mean? You know how you feel when you get fucked over — they got it in on you and they won't pull back. Well that's how I feel right now.

Life is fuckin' me over. I can't live on what they give me. Between the two grand my ole man sends every month, the pound that I deal off every week, the $200 in food stamps that I get every once in a while and the food that I rip off from the Peoples Market, I can't make ends meet. Life sucks.

There's an old phrase in Yiddish that my grandmother used to tell yell at the milkman whenever he dropped a dozen — "Gey Shtoppin Schmuck!" That's what I feel like yellin to every asshole that hassles me. Sheeiitt.

I don't see how they expect me to make it here at this University without doin' downs all the time. Its got no fuckin' class. Its got less class than Boston. Fuck You Boston and all you Southies. You can't even appreciate Stevie Wonder. I had two fuckin' tickets to that concert. If any body is lookin for some unused tickets — I got em.

Where was I? I get so god damned sidetracked when I right these ridiculous columns. Oh ya. Life sucks. Ya know, I thought of a good way to beat the system here — how you can get by on 15 cents a day and still have enough left to get rocked on weekends. My plan is divided up into several parts.

Food. Anything that you can scrape — a freebie meal from some harpoon convention some turds are having the Campus Center. Even the greasy scrappings off of the Hatch grill or if you're not too fussy, there's the bottom of the Worcester Dining Commons Truck Away.

Places To Crash: My favorite is the Morgan Memorial Box at the Mall. But if I'm really hurtin' for a spot, there's the little physical plant shed over by the cowbarns. It's not bad if you have a cold and can't smell anything. And anytime I need a few bucks and a place, Chet at the local Sleep Tight Motel always finds me a warm bed.

Clothes: This is where the Morgan Memorial Box serves a dual purpose. It's not always the latest shit, but at least its something. Once in a while I find a dead drunk in a ditch with maybe a decent overcoat on. Other than that, the only things I wear are the Emporer's Fine New Threads.

Entertainment: This is the tricky one. You don't want to blow too much, but ya still wanna have a good time. As far as movies and concerts go — ya have to sneak in. This may require sleeping with the usher if you get caught. Other than that, you can have just as good a time sitting in the C.C. Concourse watching all the goons drift by. Then there's always sitting in the Bus Station witt all the perverts, watching the busses roll in. A cheap waa of getting high is a vat of Elmer's glue, but this can get fucking sticky.

Transportation: My great and gorgeous thumb. I'm also pretty good at jump starting cars, but only when I have to get somewhere pronto. Otherwise I hook up my sled to my dogteam or I hijack a cab.

If you do all these things and you keep your nose clean, you'll find yourself every weekend with enough money to buy a roll of papers in the Campus Center. Any any way you roll it, its better than getting fucking rolled yourself.

Send the Indians Back Where They Came From

The obscenity ruling by the Supreme Court of several months ago poses some serious questions for smart-ass editors of college newspapers, while also have profound implications for those of us who have tried continually to suppress temptation relative to changing sexual preference. We are speaking of that obscene figure that can be found standing in back of the Student Union — Metawampe.

The very fabric of our society is being torn at the seams by Metawampe's attire (or lack of it), and the time has come for remedial action. Some may suggest civil disobedience in this case, since this would be in keeping with the atmosphere of these tumultuous times, and because it seems to have worked for Sam Lovejoy. But we need a solution that is more long term — something that will stand the test of time. Simply wrapping a towel around Metawampe's lower half does not solve the problem. Therefore, we suggest that Metawampe be fitted with a pair of bronze briefs.

The Editors of the Collegian met for several hours and hotly debated what should be done about this pressing public issue, before coming to unanimous agreement. We feel obliged to take a liberal stand on this, not simply because we are a politically minded group of people, but because this space must be filled with eloquent oratory several times weekly. This decision may seem rash, but only through the actions of a concerned and responsive public, with the help of some verbose English-Journalism majors, can this problem be alleviated.

The opinions expressed in this space represent a majority of the Board of Editors.

These pages of rectal verbosity and calculated obscenity conceived and written by Zamir Nestalbaum and Michael Ugolini.

Joplin: An Intimate View

reviewed by Eileen O'Conner

Janis Joplin-Buried Alive
By Myra Friedman
$1.25 Bantam Books, P. 368

Buried Alive opens with a sketch of Janis' early life in her hometown, Port Arthur, Texas. An intimate friend for many years, Myra Friedman has credibility in documenting this early phase of Janis' life which no formal biography could match. She reports Janis to have been brilliant and extremely precocious in her school years, but she also shows her to have become disreputable in high school and to have suffered from a physical unattractiveness which soon permeated her entire personality.

As early as her sophomore year in high school, the Janis of Myra's story was already feeling the pains of rejection which would eventually lead to serious repercussions in her future. Her outstanding physical characteristics; being overweight with ratty hair and poor complexion, were the roots of her insecurity. Because of her forward nature, however, she compansated by striking out against her peers and parents. This rebellion manifested itself in the form of much carousing, experimentation, and even degradation. She had the traits of a troubled and unstable youth, a pattern that soon became the 'Joplin style' and which was later to be worth millions in her performances.

After graduating from high school, Janis left Texas and made her way to San Francisco. Soon after, she becomes a speed freak; her health failed and depression consumed her. Friedman really plays up Janis' promiscuity but to what extent it might have been overplayed is not clear to the reader. "According to some of her friends," wrote Friedman 'getting it on' naturally explained her sexual escapades with women too; That's how free she was...if somebody turned her on, like in a sexual way, it didn't matter if it was a guy or a chick, and if you can really be that free, that's really far out!' "

The San Francisco experience was traumatic for Janis; so out of desperation, she returned to Texas, vowing off drugs and in general, trying to conform to the norms of Port Arthur. Her honesty, however, prevents her from repressing the discontent she felt with the fraudulent life she was then leading.

Janis was motivated to go to Los Angeles by her desire to sing. After joining Big Brother and the Holding Company, her first break finally came at the big rock concert at Monterey. From this time on, the press generally was a positive force in building her reputation! However, until she died, her life continued to be a series of frustrating ups and downs. The author portrays these periods vividly so the reader has a close rapport with the distraught singer, even in her trials as a junkie. Myra also explains a history of the blues in relation to its impact upon the career of Janis Joplin! A singer who found refuge in singing the blues in a style true to her torment, needs and wishes. One of her songs from her "Cheap Thrills" album, "I need a man to love," seems incongruous when one learns how many men she was involved with; not so however, when one realizes exactly what she desired — a genuine reciprocity and the promise of permanence.

Friedman stresses Janis' insecurity and strong desire to gain acceptance. It is shocking to learn that such a flamboyant figure had so little self confidence. Her anxieties were only diminished by what came to be her trademark, Southern Comfort and behind closed doors heroin. Her desire to stay off 'junk' was always in her mind, but never would she forego drinking. Granted it was a crutch, but she felt it necessary for her survival.

The life of Janis Joplin was complicated by the fact that she always operated at rash extremes. This is why it would be impossible to say, "Janis Joplin was like this..."Myra Friedman does an excellent job of presenting her in her fullest complexity, yet she overdramatizes characteristics of self-destructiveness and dwells on minor points of interest (incidental friends and concerts), too often to keep them all straight. Her descriptive style is also overworked at times, especially when dealing with trivialities such as dress and weather. The biography is complete, but such tangential items make the book too lengthy.

In a sense, the novel is anticlimatic since the reader knows the end beforehand, leaving Janis' final overdose of heroin without any dramatic impact. What remains is the high anticipation to learn whether the 'queen of rock's' death was suicidal or accidental. Myra does not make a clear cut stance on this much debated issue for she knows that facts of the mystery were buried when Janis died — only she could have known.

Compassion is what one feels upon completing Buried Alive. It then becomes impossible to listen to her music without feeling as if one knew her personally. The book invites you to see her world as a living reality, though unfortunately one in which she was buried alive.

This book is available in the University Bookstore.

Book Corner

Book Corner with Fred Weiss

with Fred Weiss

Last year Alex Comfort edited a book entitled the Joy of Sex. Filled with colorful pictures by Charles Raymond and Christopher Foss, the book became somewhat of a guide for the sexual gourmet, and was subtitled as such. The book covered an index ranging from beds to waterworks with things like "quickies", "Tongue baths" and most everything else in between. The book seemed quite explicit and complete, and numerous readers liked it enough to push it to the top of the bestseller list for several months.

What seemed like a genuine attempt to hit the problem of sexuality on a more serious level, now is beginning to seem like a sort of intellectual masturbation on the subject of sex. Recently Alex Comfort came out with another book, simply entitled More Joy, A Lovemaking Companion to the Joy of Sex. Where Joy ranged from beds to waterworks, More decides to range from "babies to vaginismus". The pictures are not that different, and the concept of the book does not seem worthy enough to warrant another publication. Alex Comfort may know about the Joys of the sack, but it is apparent that he is equally aware of the Joys of the bank account.

More Joy isn't a bad book, it is just that you can read Joy and then More and not feel that your sexual life has been greatly improved by the latter. On the other hand you may not go in for these "technique supplements" in the first place, but then that is another story.

I enjoyed Joy of Sex, because I felt that the author tried to deal with sexuality on a sensitive and serious level. However with More Joy I am bored by his repitition, and somewhat disgusted by his greed. Besides for my rather personal feelings about what Alex Comfort is doing, if you were intrigued by his first book, you might just enjoy this "Lovemaking companion to Joy." Who knows, within five years you may have stacks full of Alex Comfort books. I can see it now Daughter of Joy of Sex, or perhaps Planet of the Joy of Sex, and eventually More Planets of the Joy of Sex.

Book Notes

Started to review Angela Davis, an Autobiography, but after my Below the Salt story about her, figured that it wouldn't be fair to get into a whole shtick about it. However if you are interested in Ms. Davis' life and beliefs, this autobiography is somewhat invaluable in giving you Davis' opinions about her past and present, and the many things that she has seen and done during her life so far!

Ed Smith is my Assistant Book Review Editor, a title that brings him either a bit more or less status then lets say....a prize winning author of Yiddish short stories living.....in Egypt. Smith wins the endurance award for bulling his way through the entire edition of Solzhenitsyn's Gulag Archipelogo.

In All the President's Men, Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein referred to their key White House source ad "Deep Throat". Do any of you have any educated guesses who that person is? Send your ideas to me, care of the Collegian. All interesting letters will be published.

Every now and then a writer pops up who is so damn good, you wonder "where the hell have you been all these years". Don Aucoin, a Mass Communications major from Project Ten is that kind of writer. He breaks every traditional rule of journalism (gave his entire first opinion of a book in the first line of his review of Joseph Heller's Something Happened, then proceeded to spend five pages to say why) and it sounds great. Besides, Don is the only writer I know who can get away with using words like "Rats". If your pen is tapping the table as you read this, write a story for our magazine. Remember, todays shlep might just be tomorrows Don Aucoin.

Besides book reviews, Aucoin is presently working on an extensive character study of the (major protagonists) of the Peanuts comic strip, along with his roomie and guru, Richard Berman. Rumor has it that it will eventually be used for a joint Senior Thesis.

More Joy and Angela, and Autobiograghy are both available at the University Bookstore.

Remember our theme jingle: If you like to read and write, why don't you combine the two — try our hand at a book review. All it takes to join the staff is a little bit of brains, and a lot of heart. If you only have one, then heart is preferable.

Keeping America down

By David Miller

Good Old Boys
Randy Newman
Warner Bros. MS 2193
Total Playing Time: 33:19

In order to stay alive (assuming you're not suicidal), you need to have a certain amount of pride in yourself. But if you're one of the little people — specifically, a Southern redneck — it's a bit more difficult than usual. You're implicitly defined as inferior by the prevailing North-Eastern culture, which you have to respect, because it is prevailing, after all. At the same time, you can see through its falseness and hypocrisy but can't fight it. On another level. the pride which you must assume leads you to blame your failures not on the system, but on yourself, which leads to intolerable guilt. Because it is intolerable, you find yourself back pleading from but hating that system, which in its turn won't give you a break. You're damned if you blame failure on yourself, and damned if you don't. Run this cycle enough times and you may eventually lose your mind.

This is the scenario explored by Randy Newman on what may be his finest album to date, Good Old Boys. Newman has, on this album, woven twelve songs together which explore the many aspects of the effects of oppression on a group which had always been led to believe it was superior. Its focus is poor Southern whites, but some of the questions it raises might well be applied to an analysis of the conditions of other "superior" groups in a culture — the condition of men, for example. If a system gives you incentives for believing in it with one hand, and does you great harm with the other, what are the results?

Side One of Good Old Boys deals mainly with the rednecks' alternating feelings of pride and inferiority, of seeing through those folks up North but remaining subject to them. "Rednecks" and "Birmingham" start things off — Lester Maddox is made fun of on a TV show (Dick Cavett) and the response is "Well, he may be a fool but he's our fool..". Later we hear that Birmingham is "The greatest city in Alabam'...You can travel 'cross this entire land... But there's no place like Birminham". And if "Down here we're too ignorant to realize...that the North has set the Nigger free", they do realize that "He's free to be put in a cage in Harlem (Chicago, Cleveland, East St. Louis, Fillmore West, etc.)..". So much for emancipation. "Marie" is a maudlin ballad about a man's love for his wife: "You looked like a princess the night we met...With your hair piled up high", and "Mr. President (Have Pity on the Working Man)" is a C&W-tinged hymn to that power which you can't live with and can't live without: "We're not asking you to love us...You may place yourself high above us". The side ends with "Guilty", a discordant ballad of internalized blame-"Guilty, baby I'm guilty...And I'll be guilty all the rest of my life".

So it's up against the system and into the jaws of the double bind; Side Two presents things falling apart. "Louisiana 1927" documents a terrible flood and the paranoid reaction to it: "Louisiana, Louisiana... They're trying to wash us away" They? Hmm... The official lies move closer to home, here in the person of Huey Long, Governor of Louisiana, self-proclaimed friend of the little man and dictator. Here is Long's song "Every Man A King", from 1935: "Why weep or slumber America... Land of brave and true... With castles and clothing and food for all... All belongs to you". Newman matches this with "Kingfish", the title taken from Long's nickname: "I'm a cracker... And you are too... But don't I take good care of you". Well no, he didn't, and the castles still haven't materialized, but after all, the government is our friend, so the blame must be on me after all. I must really be inferior like they said. Time to go crazy. "Naked Man", "A Wedding In Cherokee County", and "Back On My Feet Again" all document this terminal stage. The songs are filled with grotesque relations, loved ones who hate you, pathetic psychotics and a sense of There's No Justice But Who Cares. "Won't nobody help a Naked Man?" "Maybe we're both crazy, I don't know... Maybe that's why I love her so". The record ends with "Rollin' ", seemingly a happy ending ("Ain't gonna worry no more") which you may or may not choose to believe. I don't.

Good Old Boys is tight musically — even when the arrangements turn to schmaltz (as on "Marie"), there is no waste. Newman is backed by a large number of musicans, but the focus is on him and the sound is never muddy. Newman's score ranges over ragtime, Stephen Foster, the aforementioned schmaltz and discordancy, while remaining continually is his own style. Taken as a whole, it's a conceptual album worthy of its concept. Good Old Boys does not condone racism, nor does it make its subjects into heroes — but it is a wonderful exposition of the twisting effects an oppressive system has even on those who believe in it.

Live music:
Buddy Guy-Junior Wells
The Hideaway
Oct. 25.

If you were at The Hideaway Friday nite, you were treated to the sounds of the Buddy Guy-Junior Wells blues band. But, due to circumstances beyond our control, Junior was basically O.T.L. (liquid lunch, that is). Junior couldn't get it together (or didn't want to) to keep his lips on his harp for more than ten seconds at a stretch. He did manage a few fine vocals on "Hoochie Coochie Man" and "Ain't No Trouble."

But Junior's absence during a major part of the show was made up for by A.C. Reed on tenor sax and vocals. The show opened up with the band ("Honest" Johnson-bass, "The Snake"-drums, and Phillip Guy-backing A.C. doing a set of his brother's tunes including "Found Love" and "You Don't Have To Go". It was definitely the "Reed Sound", and was more enjoyable due to Phillip's excellent guitar work.

After a few numbers like "Big Boss Man", a tune which pleased the dancers in the crowd, Phillip called out his brother. Buddy immediately put us under the table with his version of "The Thrill is Gone". He showed us that a stoic guitar man he is not. At times he just let the guitar hang and concentrated totally on the vocals, coming back in on the guitar slowly and smoothly, making sure we felt those stingers just as he was.

Besides the bueno guitar work of the Guys, I thoroughly enjoyed the professionalism the group displayed. There were no hanging endings, indeed many of the tunes went right into the next on pre-arranged cues. We were also saved the endless tune-ups that seem to becoming a standard. The only complaint would be that the structured format left no slot for the rhythm section and we were thus deprived of finding the extent of their talent.

But the greatest pleasure was the setting, a club. Sure it was a bit smoke filled and a poorly decided upon seat could have put the dance floor between you and the stage, but it was comfortable. It made the nite more special to be able to see the chemistry between Buddy and A.C. And it was definitely nice to have the entire band mingling during breaks and talking relaxed to every Tom, Dick, and Mary.

What it mixes out is that Buddy Guy and The Hideaway went down as smooth as J.D. (And may I never torment myself with the Garden or the Civic Center again.)

OSCAR PETERSON — FEATURING STEPHANE GRAPPELLI (Prestige)
BUCK CLAYTON AND BUDDY TATE — KANSAS CITY NIGHTS (Prestige)

Both these double album re-issues are by jazzmen who would be classified as "mainstream stylists." Not my favorite term, but it suitably describes the type of laidback musical expression favored by artists such as those who've been playing jazz in many of its shapes and forms for their entire lives.

Pianist Oscar Peterson and violinist Stephane Grappelli display a relaxed ease in their technique and interaction which lends itself to the smooth flowing quality of the music, a quality making up only partly for the lack of strong inspiration. The program of standards ("My One and Only Love," "Autumn Leaves", "Them There Eyes") receives a happy, swinging treatment, but nothing particularly stands out. The rhythm duo of Danish monster Niels Henning Orsed — Pedersen on bass and expatriate bebopper Kenny Clarke on drums suggest some excitement but are kept too subdued to offer much.

Buck Clayton and Buddy Tate, members of the historic 1939 Count Basie band as trumpeter and tenor saxophonist respectively, play "loosely tight" as well, in the Kansas City tradition they helped establish. These 1960 sides are mostly bluesy originals along with a few well-chosen standards. Buck waxes lyrical (the Count always liked quiet brass) and Buddy is authoritatively sly on these medium-tempoed blowing tunes. Sir Charles Thompson is superb on piano in this context and drummer Gus Johnson is crisp and definite. I would have preferred something uptempo and jumpy in place of a blues, some of which are too repetitive. Everyone solos well off the catchy head of "Blue Breeze". Makes you wish you had heard them in K.C. trading choruses with Lester Young. Hell, any friend of Lester Young is a friend of mine.

In Concert:
John Hartford
Chapin Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke
25 October

Some sing about love. A few years ago it was the "in" thing to sing about the evils of war and poverty. No doubt in the future there will be songs dealing with the problems of the environment and parodies about the Watergate Capers.John Hartford doesn't deal with these issues. For the most part, his twangy voice sings to the issues of riverboats, warped records, and washing machines. If his topics seem simple, his style is superb. A versatile musician best known for his skills on the five-string banjo, Hartford also plays the guitar and fiddle adequately.

At Mount Holyoke last Friday, Hartford gave a satisfying although not totally inspiring performance. Although he received national attention a few years back as the author of some of Glen Campbell's top hits, the only "top forty" song that Hartford took the time to play was "Gentle On My Mind".

As he sang, his style seemed reminiscent of a young Pete Seeger: Besides for his voice and his musical talents, Hartford is adept at exploiting every nook and crany of his mouth to get the sound that he wants. This can take the form of intense cheek playing to imitate drums, or mouth swishing, to represent an "old washing machine". Many of his lyrics sound somewhat corney ("Turn your radio on...an listen to the glory of god") but when John Hartford sang them, they just seemed homey. Hartford is at his best, when he is playing his banjo, and it was somewhat disappointing that he didn't play it more.

After a few numbers on the five string, singing about steamboats and life in the country, Hartford switched to the guitar, and then the fiddle. I found myself saying to myself, "Just one more banjo tune, o.k.?". Between talking about god, melted records, the idiocy of commercial t.v. and life on the river, Hartford gave a most satisfactory performance.

Walk tall (or baby don't walk at all)

by Mike T. Kostek

An evening with:
Bruce Springsteen &
The E. Street Band
Sanderson Theater, Springfield
26 October

This isn't going to be easy. You'd better sit down and take a deep breath to get ready. (Pause).

0k? Now stand up and let it shoot through you...

It hasn't been easy for rock fans of the 1960's. They've been quite lonely and dependant on the same aging heroes to deliver the new thrills of these hellish times, and the old guys are getting worn. Nobody new is on fire. They go to concerts, and it's not the same. It's $6.50 jive. Nobody's moving it along outside of the Magma-Henry Cow-Hatfield & The North crew, and, on the whole, we're not quite ready for them yet.

Has is all Been Done? Women & men, it is my great delirium and relief to let you know It Hasn't.

Bruce Springsteen can do it. His is the power of the Street, or 'Jungleland' as he sees it — that awesome, scary, monsterous, beautiful, yawning power of the Street, merely hinted at even in such fine rock incarnations as Van Morrison's "Wild Night", Alice Cooper's "Gutter Cat" and Bob Dylan's "Three Angels". Springsteen's gift is in his knowledge and ability to divert that raw power into music. If he wants to invoke the Spirit In The Night, he's one of the precious few who knows how to make it come alive. The street is not one riff followed by a tough bridge. It is a little purple, maybe, with a sad fight song, some dusky wine, a gayness born of utter frustration, and all the various combinations of emotions spent by humans out there — this all requires a myriad of musical depths and twists and turns, as well as lyrics that will work for street punk as well as college egghead. The Velvet Underground did a good job in telling us of the sordid side of this life, but Springsteen is able to show the entire range of Spanish Johnny and Crazy Janie and their fantastic Saturday nights in a way that makes Elton's contrived "Saturday Night's Alright For Fighting" look like a Las Vegas casino case in its emptiness.

This power is awesome, and his show last Saturday night at the Sanderson exceeded the mighty force and scope of his records. You watch the utter intensity that grips Bruce as he breathes new variety into the words and music (life keeps changing), you watch one of the finest bands around — the E Street Band — back him up brilliantly. The E Streeters can sound like the shreeeeeech of a subway train, a ripping piece of sheet metal and a lover's whisper in the space of thirty seconds. They play wild music, as wild as the New York City they are lovingly serenading. You watch all this and it takes your breath away.

The half-full (1000-1200) house saw Bruce play three new songs: "Jungleland", "Your Love Is So Fine", and "She's The One", all of which are excellent.

Of the nine others he did in the two hours, all from his two albums, he didn't even do the three main whippers from his first album — "Growin' Up", "Lost In The Flood" and "Blinded By The Light", and still got the unusually intelligent and mature Springfield crowd besides themselves with delight. They stood up and let it shoot through them.

Those of you who caught him on one of his two shows at UMass were early witnesses to a legend (Like indeed, seeing Dylan in the early '60's), but you caught only part of the power he packed on Saturday. He is now much more animated and in real command of his band. He is a street punk, a lover, a greaser, a fighter, a headliner, a poetic seer into all of their worlds. He can punch with the Brando manicism of the WHO, croon with the primal urgency of Van Morrison, spotlight the junk in life with the gut hate of Lou Reed, smash his hands together in punch-claps akin the spectacular quick flash of Roman Polanski's Man With Knife in Chinatown and howl at the whole life mess with the stinging presence of a Dylan. His music is rock and jazz and ragtime and 40's movie soundtracks and blues and everything it needs to be...using all the music he's ever heard in his music;he's painting in oils, and makes most others look like they're using charcoal when they play just blues or just folk — life's not like that.

It took awhile, and we had to scowl through the whole N.Y. Dolls-T. Rex cheap glitter gimmickry as well as the other cruelly mindless Deep Purple — John Denver tastelessness, but we made it, and we have another Future. Walk tall, or baby don't walk at all.

Whew! bespeak of exploding a moustache!

WHERE HAVE I KNOWN YOU BEFORE? RETURN TO FOREVER FEATURING CHICK COREA
(Polydor PD 6509)

I swear he's getting as ridiculously prolific as Zappa, who is almost as bad as Elton John. I mean, this is like Corea's fourth album in a year and a half! Compare his three-album-a-year output with that of Joni Mitchell or Stevie Wonder (more like one-a-year). And the increase in proliferation is starting to affect the music, too. After all, how can he find the time to do so much? The answer is he can't, but bassist Stanley Clarke and drummer Lenny White can, and do, on the band's latest, Where Have I Known You Before? on Polydor. The result is a simpler, grittier, and funkier Return to Forever, which I can't say I like as well as Corea's intricate melodies and dynamic diversity, but which is nevertheless tremendous music.

The basic format of the band seems to consist of the black rhythm section contributing the funk, while the white guitarist and keyboardist lay on the melodies and harmonies, a common and extremely euphonious formula. But although it works quite well on Where Have I Known You Before? it has worked better for Corea before, so perhaps this one oughtn't to be your first Corea album. Not that it makes any difference of course — if you get one, you've got to get them all, unless you're a fool. Which is entirely possible, and in fact likely, considering the thimble-brained reviews you read in Below the Salt.

—Michael Peppe

Do you know who Chick Corea is and what he's done? If not, then you'll probably think this album is great. If you are familiar with Corea, you'll find the album boring or at least disappointing. Really.

With every album, Corea's music seems to become more and more aligned with rock and a rock audience. Also he continues his preoccupation with galaxies, motherships and eternity. Hmmm.

Admittedly, however, there are a few moments of excellence to be found on this latest release. But alas, moments are only moments.

The presence of Bill Connors on guitar is sorely missed. He is replaced by Al DiMeola, who insists on perversions and transmutations of the melodic subtleties of the guitar by his heavy reliance of fuzztone. But it's just as well because his distorted ramblings are not interesting enough so that we'd really want to hear them clearly and cleanly.

TARZANA KID— JOHN SEBASTIAN
(Reprise)

This man has made music that hit my head, hands and feet since I heard "Do You Believe in Magic" on Bruce Bradley's show on WBZ. Tarzana Kid proves that the magic is still there. Opening with a Jimmy Cliff tune, "Sitting Here in Limbo", Sebastian sets an intimate, optimistic tone that holds throughout the entire album. The production is so clear on all the songs you can tune in on any of the fine sidepeople, who are indeed worth a listen.

Little Feat's Lowell George helps out on another fine version of his "Dixie Chicken." The Pointer Sisters add a bouncy backing on "Friends Again". Amos Garrett does another tasteful job of backing, as he did on Maria Muldaur's album. But no one tries to take anything from Sebastian, rather they all seem to have picked up his energy and gotten very high on it. This is what should be, because John still can do magic, like the Lovin' Spoonful, as he did alone at Woodstock. And damn if it doesn't feel good all over to get hit with it again. When was the last time an album made you feel that way? This one will.

APPRENTICE (IN A MUSICAL WORKSHOP) — DAVE LOGGINS
(Epic KE 32833)

Dave Loggins, who probably plays second fiddle to his more famous brother of Loggins & Messina, has written himself a classic in the field of country and western music. But, before you say "Who cares about C & W music", read on.

Apprentice is a classic because Loggins has taken the traditional slap-knee and beer-crying country and western form (which many people find too repetitious) and given it dimensions of sincerity and timelessness. His popular hit "Please Come To Boston", along with "My Father's Fiddle" are as country as Loggins gets. "Someday", "My Lover's Keeper", and "Sunset Woman" are just outstanding efforts.

Loggins is nicely backed by a collection of Nashville's knowns and unknowns. The Nashville Edition, Holiday Sisters, Brenda Gordon, Pat Coulter, and Brooks Hunnicutt do the backup vocals. If you can identify more than three of those artists, you have earned a place along with Charlie Rich and Linda Hargrove on my C & W top dog list.

Apprentice is extremely well engineered. It only makes sense. It seems that Mr. Loggins has spared no expense or effort in making Apprentice (In A Musical Workshop). Oh yes, the lyrics are included on the record jacket which you will want to have. One of the best albums I have ever heard. A real treat.

GUITAR PLAYER — TAL FARLOW (Prestige P-24042)

What can you say about a legend? Unfortunately, Farlow fans, there's not really much more to add, because the music contained in Guitar Player has already received the rave reviews it deserves so much. And that is because this is a specially priced two-record set (a steal!) which is a re-release of two previous Farlow LPs: Red Norvo With Strings (1955) and The Return of Tal Farlow (1969).

The 1955 material sees Farlow on guitar, Norvo on vibes and Red Mitchell on bass — a trio that can swing without a drummer. The interplay is absolutely gorgeous. The 1969 material has, in addition to Talmadge Farlow, John Scully on piano, Jack Six on bass and Alan Dawson on drums. But when you put both these records together, you get a set that few words can describe. Except words like superb, breath-taking, astounding, impeccable, beautiful, brilliance and mastery.

For what it's worth, rock guitarists like Alvin Lee, Steve Howe and John McLaughlin attribute much of their interests in the guitar to Tal Farlow recordings, and jazz guitarists like Wes Montgomery and Howard Roberts have had nothing but good things to say about Tal.

Farlow's incredible imagination combined with an extremely agile technique has led some critics to call him "the Art Tatum of the guitar". Some of the things Farlow does in this collection are so ridiculously fast yet so formidably complicated that he'll leave any listener's ears dripping with perspiration from trying to keep up with him, and he'll make guitarists drool with envy.

I'd like to comment on just one of the seventeen songs in this set, a tune called "My Romance". It's no exaggeration to say that this recording will eventually be listed among the jazz guitar classics. It opens with an ad-lib chordal solo, then as Scully takes the melody, Tal chords, with his left hand while simultaneously holding a note with his right index fnger. He then takes the melody, improvising alternatively between single notes and chords, and then he improvises an harmonic solo, producing a double octave effect that defies comprehension since it is done with such speed and obvious ease (for Tal).

THE AFRICA BRASS SESSIONS, VOL. 2 — JOHN COLTRANE (Impulse AS-9273 time 33:27

This is quite a "re-examination of the classic 1961 orchestral date, arranged and conducted by Eric Dolphy" (says here on cover). The personel is staggering, being a real jazz orchestra featuring Booker Little, trumpet; Britt Woodman, trombone; Carl Bowman, euphonium; Bill Barber, tuba; Eric Dolphy and Pat Patrick, reeds; McCoy Tyner, piano; (UMass' own) Reggie Workman, Art Davis, Jimmy Garrison on bass; and Elvin Jones, drums.

It is quite compelling to hear Coltrane blowing in front of the aforementioned orchestra with Dolphy arranging and batoning. The roots are in 'known' big band style, but 'Trane' certainly helps them move away from that station.

"Song Of The Underground Railroad" has never been 'examined' — released before, and is a real swift swinger led by John's fluid, fluid sax which really gives the band something to follow.

"Greensleeves" is an alternate take from the 1961 recording date. Built much like the live at Newport "My Favorite Things" done around that same time, it runs a fairly straight path with sweeter than sweet — so hard to beat playing by Coltrane, some of his runs bordering on the lightning. A quite intelligent, quite reasoned, yet a quite twisted sentimentally reading of this classic.

"Africa" is all of side two, and is a ramblesome piece tied to a two-note theme base. Nice ensemble blending and shading by Dolphy. The solos are low-key, with spectacular bass stretching, and of course, a splatter-shot Elvin Jones drum spot. The whole affair never coagulates into a squalid heap the way you might think (it is an out-take), but still carries a decent stream all along its path.

Brass Sessions, Vol. 2 is not one of John's more powerful albums, but the very context it's set in makes it a prize.

A 'not one of the big blands' B.

WEEKENDS IN FILM

compiled by Paul Kontrimas

AIRPORT '75. No better, no worse than Airport '72. Starts this weekend at the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

BLAZING SADDLES Mel Brooks produced and directed this out to lunch, slapstick comedy. Has some really outstanding comic scenes that will make you giggle when brought to mind. Picture this, for example — a group of dusty cowboys sitting around the evening campfire, eating beans and performing a musical symphony utilizing the aural by-products of their meal. Zany, and worth seeing. At the Academy of Music ++++

DEATH WISH People are raving about this new Charles Bronson movie for some reason, and a viewing should explain why. It deals with a wealthy architect who takes the law into his own hands and calmly shoots muggers off the streets after his own wife and daughter are assaulted. The question is: how do you stop the growing crime rate in a big city, through the police, or through personal protection? The film favors Bronson's actions, and usually the audience follows suit. The idea is cute, but the portrayals of the muggers are too stereotyped and West Side Storyish. Still, the acting shines and the New York City photography provides a spellbinding background for the shenanigans. Michael Winner directs his first winner. At the Campus Cinema +++

DECAMERON. Pier Paolo Pasolini's fabulous rendering of Boccaccio's Decameron. A rollicking and zestful look at the realities of medieval Italian life which encompasses the spicy, the seamy and the noble. One of Pasolini's highest acclaimed directorial efforts, it has won the approval of film-goers the world over. To be shown at the C.C.A. Sunday, Nov. 3 at 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. ++++

DRACULA. Have no information as to the version being shown. Look for announcements wherever on-campus posters are tacked up, for further information. Thursday, 7 and 9 at the SUB.

EVERYTHING YOU WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK. Double feature with Sleeper at MF 4. An uproarious, hilarious spoof on the book which was the educational alternative to the bathroom wall. Consists of seven skits — four of which are riotous and three of which are downright sickening. Woody plays the role of a court jester attempting to penetrate a royal chastity belt with a male sperm, and various other perverts. At the Mt. Farms +++

FLESH GORDON. At the Campus Cinema ++

GODSPELL. The story of Godspell was captured both in body and spirit when it first appeared in theatre form, that is on the stage. When the original cast was dissolved, when the theme slipped through other casts, and finally ended up in a film form, the original reason for this story telling was lost. At the Mt. Farms, with Let The Good Times Roll. +

KING OF HEARTS. Quite a nice, little film here. Asks the question "who is sane?" The inhabitants of an insane asylum take over a bomb-riddled town when WWII fighter planes scare off their attendants. The result is interesting, and at times, rather inciteful. Sub Titles. At SUB, 7, 9 and 11, Fri. ++++

LET THE GOOD TIMES ROLL. Another one of the seemingly endless stream of rock n' roll music documentaries. This one features a neat photographic gimmick a la Woodstock, where a split screen shows our fifties idols as they were, complete with greasy hair and narrow lapels, and cuts to more recent footage of their performances. See Chuck Berry, Chubby Checker, and more. At the Farm Mountains, doubled up with GODSPELL. ++

LITTLE BIG MAN. Noted for tremendous performance by Dustin Hoffman portraying General Custer up until the time he last stood up. Not a new film, first released in 1970, but worth a look. At Campus Cinema +++

THE LONGEST YARD. A fleeting macho action flick where Burt Reynolds shows his cell block how much fun it is to be in prison. Eddie Albert acts as warden, for all you Eddie Albert fans. Robert Aldrich directed. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

MIDNIGHT COWBOY. Dumb cowboy ties up with Rico Rizzo (Dustin Hoffman). Dumb Cowboy doesn't make it as male prostitute. Both take off for a condominium in Ft. Lauderdale. At Grauman's Chinese of Amherst (Mahar), Friday at 7, 9:30. +++

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY. At the Mt. Farms.

SLEEPER. Now playing at MF 4. Woody Allen wakes up from a long sleep in suspended animation capsule and finds himself in a futuristic world dominated by the stainless steel and formica. Woody has difficulty fitting into this sterile society and infects it with disrespectful antics, knee slapping chase scenes and characteristic Woody Allen disorder. (At the Mt. Farms). +++

Tenants now face certain loss of security deposits

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

Residents of the Brittany Manor and Mt. Sugarloaf apartments received more bad news about the company which owns the complexes yesterday.

Tenants who placed security deposits before Sept. 23 of this year will almost certainly not get their money back because the firm, Tri-Colonial Realty of Brookline, declared bankruptcy on that date, according to a newly appointed manager of the complexes.

William Ryan, appointed by an official handling federal bankruptcy proceedings for Tri-Colonial, told the Daily Hampshire Gazette yesterday tenants who paid security deposits before Sept. 23 have lost their money.

Ryan said that such tenants should now refuse to pay their October rent in order to gain back their security deposit.

However, U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity, the judge handling bankruptcy proceedings in Boston, said in September that to withhold rents would subject tenants to eviction.

Garrity said tenants should not withhold rent because to do so would deny creditors of Tri-Colonial the right to be paid for the debts owed them.

According to Garrity's in-court statements, if tenants at 7,000 properties owned by the three firms which declared bankruptcy do not pay rent, it will be impossible to reorganize the firm out of bankruptcy.

Tri-Colonial is one of three firms which have been managed by Hancock Management Inc. of Brookline. The firms own apartments all over Boston and into Connecticut.

Tenants at the two apartment complexes in Amherst have been frustrated because the court-appointed trustee for Tri-Colonial, Attorny David Mazzone of Wakefield, has yet to contact owners or tenants about what their obligations are in the complex business failure.

Bromery opposes rejection of UMass law school by Sarge

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday called Governor Sargent's rejection of the proposed state-operated law school at UMass a "mistake."

Bromery made the statement at the first of what will be twice-monthly press conferences.

"When you go to Springfield or Boston they'll say there's not enough lawyers. The law school is only part of the law center. People are going to need paralegal training and counselling because now you need a lawyer tor everything."

"We should've had a public law school before a public medical school." added Bromery.

Bromery also spoke about the enrollment freeze and student unionization.

He said the "enrollment freeze gives us time to catch up with taking a look at our growth, and to provide services students don't get, such as counselling and advising services."

He said there is excellent support for staffing for the faculty but the problem is the "support staff hasn't caught up".

Speaking of increased applications, he said one reason is economic, (students coming to school because of the poor job market) and partly because UMass has been gaining a reputation for good programs.

"We're looking for more non-traditional students, too" said Bromery. We'll still look at high SAT scores — but also at a number of other things to try to achieve equity."

"A few years ago if we just looked at high SAT scores 90 per cent of the freshman class would have been women."

When asked about student unionization Bromery said "I don't know what a student union is, no one has defined it yet."

I do not see it operating under labor management laws. If the students feel a union can deliver what they want then I'd say go ahead and have a union."

SOP hearings features Bromery, Gage, others

By LAWRENCE KORNFIELD
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph Bromery, Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage, and Ken Dean, director of Residential Life, among others will be appearing at campus-wide hearings on student housing next week sponsored by the Student Organizing Project.

Student Organizer John Pepi described the hearings as serving three main purposes:

1) ".....an educational function so the student population can find out what's going on and what the real problems in housing and food services are.

2) "To gather information necessary to win a lawsuit challenging the mandatory dorm residency requirement.

3) "To develop plans and techniques by which students can gain control over their living environment."

Testimony from students, administrators, and outside experts will be provided at the hearings. The S.O.P. is inviting any students who want to air their grievances or opinions to participate.

The hearings will be held on five consecutive nights with each hearing focusing on an issue in student housing. They are scheduled as follows:

Monday — "Environmental Psychology" in Baker House

Tuesday — "Governance of Residential Life", Hamlin House

Wednesday — "Legality of Mandatory Dorm Residential Life" in Hampden Student Center

Thursday — "Financial Structure of the System" in Grayson House

Friday — "Off-Campus Housing Problems" in the Commuter Lounge

All hearings will be from 7 to 9 p.m.

Bromery is scheduled to testify at the hearings on Monday. Gage and Dean will speak at the hearing on governance.

State Representative Jim Collins will speak on the legislature's role in the financing of the university system Thursday.

"It's becoming more and more clear that this present system of D.C.'s and housing is on the way out," said Pepi, "In order to insure that the alternative is a satisfying one, students must be involved in it's creation."

WMUA will broadcast live the Wednesday hearing on legality.

Task force investigates rights

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

A Privacy Task Force has been set up at UMass to investigate precedents and to implement the procedures for carrying out the "Protection of the Rights and Privacy" Amendment.

This law, recommended by Senator James Buckley of New York, was passed on May 9, and will be effective No. 19.

Under this federal law, college students will have the right to inspect the confidential records their schools keep on them, such as admissions and job recommendations, psychological and medical records, and maybe even their parents confidential statements.

Besides gaining admittance to their records within 45 days of their request, the Buckley Amendment allows the student to change or delete records if inaccurate, misleading or if inappropriate.

The school has to obtain written permission of the student before submitting information from the student's records to an organization and it must keep a record of what agencies it submits information to.

In an interview with Michael West, assistant Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs described the purpose of the Privacy Task Force which was instituted by Robert W. Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

He said the Task Force will determine what is a "public" and "private" records, where these records should be kept and who has access to them. West said the Force will develop the policies for carrying out the Buckley Ammendment and will sponsor in-service training programs for education staff, students, and faculty about the adopted policies.

The task force will consist of a few members from each record department in the university, said West. Because there will be about 30 people on the committee, too many to meet, a steering committee has been designated, he said.

Committee Representatives are Jane Chalmers. Health Services, Robert White, Student Development Center, Robert Brooks, Admissions, Records and Financial Aide, Robert Swasey, Graduate School, Marsha Capina, Continuing Education, Robert Garstka, Personal Office, Katherine Emerson, Archives, and Bard White, Computer Group.

West has asked the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates to appoint members to the task force but has not received any notice yet. He suggests the Senates select people who already deal with records such as the Health Advisory Group.

Three rapid-fire thefts linked to same pair of armed bandits

Three rapid-fire robberies in Northampton, Hadley and then Amherst are blamed on the same pair of men.

Police report that one armed man entered three businesses last evening while a second man waited at the wheel of a late-model Ford.

At about 6:25 p.m. a robber wearing a dark stocking mask help up the Northampton Music Center at 22 Craft St.

Ten minutes later men with the same general description robbed the Gasland service station on Russell St. (Rt. 9) in Hadley.

At 7 p.m. apparently the same men stopped at the Zayre shopping plaza at the Hadley-Amherst townline.

The D'Addario's card store at the plaza was robbed of about $170. For the third time a man described as of slender build held a small handgun on a store clerk.

Police from the three communities where robberies occurred were joined by state police and UMass police, which caused a short traffic tie-up, but produced no suspects.

The parking and transportation plan instituted one and one half years ago by the administration may have failed to reach its prime objective — reducing the number of cars on campus.

And a decision by the parking office last semester to change its mailing policy may have resulted in thousands of undergraduates being cheated of the opportunity to register to park their cars on an equal basis with others on campus.

Read a two part series — "The Parking System: A One-Year Retrospective" beginning Monday in the Collegian.

Innovative program recruits

By PAUL BRADLEY
Staff Reporter

A new program under the School of Education, scheduled to begin this spring, will seek to train students in non-traditional means of education.

The Human Services Program, under the direction of Dr. Donald White, will deal with education as an ongoing process that does not stop in the classroom, and try to look at human services as a legitimate means of education.

White defined human services as "all those programs where society provides for the personal well being of the individual," and cited such examples as mental health services, correctional institutions, and the welfare system.

"We are looking for students who are interested in education but not necessarily in a traditional sense," said White. "We want to train people to teach in other areas besides the classroom."

White added that this might include such areas as counseling of parolees or helping welfare recipients to manage a family budget.

Currently in the developmental stage, the program will go into operation this spring and be expanded upon the following fall.

White said the program was created because of a real need for such a program. "There is a societal need, and students are interested in this as well. This is an opportunity to meet these needs and interests."

White also pointed to the hard economic fact that classroom teachers are simply not in demand right now.

The program will consist of internships will be no problem since other programs in the school of Education are already in contact with human service operations throughout the state.

Most of the internships will be on a part time basis, working closely with classroom training.

White said he wanted students "to be aware of the political and social realities of human services before they go out in the field."

He also said he wanted close supervision of students and full time internships would not be conducive to this. White did leave open the possibility of full time internships dependant upon the capabilities and needs of individual students.

White said students from all majors are welcome, but said preference would be given to education majors. Students have the option of trying out the program, giving them the opportunity to make a decision for a career.

The program will initially be limited to 30 students, with about 50 being accepted into the program in the fall of 1975. Interested students should contact White at 465 Hills South or at 5-2048.

Lecture inaugurates Chancellor's series

By BRENDA CIAK
Staff Reporter

"Quality is a matter of taste," said Dr. Marshall Harvey Stone, UMass professor of mathematics, while delivering the inaugural talk of the Chancellor's Lecture Series Wednesday night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Stone noted in his speech on "Quality and Change in Education" that quality may be measured by creating a picture of an ideal and then asking if one can somehow improve universities by making changes.

"We are too much preoccupied by the question of government and justice; in the long run universities function well if teachers and students have an appropriate atmosphere to communicate with each other," he said.

Stone realized a need for more people getting educated in order to solve problems and look ahead to solving future ones.

"Part of life is struggle, struggle to do things better. Problems are a challenge to intellectual endeavor and attempting to solve them makes suffering worthwhile. If there is no equilibrium within the human race, then we will be faced with problems."

According to Stone there are two important changes in this country's post high school education: an increase in the number of students and in the amount of knowlege trying to be taught and put into application.

He proposed that universities should not try to be all things to all who desire higher education. Instead, admission standards should be raised thus limiting entrance only to those who can absorb higher knowledge. Finally, he urged university specialization where only certain fields will be promoted.

Charges aired against the BMCP membership

The Steering Committee of New Africa House last night chaired a community meeting which involved the discusssion of problems and complaints charged from members of the Third World community, against the membership of (BMCP).

Allen Gordon, Steering Committee chairman, led the discussion by opening the meeting up for debate among the various individuals that were charging complaints. It was expressed that there were reasons to believe, that the present officers that were elected recently were in question. Other persons charged that the (BMCP) organization was run and dictated by non students.

Barry Williams, high ranking member of (BMCP), and newly elected Black Affairs Director of WMUA Radio Station gave a historical summary of the organization, its past and present activities. Sherwood Thompson, Black Affairs Editor of the Daily Collegian newspaper, also familiar with the organization reminded the groups present that, "the (BMCP) project was the result of hard planning and serious work." He continued, "only by us carrying on this spirit of work, will we be able to come together and iron out differences."

The Steering Committee members all related to the group, that it had a responsibility to the community. Allen Gordon then called for the membership of the (BMCP) project "to put aside your petty contradictions and to work collectively with each other in order to bring about positive results and effective community service in broadcast media."

Complete texts of the resolutions and proposals that were presented will appear in Monday's paper.

Five college residential exchange gaining support

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Five College Residential Exchange is gaining support from both administrators and students.

Approximately 30 students from each of the Five Colleges have attended special introductory Residential Exchange meetings expressing an interest in the exchange.

The program will allow students in the Five College area to live at another school in the valley while remaining registered at their home institution.

At the Wednesday night meeting Jerry Treshinsky, secretary of the Five College Student Coordinating Board (FCSCB) who is sponsoring the program, said "the biggest problem boils down to the number of beds available."

Merrill Ewing, treasurer of Mt. Holyoke College, shared Treshinsky's view saying "if the beds are filled there should be no financial problems."

Results of last month's Five College poll shows that 95 percent of the students in Mt. Holyoke, Smith and UMass and 90 percent from Amherst College thought the exchange should be made available to the students in the valley.

The results from Hampshire College have not yet been compiled.

The poll also shows that more students from the private colleges are interested in participating in the exchange than from the University.

Seventy percent from Amherst, 68 percent from Mt. Holyoke, 81 percent from Smith are interested in participating opposed to 56 percent from UMass.

These results answer some questions raised at the meeting as to whether students from private colleges would want to come to UMass.

North Burn, five college coordinator, said "there are more private school students at UMass than UMass students going to private schools."

Burn attributed this to a "bigger wealth of course offerings" available at UMass.

The first exchange, hopefully for next semester, will be on a small scale — about 12 people, said Brenda Goodman, Chairman of the Residential Exchange Committee. She said the Deans of Students of the Five Colleges are worried about trying this in large numbers.

Kurt Hertzfeld, treasurer of Amherst College said in an interview, that this couldn't involve large numbers but "all problems could be worked out."

The financial argangement, as planned by the board is to have the exchange student pay the tuition and fees of their home institution.

All three of the Five College treasurers contacted by the Collegian expressed support for the program and indicated there should be no financial difficulties, if instituted according to the FCSCB's plan.

Dr. Warren Gulko, Director of Budgeting and Institutional Studies, said he would "hate to see financial considerations getting in the way of the exchange.

Residential Exchange is valuable socially, culturally and educationally, and would increase five college cooperation. He said if students would support it he was "all for it."

Merrill Ewing said "as long as students were willing to pay their own institution there should be no financial problem."

Once the idea gets accepted, Treshinsky said "we think they'll put the Five College exchange on an equal footing with the twelve college exchange."

$ problems plague Hampshire

By BIFF PRICE
Hampshire Climax Correspondent

The Hampshire Climax reported that tight funds threaten the theatre of the proposed Humanities & Arts Center. Hampshire's Humanities and Arts (H&A) students have long looked toward the Center as an end to crowded facilities.

Due to the present economic conditions, the College is now seeking to eliminate the theatre space from the building plans to speed its construction. Costs have risen from under $30 million to just over $39 million. The Center's architects Arrowstreet, Inc. have estimated the cost of the building per square foot will rise by nearly $4 to a high of $62 per square foot by 1975.

Until the success of a fund-raising drive by the College's Development Office can be assertained, none of Hampshire's chief officers have proposed a schedule for the Humanities and Arts Center's construction.

Theatre students now use Emily Dickinson Hall's Performing Arts Center for their productions. Assistant professor of theatre arts, Liam O'Brien told Climax, "The PAC is adequate....but we are having technical problems. The acoustics are terrible, the roof leaks, the soundproofing is poor, and the floor is buckling."

After the center's completion, the College doesn't expect to have any additions to its 550-acre campus for quite a while. If the H&A theatre is not constructed with the rest of the building, it might be years before students see a production on a professionally designed and properly built stage.

Two new governance proposals - one from Hampshire Natural Science professor Lynn Miller and one from students John Finck and John Thurber - were presented to Hampshire's three councils last week. On Friday, both proposals were sent, along with the original proposal of the Governance Review Committee, on to the Constitutional Reform Committee by College Council.

At Friday's College Council, one member observed that governance plans are moving away from the wide participation, that grew out of the mood on many a college campus in the late sixties to more streamlined models designed to work with a minimum of work. Student trustee Tina Klein noted for Climax, "Under the proposals now the only real difference is to make governance more efficient for those who participate, rather than changing the power structure." She added, "Under the circumstances, maybe there is not much more that one can do."

The orginal Governance Committee proposal, the school would have three governing sectors, Academic, Business and Community. Each sector would elect their own Deans. This proposal has received much criticism from the Administration for not including the President in the selection process for the Deans.

Lynn Miller's plan called for an elected council of 15 to become the only powerful policy making force on campus. Advisory panels would then work with Administrative heads. The Finck-Thurber proposal has the 'policy council' directing management.

The Miller plan seems the most popular, certainly the most talked about at all three of the council meetings last week. That was in deep contrast to the problems Academic and Community Councils had with the Governance Review Committee's proposals.

Foundation supports guest at Mount Holyoke College

Frank E. Taplin, American businessman, civic and cultural leader, will be the guest of Mount Holyoke College during the week of October 27 under the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation Program, of which Mount Holyoke is a participating member.

Mr. Taplin is director and principal stockholder of the North American Coal Corporation, former chairman of the board of Scurry-Rainbow Oil, Ltd., and former director of the White Motor Company and the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railway Company. A PHi Beta Kappa graduate, he earned his B.A. at Princeton University, his M.A. in Jurisprudence at Oxford University where he was a Rhodes Scholar, and his LL.B. at Yale Law School.

In order to take full advantage of Frank Taplin's expertise in a variety of important fields, Mount Holyoke has planned an extensive program. Mr. Taplin will meet with students in classrooms, residence halls, and will hold various seminars and panel discussions.

The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation Program is made possible be a grant from the Lily Endowment in Indianapolis in an effort to place representatives of business, industry and the professions on college campuses as visiting professors. Last year, Martha and Robert Walters, journalists for the Washington Star-News, and LaDonna Harris and Senator Fred Harris, minority ad women's rights activist, were on the Mount Holyoke campus under the program.

Residential exchange scheduled for spring

By HUGH OWEN
Reporter

The Residential Exchange program may operate this spring semester on a small scale, according to Five College Student Coordinating Board vice-chairman Brenda Goodman.

The five college board met Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. in Rm 917 of the Campus Center.

Goodman said she knows of thirty students from each college in the five college area who are interested in the program, but added that these requests are non-committal. The Deans of the colleges are willing to attempt only an exchange of twelve students this year because "all things are not hammered out yet," Goodman said.

"The matter of residential exchange is out of my hands now. It is in the hands of the Deans now," continued Goodman.

Goodman said there is a long wait involved regarding action by the Deans because "there is no time in the next two months that all the Deans can make a meeting together."

Open enrollment will be offered for the first time this year in the Interterm program, according to board member Kim Coleman. This means that no preference will be given to students when choosing courses at their home institution. All students will have an equal chance at getting enrolled in courses.

The program is open to all students in the five colleges. Students are able to stay at their own college during the intersession at no extra cost, Coleman said.

The time that the programs will be offered at the colleges will vary, according to Coleman. She also said she did not think UMass was planning to offer an Interterm program this year.

Course catalogues for the Mount Holyoke and Hampshire College programs will be available next week.

Bob Soule, transportation chairman, brought up the question of asking the college Presidents to appeal to students not to use their cars in the valley. He said that perhaps there was some way in which students would be allowed to have cars at their own college, but not be allowed to use them to commute to other schools.

The board agreed that it would be a good move to reduce car traffic between the five colleges, but that no action could be taken until there was a better transportation system to replace car travel.

Magruder says Mitchell approved burglary

WASHINGTON [AP] — Jeb Stuart Magruder testified yesterday that although John N. Mitchell gave his unenthusiastic approval for the Watergate burglary he asked a week later why so much money was required by the man who was planning it.

Testifying at the Watergate cover-up trial for the third day, Magruder said he got a telephone call from the former attorney general in the first week of April 1972 asking why G. Gordon Liddy needed "this much money."

Magruder said that he went to Mitchell's office and reviewed for him the $250,000 proposal that he said Mitchell approved on March 30 and explained that what Liddy was asking "was in effect front money" to purchase equipment and hire men.

"Mr. Mitchell understood," Magruder said, and later authorized Hugh Sloan, the treasurer of Richard M. Nixon's re-election committee, to give Liddy what he asked.

Magruder had testified earlier that the approval for the Liddy plan was given at a meeting in Key Biscayne, Fla., on March 30.

There has been previous testimony in other forums that Liddy originally asked for $82,000.

Mitchell is charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice, along with H. R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman, Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson.

Magruder is serving a 10-month to four-year prison sentence on his plea of guilty to obstructing justice in the case.

As he testified, the courtroom was rife with reports that Ehrlichman's lawyers would ask for a delay in the trial, a move to California, or a mistrial in case Nixon is unable to testify.

The former president has been subpoenaed by Ehrlichman, and his current critical illness has cast doubts on whether he will recover in time to appear when it is the defense's turn some five to six weeks from now.

"It would be our position that if Mr. Nixon could not appear, Mr. Ehrlichman would not be able to get a fair trial," said a source close to the defense.

Nixon still critical although spirits high

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon is now in stable condition and excellent spirits but he is still on the critical list and there may be a slow leakage of blood in his abdomen, doctors reported yesterday.

The 61-year-old Nixon has been given an additional unit of packed red blood cells in addition to the three pints previously administered.

"The possibility still exists for further complications," said the morning medical bulletin. "He remains under intensive observation by physicians and critical care nurses. It is still premature to offer a prognosis at this time."

The bulletin was issued by Dr. John Lungren, Nixon's personal physician, and Dr. Eldon B. Hickman, who headed the surgical team that operated on the former president Tuesday morning and inserted a plastic clip to prevent blood clots from moving from his phlebitis-infected thigh into his heart and lungs.

"His spirits, his mental attitude are excellent," the doctors said.

The only negative aspect of the latest bulletin was the reference to "a slight drop in the hemoglobin count of one half gram since last night."

Ford eyes beef import ceiling to help troubled agriculture

Compiled from Wires

SIOUX CITY, Iowa — Carrying his political rescue mission for Republican candidates to the farm belt and West Coast, President Ford promised livestock producers yesterday he would clamp a ceiling on beef imports if foreign suppliers threaten to overwhelm the U.S. market.

The President said he was aware that agriculture "is beset by very difficult and challenging problems," and that some "have been aggravated by unwise government actions."

Actually, "farmers are more likely the victims of inflation than its cause," Ford said. "By their efficiency and ever increasing productivity, they are the front line shock troops who are staving off what might be an even more serious round of inflation were it not for their efforts."

At an airport campaign rally for Rep. Wiley Mayne, R-Iowa, Ford announced three policy decisions "which I believe will relieve some of the anxiety in the industry and restore confidence among producers so that the industry can again become profitable."

They were:

—A promise to impose meat import quotas or negotiate voluntary export restraint agreements with foreign suppliers if meat imports threaten to exceed a certain level.

—A pledge not to change the present system of dairy import quotas without thoroughly reviewing market conditions and listening to dairy producers.

—Notice that the administration "is not going to permit foreign dairy producers to compete against American dairymen in the U.S. market with subsidized products." If Europeans re-institute export subsidies on dairy products directed at the U.S. market, Ford said, "I will impose counter-vailing duties on those products."

In addition, the President said he was asking Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz to consider additional increases in government purchases of ground beef for use in the National School Lunch Program.

Photographer describes Kent shootings

CLEVELAND [UPI] — A Pulitzer Prize winning photographer testified yesterday he saw a group of Ohio National Guardsmen walk away from demonstrating students at Kent State University, turn around, walk back and shoot into the crowd the day four students were killed in 1970.

John Filo, a student at Kent State University when the shootings occurred on May 4, 1970, and who won the prize for his photograph of a girl keeling and crying over the body of a student killed by the gunfire, testified in the U.S. District court trial of eight former Ohio guardsmen.

Filo, now working as a photographer in Springfield, Ill., testified that he was between 190 to 200 feet from the National Guard troops when they fired into the crowd which was gathered in the vicinity of Taylor Hall, a campus building.

"The Guard proceeded to move from the shelter a pagoda to the south corner of Taylor Hall, just beyond the corner, some turned, came back by the shelter and fired."

Brooke, Kennedy favor busing

Elections, officials compound busing problem

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondant
Part 3 of a
4-Part Series

The elections have been a further complication. "I doubt if any major city has been hit with busing on the eve of an election before," said one observer. Political opponents don't debate the issue, fearful that it will rebound against them at the polls.

"That's one reason why no one is filling the political void in the city," said planning expert Thomas F. Pettigrew.

The handsome Michael Dukakis, once considered by some Bostonians as the Democrat's great liberal hope, came up with his own school desegregation plan earlier this year. The plan would have avoided busing. And during the early violent days of school integration Dukakis promised that if elected he would work to reverse the federal court order. He has since modified his stand, but antibussing forces are expected to vote for him.

Only two elected officials in the state have worked openly for bussing acceptance, Sens . Edward M. Kennedy and Edward Brooke. Niether of them is running for office this year.

Kennedy picked the worst time and place to make his stand: a meeting of the vociferously antibussing group known as ROAR, for Return of Our Alienated Rights, at Government Center. Kennedy was pelted with fruit and booed off the platform. "After a Kennedy failed to control them, no other Boston politician was about to try," said one leading political observer.

Brooke, a black, has attacked Boston politicians as "demogogues who turned on the trouble, but do not turn it off. They knew busing was coming, and that the law could not be changed with violence."

The man most responsible for introducing that law is U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity — "A text book judge, a man whose decisions you can anticipate by reading the federal codes," said a Harvard Law School professor.

Compared with some other jurists, Garrity has chosen to paly a passive role, content to let city officials implement his wide-ranging order to bus 17,000 Boston school children.

In contrast is the role played by federal Judge William E. Doyle in Denver, who does not allow marches or demonstrations of any kind ot interfere with his order to bus 6,000 children.

When antibusing forces organized a school boycott for every Friday in October, "Hitler Doyle," as he is known by the Denver antibusing people, promptly issued a restraining order. Attendance was higher than 95 percent on those days.

In Boston, attendance averages around 75 per cent, indicating a considerable number of people remain unconvinced about the merits of busing.

Garrity's low profile has been criticized, particularly his delay of 18 months in bringing down a decision.

The judge declined to introduce court-appointed school monitors and other devices used by federal justices elsewhere in the country. He has been content to tell parents: "You are wasting your time by petitioning Congress and the legislature. The only routes available to over turn my decision are a judicial appeal or a constitutional amendment."

Coal settlement due soon, averting strike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Guy Farmer, the coal companies' chief negotiator, said yesterday a tentative contract agreement could be reached with the United Mine Workers union by the end of this weekend, averting a threatened Nov. 12 walkout.

"I've been optimistic since the beinning," Farmer told a news conference. "We've said that time was our biggest enemy."

He said the negotiators were "pretty much in substantial agreement" on five main issues, but some items were likely to remain undecided until the final day of talks.

"There's no neat little package there that we can say is all tied up in ribbons," he said.

Asked if an agreement could be reached this week, he responded positively and then added, "Give us the weekend."

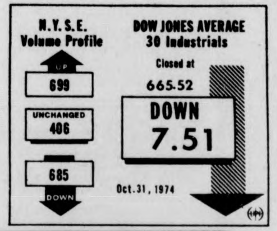
The current contract, covering about 120,000 miners, 1,200 mines and some 70 per cent of the nation's coal production, expires Nov. 12.

Farmer and the chairman of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, Nicholas T. Camicia, reviewed the status of negotiations with President Ford at a White House meeting earlier in the day. Farmer then briefed the executive board of the BCOA before he returned to the bargaining table.

He said Ford, who met earlier this week with UMW president Arnold Miller, asked how negotiations were going.

"We gave him a report." Farmer said. "We said we thought they were going pretty well. We said we still had some problems but we hoped to get them resolved in time to get it ratified."

Under the UMW constitution, any tentative agreement must be ratified by the entire membership, a process which could take an estimated 10 days. Without a contract, the miners would walk off the job Nov. 12, causing what experts believe could be another severe winter energy shortage.



Strong feelings on candidates expressed on streets of Boston

BOSTON [AP] — Some people think they will be better off sticking with Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Others like the "new ideas" of Democratic gubernatorial nominee Michael S. Dukakis.

And one police officer said he won't vote unless someone puts a gun to his head.

Many of those interviewed about the gubernatorial campaign on the streets of Boston have strong feelings about either Sargent or Dukakis or both of them. Their reasons range from integrity to the economy to party affiliation.

Edward Gibson, 26, of Cambridge, a Boston cab driver, said he will vote for Sargent because the governor will try harder to fulfill campaign promises.

"I don't think any politician can work effectively in this complex society," Gibson also said. "But I think Sargent hasn't done bad so far."

Paul Reinhalter, 23, a student from Braintree, felt differently. Sargent, he said, "has reneged on some of his promises, like legislative reform and reorganization" of state government.

Many of those with interesting comments would not allow their names to be used.

A Metroplitan District Commission police officer said he didn't like either candidate because they both are too liberal. He said he didn't plan to vote, "but if someone held a gun to my head and said vote or I'll shoot you, it would be Sargent."

However a Boston policeman, directing traffic downtown, said he prefers Dukakis because the Democrat has "new ideas."

A saleslady at a Filene's department store said:

"Honey, it's a tossup this year, but I'm afraid I'm going to stick with Sargent. He's made his boo boos, but who hasn't.

"Some things Dukakis says make me wonder if he thrashes things out before he speaks."

Kissinger wavers

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger yesterday put off a final decision on Pakistan's request for new shipments of modern arms but Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto declared himself "very happy" after 2½ hours of talks.

Kissinger and Bhutto announced in a joint statement that the United States would supply Pakistan with about 100,000 tons of surplus wheat.

Kissinger, the statement said, "would give careful consideration to Pakistan's additional requirements."

Food stamps forged

BOSTON [AP] — The state Welfare Department confirmed yesterday that a "minute amount" of counterfeit food stamps have been confiscated in Massachusetts and that a Secret Service investigation is under way.

Welfare Commissioner Steven A. Minter said that less than $500 worth of counterfeit $5 stamps had been confiscated.

Secret Service agent Thomas Smith said the counterfeits appeared only in Middlesex Country, and that he expected that only a limited number were in circulation "because the counterfeits are so bad."

Israel warns of war

By United Press International

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said yesterday Israel will not negotiate with Arab "terrorist" organizations under any circumstances. Chief of staff Lt. Gen. Mordachai Gur said Israel is ready for war if the Arab summit in Rabat should lead to an immediate resumption of hostilities in the Middle East.

"There will be no negotiations with the terrorist organizations," Rabin told a meeting of businessmen in Tel Aviv. "There is nothing to speak about with them. If it is determined that Jordan is not a partner in future peace negotiations, there is no one to speak with about peace on our eastern frontier."

Rabin has repeatedly said the PLO led by Yasser Arafat is a gang of terrorists and that the only place Israel will deal with it is on the battlefield.

Ray defended

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] — A lawyer who represented the convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. for five months in 1968 testified yesterday he did not believe "anybody could talk James Earl Ray into doing anything he did not want to do."

Arthur Hanes Sr. made the statement while testifying at a habeas corpus hearing in which Ray is contending he should be granted a new trial because his previous lawyer, Percy Foreman, pressured him into entering a guilty plea in the King case.

"James Earl Ray is strong-willed," the former Birmingham, Ala., mayor said. "Its just hard for me to believe anybody could talk James Earl Ray into doing anything he did not want to do."

'An evening of chinese dance' to highlight cultural series

The Chiang Ching Dance Company, under the sponsorship of the UMass Arts Council, will present "An Evening of Chinese Dance" in Bowker Auditorium tonight at 8 p.m. as the third offering in the council's Third World Cultural Series.

Chiang Ching, principal dancer, choreographer, business manager and artistic director of the company, was born in Peking and was chosen at the age of ten to begin studies at the Peking Dance Academy where she specialized in Chinese dance. In 1956 she was one of 15 girls chosen from over 1,000 applicants for the Peking School of Dance.

After six years of intensive training in the Peking School of Dance, Chiang was graduated in 1961. In the 1960's she made a tour throughout China and Southeast Asia in dancing and acting roles. She appeared in leading roles in over two dozen films in Hong Kong and Taiwan where she received the "Best Actress" award in 1966.

Chiang has served on the faculties of the University of California at Berkley, San Francisco State University and Hunter College and has performed and conducted dance workshops in over 40 colleges and universities in the United States.

The Dance Company's program will consist of two parts, the first a demonstration of the fundamentals of Chinese dance and the second a series of Chinese ethnic folk dances, including Mongolian, Tibetan, Manchurian and others. A favorite of audiences of every age, "The Pulling of the Pumpkin," will also be performed.

Tickets for the dance concert are now available at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall (545-0202), and are $4 for the general public and $2 for UMass students. Special group rates may be arranged through the UMass Arts Council.

Chiang Ching, will also offer a lecture-demonstration on Monday, at 1:25 p.m. This event will take place in the Women's Physical Education Building and is open to the public. There will be no admission charge.

..Chiang Ching performs tonight at Bowker auditorium.

UMass police investigate crimes reported during long weekend

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

The UMass police department said yesterday it is investigating a robbery and various assault and battery incidents that occurred over the long weekend.

A UMass student, working at Worcester Dining Commons, has claimed assault and battery by another UMass student.

No date has been set for a show-cause hearing at Hampshire District Court, in which both parties must present their cases before the Court Clerk, who then determines whether or not the case will go to trial.

In addition, a Campus Center parking garage attendant was robbed of $170.85, by a male with a gun, Saturday at 10 p.m., according to Sergeant Robert Joyce of the UMass police.

The suspect, according to Joyce, put the money in a paper bag and fled. The gun is believed to be a 22 caliber type.

The case is currently under investigation by the UMass Police.

Two juveniles were arrested yesterday on various assault and battery charges, occurring at Brett dorm Sunday, Joyce said.

One youth is charged with assault and battery, unarmed robbery, and assault with a dangerous weapon. He is currently being held on a 25,000 bail at Hampshire District Court, said Joyce.

The other youth is charged with assault and battery and unarmed robbery. He was released on personal recognizance, Joyce said.

Christian communion services set

By LILA DENHAM
Staff Correspondent

The "Ark", located at 758 North Pleasant St., is now holding communion service Sunday nights at 5:30. Organizer of the services is the Reverend Bob Denning, the new Episcopal Chaplain to the University.

"Christians of every denomination are invited to join in the celebration of the Lord's Supper," beckoned the Reverend Denning. The meetings are designed to supplement Sunday morning worship rather than replace Church Services, he said.

Although the Reverend Denning says he'd like to have other services during the week, he says he wants to find out what the students need before he makes any plans. So during the day he is at the Ark available to anyone who wants counseling or would simply like to talk.

Postcard campaign fights to protect safe, legal abortions

Keep Abortion Safe and Legal is the theme of a postcard writing campaign on the UMass campus. Legal abortion is threatened by legislation filed in the U.S. Congress.

Postcards directed to U.S. Senators and Congressmen will be available Monday through Wednesday, from 11:30 to 1:30 p.m. on the Campus Center concourse. Individuals will be on hand to answer questions and aid writers.

"The threat is real and serious." said organizer Sherry Flashman. "We need to generate large quantities of mail to neutralize highly organized well-financed efforts to reverse the Supreme Court decision making abortion a woman's private choice."

The Court ruled that elective abortion during the first 24 weeks of pregnancy is a private matter between a woman and her physician. Freedom to reject abortion received no less protection from the Court than did freedom to accept.

Three different Constitutional amendments have been filed by opponents of legal abortion. All outlaw abortion for any reason even when the woman's life is in danger. They seek to deny humane medical care to women.

Several riders which obstruct the Court decision have already passed the Congress. One permits hospitals to deny use of facilities for abortion. Another prohibits foreign aid monies being used for abortion.

In addition two riders are pending in Congress which, if successful, will discriminate against the less affluent who seek to terminate pregnancy. One denies legal aid for procuring abortion; the other outlaws Medicaid funds for abortion.

Ford has been listening to the ghost of Hoover

By BOB FOSTER

On November 5th, America faces the first constitutional test of the influence of an appointed President. At this point, the pollsters are predicting a Democratic landslide in Congress. Meanwhile, Gerry Ford is cursing Democrats with each and every expletive deleted from the Nixon Watergate transcripts. Democrats are suddenly the destroyers of foreign policy, the purveyors of economic fairy tales, and the epitome of political decadence. Many question the Ford tactics. But, it must be remembered that such lack of tact is not new. Gerald Ford continues to make his a Hooverian Presidency.

Campaign tactics are not the only similarity. In a time when America desperately clutches to the rim of a massive cauldron of depression, Gerald "Hoover" Ford distributes "WIN" buttons to fight our "re-flation." The uniqueness of the problem bids for a new, activist solution; not the cliche ridden voluntary programs of the Ford Administration. If you recall, Herbert was also full of slogans concerning the "dark before the dawn" and "recovery is just around the corner." Hoover's ideals required little governmental participation, just as Ford's ideals require of him. Both seem to have been crammed into a slot in which they could not fit.

In his Republican innocence though, Gerald Ford has struck upon a bit of wisdom. Indeed, if the Congress is magically transformed into a Democratic fairyland as is predicted, the President will have a difficult time forcing through legislation. And, if the landslide is beyond the wildest dreams of even the lowliest Democrat and a "veto-proof" Congress is installed, Gerry Ford may just as well don his hat and coat for the remainder of his Presidency. For a veto-proof Congress will mean a country run by Democratic legislation, not Gerald Ford.

President Ford told us back in August that he intended to shift the power of the Executive back to the Legislature during his reign. When I was listening to that comment on the Six O'Clock News during that balmy month, I kind of chuckled to myself. "Hah!" I said. "Wait until he tastes the power of the Presidency. He'll change his mind." Little did I expect that he would do everything in his power to carry out his promise.

By chastising Democrats at every Fifty-dollar-a-plate luncheon and Five Hundred-dollar-a-plate dinner, Gerald Ford is indeed keeping his promise and simultaneously digging his Presidential grave. Americans are sick of political rhetoric. Check the attendance figures at political speeches and rallies. It's almost a sure bet that they are lower than those same statistics from most recent Congressional elections. Check the college campuses. Students study or party, but few have politicked. Rhetoric is out, a mixture of apathy and desire for action is in. Thus, each time Gerald Ford curses a Democrat and in the same breath plugs the "WIN" program, he buries himself further in the dirt of political rhetoric.

I am not fond of predicting. But presently, the result seems inevitable. Democrats are going to "WIN" fairly "BIG". Perhaps they will not obtain their desired "veto-proof" Congress, but they will grab much more power than they presently have. Who will the Republicans blame? Richard Nixon, of course! And indeed, the blame is justifiable. But, Gerald Ford must also accept some of the blame. The Congressman-President has bungled. Let's hope it doesn't happen again.

People vs. handguns

To the Editor:

The recent events in the Boston Public Schools have re-kindled a long time fear in many of us, including myself. I am speaking of the fear of the misuse of handguns. In the hands of children, handguns are especially dangerous, and they are only easy for children to have because they are so easily obtained by adults and so often kept in easily accessible places by parents. WE NEED HANDGUN CONTROL! The most basic step for "the common man" in changing the system in this country is the vote - voting for the people who support what you believe in. People vs. Handguns would like to urge EVERYONE to find out what various people running for offices think about handgun control, before you vote. The laws in this country will only change in the hands of those elected officials who care to change them.

Don't drink that wine

To the Editor:

Workers have the right to decide whether they want to be represented by a union. When workers decide to be represented by and choose a union a contract is then signed among the workers, employer, and the union. A sweetheart contract is when the employer signs a contract with another union without recognizing the right of workers to vote for the union that they want to represent them. In California the grape growers have signed a sweetheart contract. December of 1973 was the expiration date of U.F.W. contracts with California grape growers. The workers asked that their contracts with the U.F.W. union be renewed, however the growers decided to choose the Teamster Union to represent any person working in their fields. The workers struck these growers because of the workers right to choose the union to represent them. Just last month grape workers in the Gallo vineyards went out on strike demanding to be represented by the U.F.W. These workers were working under a Teamster contract.

On April 10, 1973 a group of 25 religious leaders, congressmen, and labor leaders polled approximately 1,000 workers to determine their choice for union representation. Their findings were: U.F.W. 795; Teamsters 80; No Union 78. The workers finally got the legislator of California to deal with their right for elections. A proposed secret ballot election law that passed the California State Assembly but was defeated in the State Senate last month because of the combined lobbying of the growers and the Teamsters. The U.F.W. and the A.F.L.-C.I.O. strongly supported the bill.

The U.F.W. union to win back its contracts is carrying on strikes in California and a nationwide boycott of lettuce, grapes, and Gallo wines. The Juan de la Cruz boycott committee's activities of educating, leafleting, and picketing in this area brought U.F.W. commitments from Stop & Shop, Finast, Food Mart, and Big Y, and Louis' to not stock lettuce and grapes; and from Russell's, C&C's, and Finast not to stock Gallo wines. The Committee has meetings Wednesday evenings at 7:30 in Rm. 802 C.C. and is now picketing Shop-Rite Friday nights 6-9 and Saturday 10-4; for more information contact Pam Rourke at 546-6622.

UMies: A bunch of sheep

To the Editor:

As our ill-famed former president liked to say, "Let's get a couple of things perfectly clear."

First of all, that the GUC [Governance Units Convention] resolution directed at the Trustees, which in its first demand states that "students at the university be recognized as responsible adults and that they have the right to determine the direction of their own lives...", is pure fiction. With the exception of a few individuals who are truly "busting ass" to keep our collective heads above water, the students at this school are a bunch of sheep and irresponsible sheep at that. It is a safe guess that most people do not know what goes on in SGA and really could care less. They are practicing their sheepness by allowing the university faculty and staff push and bully them around all day with asinine course requirements, inept grading procedures, and ineffectual office policies. These can be changed, but unfortunately that takes work. The students I see would rather express their anger by belting down a few beers, smoking some dope, and having a waterfight or a panty-raid. Either that or you find the usual group of abjectly apathetic by-standers who stand by and shake their heads and comment on the irresponsibility around them. Well, folks, my prescription is a laxative, 'cause you are all full of shit and you deserve whatever you get at the hands of the university since they know what they want and they are getting paid to do it.

Secondly, since when does the GUC think it is defying Whitmore, considering it sounds more like a child whimpering in front of its parents than a fully functioning student body capable of making decisions. Whitmore will not give away power like so much candy. It must be taken by people capable of using it. And let's face it folks, we are not ready for it until we do a bit more organizing than at present. So, attention all you sheep out there we have some work to do and you are going to have to get up off of your asses to do it.

Guns prevent crime

To the Editor:

Pursuant to a letter by Steven Sacks in the October 22 issue of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian :

—Sixty percent of all frozen pot roast murders are not "accidental."

—One fourth of the 3,000 yearly "accidental" pot roast death victims were starving husbands.

—25,000 Americans die from frozen pot roasts each year.

—200,000 others are wounded, suffering paralysis, sterilization [from bad aims], dismemberment, or blinding [including frostbitten eyes].

These statistics come from the F.B.I. records for 1984 [which puts the value of statistics right where they belong].

Since Mr. Sacks is so set on destroying his Constitutional Rights he would be wise to consider outlawing pot roast. After all hitting someone on the head with a frozen pot roast is like hitting him with a large rock, which could be fatal. And why not outlaw chuck steaks, turkeys, chickens and God forbid what a frozen salami can do. Perhaps he should also campaign for the outlawing of refrigerators, which make the roasts lethal.

Once this menace is outlawed then Mr. Sacks should fight to outlaw other potential crime-of-passion weapons around the house. Knives, definitely must go, all except butter knives; all iron skillets and heavy pots; lamps, only those which are bolted down should be legal; irons, especially steam and dry; portable television sets and radios, which when thrown become fatal projectiles; furniture, such as chairs and end tables, can kill; and books, especially the family encyclopedia, will have to be destroyed.

Mr. Sacks can't be serious when he says he wants to put handguns only in the hands of the "military and police." Kent State and police states around the world show us the danger of this. That is why our founding fathers chose to make the right to bear arms part of our Constitution. I cannot believe that once handguns are outlawed a move to outlaw all guns will not be successful, then watch out. After all what prevents someone from engaging in a "crime of passion" with a rifle or shotgun? I hate to disillusion Mr. Sacks but guns are a deterrent to crime. A burgler will think twice about entering a house if he knows he can get shot in the rear by an armed resident. On the other hand once we are disarmed what is to stop him, who you can bet will be armed, from doing as he pleases? Does Mr. Sacks actually think that outlawing guns will prevent the criminals from having them?

NO, NO, NO Steven Sacks. No People vs. Handguns. You may think you are doing the people a favor by encouraging them to give up their right. If you must campaign to outlaw something outlaw the automobile. It kills more people than the much too publicized handgun. If you must punish someone then seek to stiffen the penalties for the criminals not the responsible handgun owner.

Persons interested in preserving their Constitutional Rights should write their representatives, especially Governor Sargent who has a position similar to that of Mr. Sacks.

Once they are successful in taking away one of your rights, what is to stop them from taking the rest? Think about it.

It's your vote

It was a little after five in the morning, and we all stood around sipping coffee from containers, waiting for the early shift of workers to come through the gate. There was small talk, mostly, about how the Red Sox were going all the way, or just about how damned early it was to get out of bed. The candidate was leaning against the rented Chevy, flipping through the Globe to the editorial pages. We watched as he read the uncomplimentary political column. He shook his head, ripped the column out, and stuffed it into his pocket. "I'll save this one," he said, "and mail it back to him after we win this thing." We laughed. It was a nervous laugh. Sometimes an early morning columnist can ruin the day for you. Not this time.

The workers filed through the gate with skeptical looks on their faces. It was too early for them too. We took up positions and started passing out the leaflets. In the background we could hear the familiar drone of the candidate selling his wares. "Hi, how are ya, nice to see ya. Morning, hi there, appreciate your vote. Hi, good to see ya. What's that? Jobs? You bet, unemployment is eight percent here you know. We can do better than that. No excuse for it. Hi there, nice to see ya."

A mad rush for the car. We'd run overtime already, and everything depends on keeping to the schedule. The next stop is an elderly housing project in Chicopee. In the car the candidate talked about the factory gate. "Pretty good stop. About five hundred, wouldn't you say? Sometimes I wonder if anyone can get across to people in that situation. It's all too fast, no time to really talk." The ride took about twenty minutes, and the candidate studied his issue statements all the way over. We discussed absentee ballots. "Who's handling that here, anyway? Are you sure? Check on it, make sure. It's damn important. What's the name of the chairperson of this group we're seeing? Oh yeah, right, okay."

After Chicopee we stopped for a quick coffee and donut. Then over to Holyoke for a walking tour of the downtown area. We went through city hall like Grant took Richmond. The candidate remembers the names of most of the workers from the last trip through. We hit the street, and by then the temperature is up around ninety. Mid-summer campaigning is no joke. Off with the jackets and loosen the ties. There weren't many shoppers around in the heat, so the candidate heads for Police Headquarters. "Hi there, how are ya. Gun control? Well, I've always said that...." A quick run through the Fire Station and we're back in the car enroute to a Kiwanis luncheon at Valles. The candidate studied his remarks on the way over, and delivered a major economic message at the luncheon. All we wanted to do was eat the steak dinner. Food is important on a campaign, and we'd had just about enough of McDonald's.

Back into the broiling, "air conditioned" Chevy, for the ten minute drive to the Springfield Newspapers. After a couple of interviews, we headed across town to city hall for a walk through. Outside on the steps the television crew waits for its interviews. The candidate fields questions about the Westover land, unemployment in the Springfield area, urban problems. He throws in the names of some local factories, and touches upon some local issues. The reporters are satisfied. The interview lasted about fifteen minutes, and on the news that night they used about one minute's worth. That's the way it goes.

We were late again. The next stop was Monsanto at three PM, and it was quarter-till already. After that we'd go back to Springfield for an organizational meeting. Then over to Westfield for a fundraiser, and then back to Holyoke for a reception. In between are the telephone calls a candidate has to make. And it's talk, talk, talk. By nine o'clock he's hoarse. The reception in Holyoke is over, and it's one more stop in Springfield, and then the Chevy heads west for Pittsfield. The candidate will spend the night there, and be up at four thirty the next morning and do it all again.

I saw many days like the one above, this past summer. And it doesn't matter who the candidate is, what office he's seeking, what party he's in, or even what state. It's all pretty much the same. And everywhere you go there are the campaign workers, those thousands of people who give their time and expect nothing personal in return. They're young and old, white and black, short hair, long hair. And they snicker when they read about the apathy this year, because they know that apathy is just an excuse to sit back and let someone else do it.

On Tuesday we go to the polls. And if you having a little trouble deciding whether or not to exercise that privilege, please keep a few things in mind. Four years ago, the gubernatorial election was decided by approximately one vote per precinct, across the state. That's one vote, per precinct. Another thing is that the candidates for statewide office this Tuesday will receive more votes than President Ford ever received in one election in his life. Another thing, just stop and take into consideration the above account of one day's campaigning. The candidate I was with spent six and one half days per week, on the road, campaigning. And think about the workers who were willing to get out of bed at four thirty, because they feel it's important. And when you consider these things, ask yourself if it's really too damn much trouble to walk down to the polling place and take a minute to vote. Remember, one vote per precinct. That could be you.

HELLO, I'M PRESIDENT WOOD! I WOULD HAVE BEEN HERE MUCH SOONER, BUT I HAD TROUBLE FINDING THE PLACE!

Heroes and fools

It is an interesting phenomenon in American history that the change in decades so often occurs simultaneously with change in the mood and thoughts of the people. Such is the case with the seventies and at no time has this turnabout been more evident than the past week. This is in reference to two major events, first President Nixon suffering, maybe dying the death of a man torn asunder by his own corrupt ways. The second is the triumph of Muhammad Ali a political outcast robbed of his title in his prime for refusing to fight in a war we have since forgotten about on the surface anyway.

The irony is incredible.

Remember when Ali was the bad guy? The "nigger" who would step out of his athletic stereotype to badmouth such things as the racism in loud, angry tones? And after he took that un-American name of Muhammad Ali and stood up for his rights the system hung him professionally.

Then too, Richard Nixon was President and had us believing he was the Horatio Alger personified. The poor boy who came out of rags in Whittier, California to take on the highest office in the country. He had us so well duped he took a landslide in 1972. Names like Haldeman and Erlichman meant order and leadership. John Mitchell was synonomous with justice.

But something happened. Now Ali is the champion again. He did it by defeating George Foreman the all American Negro who fought in the olympics and paraded around at his victory waving two small American flags. And now too Richard Nixon lies in a hospital bed no longer wearing his lapel flag while the men who made up his system are now being brought to trial themselves.

History will tell us who were the heroes and who were the fools of the sixties.

Profit and power

"Have it your way."
Burger King, with thanks to a certain political journalism course.

Mike Dukakis had the nerve to stand on a Roxbury Street corner last Sunday morning and spout the rhetoric of the more racist elements of the South Boston anti-busing movement. Pointing to a church across the street from where he stood, a well known Roxbury landmark, Dukakis began a heartwarming spiel on the finer points of preserving Boston's ethnic communities. The pastor of the church told the Boston Globe that Dukakis had picked up "a few hundred" votes with his visit.

This is the true ugliness of the American politician. And it's a kind of ugliness that's pervasive in our society, one which is just discovering the breathtaking freedom of a hamburger on which you can "hold the pickles, hold the lettuce." Of course we all realize that the folks at Burger King aren't giving us our culinary freedom out of any deep seated beneficence on their part, and neither is Mike Dukakis. With the hamburger moguls it's purely a profit thing, with our gubernatorial candidate it's the power-profit motive, the one which screams "elect me, elect me!" from every pore of his body.

Yes, it was a pretty sleazy way for Dukakis to hint at his alignment with the Southie folks from the heart of the enemy camp. You could sense just from reading the Globe story that the candidate probably felt a little uneasy about getting too close to the blacks when there were so many white votes eyeing him so close to the election. So he simply passed and punted at the same time, defending that "community spirit" that we hear about in Southie so often and still getting those "few hundred" votes that the black pastor was so pleased to tell the Globe he had garnered.

Most people say that's just the way politicians operate, running around and appeasing all of their constituencies at once with double talk or no talk at all. But that's the thing that makes it even worse. We, the people who elect these pols to office, let them set the ground rules while we all try to figure out who's less of a bullshitter, and as often as not the lesser of two evils still loses.

Which takes us back to the most depressing realization of all. The government is in fact as representative of the people as the most idealistic of our vaunted forefathers had hoped it would be. It's just a national sickness of ours that we can't be candid with anyone. We always have to act as if we're concerned about those hamburger buyers, we always have to get all the votes, instead of being a little more frank and telling some people that we're just not on their side.

I may be naive, but I'd prefer to think that someday there will be room for a society of straight shooting people somewhere.

It may be contrary to human nature to be completely honest, but I'd prefer to believe that the dishonesty is just so deeply imbedded in the fabric of our society that we've forgotten what it's like to be any other way.

And I hope no one is ever able to convince me I'M wrong.

Computer play programmed for weekend performance

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

Rock & Roll Music: A Computer Plan, directed and programmed by David Miller, a senior theater major, will be presented free of charge at the UMass Theater Barn on Commonwealth Ave. tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m.

"The play is a performance of various activities. There's really no way to describe it," said Luann Barry, one of the play's 12 performers. "It consists of activities programmed by a series of commands to a computer."

There will be constant activity in three areas of the stage, with the performers switching back and forth.

Audience participation is possible.

Barry said, "Most of the play is improvisation; there is very little setting, and the performers just wear their own clothes."

Miller is presenting the play through the Theater Department for academic credit. He has been described as "a frustrated xerex machine" by one of his performers. "because he really loves anything mechanical".

Miller performed in the Theater Dept.'s presentation of The Importance of Being Earnest last year.

Ambiguities cited in amendment on privacy rights for students

West said, each record office will hold its own meeting to decide what procedures it will follow in instituting the "Protection on the Rights and Privacy" Amendment. The Task Force will determine if the particular department is in accordance with the law, said West. The Student Development Center met yesterday and on Nov. 7, Health Service will hold its meeting.

There are many ambiguities in this amendment, West said, because there had been little discussion in the Senate about it before it was passed. The Federal Government has failed to set up the guidelines in instituting the ammendment, leaving many questions unanswered.

These are some of the questions being asked by higher education associations: What records are accessible to the student?

Are computer records included?

Do students receiving financial aide have access to Parents Confidential Statements or should the right of privacy be retained to the parents?

Should students who are receiving psychiatric care have access to the psychiatrists' records?

Can parents who support their children's education receive no information from the college without the student's consent?

Does the Buckley Act give the right of access to school records to people who have graduated or who have been rejected admittance to the college?

Are these same rights applicable to staff and faculty at universities?

West said another problem which may result in Massachusetts is a conflict between state and federal policy on privacy. The state, in 1973, passed a privacy law which states that a parent or student eighteen years of age or older should be allowed to look at all school records. The discrepancy may come in deciding how long student records should be kept, said West.

He said the federal government has not yet set any guidelines on this but the state has ruled that academic transcripts should be kept for forty years after graduation and students personal data should be destroyed five years after graduation.

Another question, West said, which has been brought up is that if recommendations have been acquired with a promise to the author to be kept confidential and with the student's understanding that they should be kept confidential, should the student still be allowed to see these recommendations.

An assistant to Senator Buckley said the Senator is considering offering, when the Senate convenes in November, and ammendment stating that personally-signed confidential documents placed in a student's file before the Act was passed need not be make available to the student. Also the amendment would allow a student who asks for letters of recommendation to waive his right of access to his file.

Minors win temporary restraint on parental okay for abortions

BOSTON [AP] — A U.S. District Court judge yesterday issued a temporary restraining order barring implimentation of a new state law requiring women under 18 to have parental permission before having abortions.

Judge Frank H. Freedman issued the order in a suit filed by two unnamed 16-year-old girls wanting abortions. The law, passed by the Legislature at the end of the last session, was to go into effect Nov. 1.

The judge questioned the constitutionality of the parental consent part of the law and whether such a standard could be applied to only a certain group of persons affected by the law.

Freedman empaneled a three-judge federal panel to hold a hearing in December on the constitutionality of the law. The restraining order technically applies for 10 days and only to the two girls who brought suit in conjunction with birth control advocate Bill Baird.

Text of President Wood's appearance before Student Senate, Oct. 30

The following is an edited version of remarks by UMass system President Robert C. Wood before the undergraduate Student Senate Wednesday night in the Campus Center. Transcript as recorded by The Collegian.

Last year I read from Thomas Jefferson, a friend of the young. And remember that Jefferson was a man who advocated revolution in every generation:

"Public men should from all students keep aloof as you would from the infected subjects of yellow fever. Consider yourself when with them as among the patients of bedlam, needing medical more than moral counsel. They are determined as to the facts they will believe and the opinions on which they will act. Get by them therefore as you would an angry bull — it is not for a man of sense to dispute them."

This year I thought I would give you something in the vein of affirmative action, and this is the law of the Choctaw Nation, November, 1842:

"When a student, upon a trial of two years, is found from mental inability incapable to learn or improve, such pupils shall, at the request of the trustees, be removed from the institution, and others selected to fill the vacancies."

These two represent a kind of continuing pressure from outside, which as I've read it this year on the political and public front, I've still come to the suspicion, as many grow older, that the young may not be aware of the old — or may not be grateful to the old, or may not be aware of the benefits of society as presumably it has placed upon them, and presumably, therefore, should be handled with care.

On the other hand, as expressed recently in this Senate's statement, is the insistent request and demand that one acknowledge that adulthood can go on postponed too long, that education can often get unduly extended, and that the quality of humanism, (when one comes to a campus of 23,000 and when one comes to a community in which the average age is 21 years and four months) the quality of simple humanists can be forgotten in the scale.

So what balance we need to strike every year is between how these two views — the Choctaw, (Thomas Jefferson grown old and retired in Virginia) and a young impatient and rightly frustrated — come together in some manner of common ground.

And the common ground is how we get quality education at the lowest possible costs and how we go about that enterprise.

And the principle is of reciprocity and one of shared powers and is a common commitment to be the custodian of academic freedom. It was threatened in the Legislature last year, will be threatened in the Legislature this year, and will be a constant concern of all of us.

The basic rule of this is not new. As far as this campus is concerned, the doctrine of reciprocity and shared powers that I just quoted was from student participation in college and university governance in 1970, set in terms of our own governance document in 1973.

And it is in this basic mode of coming together and of reciprocity that one makes progress.

If any of you have had the opportunity to read this morning the statements of the two candidates for governor, as to how they do not believe that this campus is qualified for undertaking a law center, there is another fight coming down the road next year.

So down through five years, where student leaders have raised clear and specific issues, where they have been appropriately addressed to the University administration and to the trustees, we've undertaken a response.

At the same time I'd be less than frank to any of the senators or any of the area representatives in this room, if I pretended that we dealt in a world that consisted of you and me and some vague 26 people that were called trustees somewhere outside — with a battery of chancellors and vice-chancellors, provosts and deans and counselors in between.

There are at least three real constraints that affect our capacity for government, and our capacity to direct the orders and the affairs of this University:

—one is Chapter 75 of the laws of the Commonwealth, that established this University, and that vests final non-delegable authority to the trustees. And these statutory responsibilities deal with how we designate a state employe, how he may act, who he's responsible for, and who may spend state funds;

—there are simple contractual requirements that are part of the common law of the state and the nation. And these speak to debt service requirements and bonded indebtedness entered into in an effort to build this University ten and twenty years ago. And these are simple contractual obligations that cannot be overriden by a vote of this body, by a memo from the President, or from a vote by the Trustees. Whatever one feels about life in Amherst, or accommodations on this campus, these contractual obligations are there;

—finally, there are simply some educational restraints. People have to believe in a degree from the University of Massachusetts. They have to believe that it means something. Believe that it gives you a leg up on a career — makes it clear that you spent four years on something worthwhile.

And no amount of prescription and rhetoric can change these three constraints.

So we come to a point where the initiative of the Senate, of the area groups, are welcome, as they are prescribed in section IB four of our governance statement. But that is an initiative that means that in student affairs, beginning action, creative action starts here. But it is not an exclusive, and it is not a complete grant of authority, as by the constraints, and simply could not be.

I am glad to call as equal, as I have for five years, student trustee from Amherst, and the student trustee from Boston, who votes, who participates in every meeting, who has never been excluded from any executive session, and who can report to this body and to all bodies about what the public business of this University is about.

I think it is terribly important, having acknowledged in those specifics, to say, (and above all to cry out from a human scale) to make clear the point that these objectives are not, in my judgement, achievable by a drive toward autonomy and isolation and withdrawal and retreat.

The University of Massachusetts is one University. Students, faculty, administration, Amherst, Boston and Worcester. It is one University for very good reasons.

"The University of Massachusetts is one University.
Students, faculty,
administration, Amherst,
Boston and Worcester.
It is one University for very good reasons."

—First, as one University, we have a stronger call on the public resources of the state, a better chance of getting ahead, a better chance of being recognized, a better chance of being acknowledged.

—Second, together we present a stronger, more varied, more complementary educational program. Already we are beginning to see students transferring from Amherst back to the Boston campus when they want a particular piece of the action in College III and College IV. Already we are seeing students come from Boston to good, specialized areas of strength here.

That will go on more and more, and particular in the graduate field, as I told the Graduate Student Senate earlier. But it is better education and we can balance and we can plan.

—And finally, we are better when we are not a "cookie cutter" set of campuses — all homogenized, all turned out of the same mold, all looking alike. Those of you who visited the Boston campus know that it's style — though somewhat more erratic than yours — is still a different style. And those of you who have seen other campuses in other state Universities can recognize the same here.

But to split, to divide, to secede, is to simply weaken our capabilities and cheapen our education — and no one should be mistaken about that. Last summer Rick Savini extended an invitation (on behalf of the students — to the trustees) to come together in an informal session. I told Rick at that time that summer is a bad time to find trustees, as it is a bad time to find students, as it is a very bad time to find faculty. Nevertheless, I thought the proposition was fine.

These are the ways I think you will proceed. I hope you will go forward, because we need, as we have always needed, strong student participation and strong student support.

We'll need it, upcoming in January in the Legislature, in a very special way. And therefore as I've done to five Senates before, I welcome you to participation at the University. I'm glad to try to answer and explain any of the specific questions and issues you have about that mysterious place called One Washington Mall, about those shadowy group of people called trustees, about your common collegial bodies of the University assembly in Boston, of the bylaws of the Worcester campus, and about the aspects of what is already a great University and destined to be better. Thank-you.

SENATE PRESIDENT CINDY MCGRATH: OK, we'll begin a question and answer period. As you raise your hand, I'll write down your name and a description of you if I don't know who you are. I'll try to call on everybody as soon as I can.

Q: President Wood, if we are subject to the restrictions that you suggested, what do you as chief administrator see as our role?

Wood: The primary roles of the students are to:

1. Assure themselves that in student affairs — in your own budget and your own priorities — you exercise that priority response;

2. Secondly, you've got a legitimate and major concern about what kind of education you are getting. The difference is how you feel about your education, and secondly whether you're able to be taken seriously in your expression of those concerns.

I said to the graduate council and I mean it, (and I think I mean it in undergraduate) that I think we're in for an era of reform — in time, in support, in character of work and in place of work in education. I think that's a major concern.

3. The third part, as a part of a constituent body, is to make your views felt about general university policy. Whether it's the contact hour or the length of the academic year, or whether it's the character of the professional schools that support it — all are, I think, parts where you've got to have your voice said.

You are not in a primary responsibility in terms of evaluation of some aspects of faculty life. It is simply not easy for anyone but peers in a discipline to make judgements about peer performance. And you are not really in a position in terms for example of wanting to make judgements, or when to go to market on a bond issue or when to go for what kind of level of support in the state legislature.

What we need, as I indicated to Rick, we're going to need this body — if it believes it — to say that it thinks there ought to be a public law center in the educational system of the Commonwealth. And we're going to need you, (if you believe it) to say what you think about the size of the campus, about the part-time vs. full-time, about the relative balance between Boston and Amherst. These are some recently exclusive prerogatives for the student and they are somewhat correlary and supportive. But they add up to a very full plate for your agenda for this year, as far as I am concerned.

Q: I'd like to ask you your rationale and the trustees rationale for not allowing a lawyer who was hired with student money to defend a student in court — not suing the University — but in a criminal case.

Wood: The development of student legal aid had my support in the amendment of Chapter 75. It is now in the position where the issue is how one reconciles the ficuciary requirements of '75 — how you pay your lawyers and, b) under what supervision do they work. That's a complicated question that came to my office about four days ago.

How do we work out the fact that the two present lawyers are responsible in criminal and civil cases as well as in counselling to the student bodies and at the same time acceptable to the funding requirements of '75 — is probably going to take some discussion.

But there's no problem about the fact of having student legal support. There hasn't been for two years. And there have been questions about whether you wanted to go on with Dick Howland on a consultant, or whether you wanted a more regular basis. That's the question, but it's an operative question, not a matter of yes or no.

Q: Dr. Wood, do you support the memo of Dr. Gage dealing with administrative control of Student Government Assn. legislation and other matters?

Wood: I one ... have ... you mean the Gage memorandum as reported in the ... now that's a campus matter in which I haven't made a judgement yet ... I haven't decided yet.

Q: In one of your restrictions that govern University life, you spoke about the quality of education and the need to make sure that the education that we get here means something. Recently the job market has decreased rapidly. What moves have you made for Legislation, where do you see the power of the state University system to push for more jobs?

Wood: I see the University capacity for a healthy state economy basically as a fairly limited one. Where Massachusetts goes in terms of jobs is a function of the national policy of a national administration and the general government of the state.

Essentially what a University can do is to provide ideas and research and technology advances that make a particular region or state competitive for awhile. But we try to be as responsive as we can to help on jobs. The best thing we can still do is give a good education and good support for new ideas.

Q: As a student senator, I have found that there is a consensus among students on campus about the 18-year-old residency and food service requirements. What recourse do we have of these constraints and the rights of litigation when student funds for legal services are frozen and Vice-Chancellor Gage sends a condescending commentary down from his office. How do we go about changing, for instance the 18-year-old residency and the food service requirement.

I think by making it 21-years-old, its a violation of the 14th amendment . . .

Wood: Could be...

Q: ... of the Constitution by the due process and by the enfranchisement of 18-year-olds.

Wood: When I was asked that question last Sunday, I think you would have amendments that you would have to go through on the contractual debt service requirements that have been undertaken by the building authority. That's certainly an area that if you want your counsel to explore, it's appropriate to explore.

I think the basic problem now, as I said on Sunday night, is economic, not legal as far as living accommodations and what have you are concerned. I think what we're all caught up with is inflation. I think we have a major problem on food service and on dormitories — what you get and what you pay. The question is: what options you've got. And the options at the present time are not very good, and certainly a concern that I'm willing to acknowledge.

"The question is,
what options you've got.
And the options
at the present time are not very good, and thats certainly a concern that I'm willing to acknowledge."

I don't think the route, and let me say this out front as plainly as I can, I don't think the route at the present time among the various constituencies at the University, is legalism, or advocacy or particular formality at the present time.

I think we're in an environment where any member of the public and the legislature can read what the fertility rates are and have been since 1971. And we're no longer in an environment where people are prepared to take on faith the value of a University as an investment. And if we're in now an environment as my impression is, where the competing needs in health and welfare are strong, then I'm enormously reluctant to go into a run against the chord in a battle for the public purse. What we require at this time, are some consultive, deliberate, open discussions to come up largely around the governance document, and April is the time when that document is reviewed.

I have not been a party to the conversations between you and the Vice-Chancellor. I am not a party to how one feels aggrieved one way or the other. I do say this is not a period in University life where we undertake to see what the concerns are and how we resolve them and when we need new resources we go out and try to get them.

Q: Why doesn't the Student Government Assn. have full control of its budget?

The key question is what you mean by full control. The applause indicates the notion would mean full control to raise the money and spend it the way you can.

—now question one is legal. Chapter 75 doesn't permit the Trustees of the University, (for any funds, trust funds or state appropriated funds) does not allow anybody other than the Trustees to be responsible for that.

—the other question is administrative. What we found out when this body came to us about WMPIRG a couple of years ago (and asked for a voluntary check-off) is that there are mechanisms and there are procedures in how this University handles collection and dispersal of money, that allow you to do better than if you do it on a "free University," voluntaristic basis.

So my position from five years of observing what the students wanted when they began in 1970 at the height of their concern with the community (to want street academy's in Springfield, off-campus) — when they went to a set of activities that Trustees wouldn't normally think about — my observation has been that no student budget that has come up has ever been substantially affected or changed in priorities by the Trustees.

Trustee Pumphret, the head of the budget committee, has sometimes said the student budget was better prepared than the University budget — and more effectively put together. But by and large if you look at your capacity to manage funds raised by student fees and those of other Universities across the country — you have had the real policy of determining that.

I think it's important to realize that that's as far as you go short of amending the law.

Now you can ask yourself, does the student body want to go to the Legislature and have student funds separated from public funds — I would say that's a clear possibility — I would think about that quite a while.

Q: Would you support that?

Wood: Probably not. I don't know ... when it first came up, I was counselled to oppose student legal activities because it might have people saying unkind things about the administration. But it seemed to me that any group of people in a negotiating contract in society in which everybody negotiates at the drop of a hat and needed the legal capability.

If I was asked by Ways and Means: did I think that in my observation of the way students spent their money on this campus — I'm not off the record so I can't talk about other campuses — on this campus, I'd say yes, that it's responsible.

If I think this is the matter of great moment — of getting that kind of symbolic freedom — I would have to say I wouldn't put it quite that high.

Q: When students were coming back to school, they were found in the position that they didn't have a lawyer to talk to because the budget was frozen for the lawyer. Now administrative control was exercised over that budget and prevented students from getting legal consultation of leases and security deposits and things of that nature. I think that's very important.

Wood: I can't speak to what happens in the summer on a lapse of student and then a pickup in other capabilities ... of when someone is on board and when he is not.

What arrangements they can best operate on as your lawyers is a question I began to focus on when it arrived on the 24th of October. And just as the Graduate Grievance Committee, we'll get an answer to you as fast as we can.

Q: I'd like to address something a little more specific. We talk a lot about student input and input from various factions within the University. I have the privilege of sitting on the multi-campus budget committee.

Wood: I find it impossible to get information about the issues that are going to be discussed at meetings. For instance we received the fiscal 1976 budget two days before we were asked to speak on it. I went to the meeting and the minutes were not available of the previous meeting.

I feel that it upsets me very much. On one hand the administration says it is trying to get all factions of the University involved while at the same time not providing them with the information which these people need to do the job that they were asked to do, which is to advise on issues that are important to everyone.

Q: Can you assure me that the staff will try to get information to the members of the committee in a more rational manner?

Wood: More than that, I see Mr. Gulko, the official representative of the Amherst component there. I will ask that he take official note of that request ... the answer is this is a process that I think we'll try to work out.

The other thing, of course, is that those committees are an alternative to the University Senate. And you should know that the people who put the governance document together, and it was not made in my office, wrestled with the issue of a common University-wide body. The Boston campus combines its faculty and its student senates in a uni-cameral assembly. Your campus decided to stay in a bi-cameral mode. They simply couldn't reconcile those alternative styles and so they came up with those committees as alternatives.

The important thing is for students on those committees to hang in because I think they're going to get more important and more decisive as time goes on.

I can take a couple more questions but I've got to remember a Distinguished Lecturer or something.

Q: What advantages do you see in a hazy relationship with the trustees?

Wood: A hazy relationship always gives you elbow room. In my experience in my organizations it is useful. What I meant by my earlier statement is if you ask the Trustees specifically to define their authority, it will come down chapter 75 and it will come down pretty cold in terms of their feeling that for five years they've delegated an awful lot away to the campuses, the faculty and the students. So my advice there was simply friendly advice.

"A hazy relationship elbow room.

In my experience in my organizations
it is useful.
What I meant
by my earlier statement is if you ask the Trustees specifically to define their authority, it will come down Chapter 75
and it will come down pretty cold in terms of their feeling that

I'm a great believer in broad and general grants of governances. I am a believer in a Constitution that is more like that of the United States — with general clauses and not specific like the state of Louisiana with road maps in it. I am more of a believer in a British-UK form of not knowing exactly where legislative and judicial power start and stop and the other. I'm particularly of that, and I'm of the persuasion that at best, a University is a limited purpose undertaking. And the basic thing to remember is that it's an essentially education-oriented undertaking.

So I'm not one to make a big thing about leaps and bounds in legal prescription.

Q: President Wood, you alluded in your talk to overriding financial considerations in the dorms, living areas and the dining commons. You also stated that students were not equipped to make decisions concerning bond issues, concerning financing of these buildings. You stated that we have in fact taken and put monies we do get ... and budget them in a mature fashion.

Here on this campus there are presently students who are trying to set up boards who have control over these areas so they can demonstrate that students will not be fiscally irresponsible in these areas. Students have been sort of put off time and time and I really feel that is time for your office ... if you seriously believe that students are indeed operating in a fiscally responsible manner...

Wood: All right. Let me amend and revise my remarks on that point to say two things:

—one. I've got no doubt that anyone in this room or anyone in the business school of what have you focuses attention in this room on whether we role over debentures, on whether we do it in April or March — can't come up with a reasoned, informed and intelligent decision. I do have a doubt that they can do it better than Standish and Wood, which are our present counsellors in that kind of business.

I do question whether that concern is of marginally profitable investment of a student governing board — as much as some others.

—second. You have got to realize that you came into a going concern just as much as I came into a going concern. The decision to go the building authority route and the bonds in the sixties, allowed this campus to go from 8,000 to 16,000 and it allowed access.

It could have gone the other way. It could have gone to capital outlay, we could have done no dormitories and private development. But in my judgement it was a prudent and a well intentioned decision and since it's here, I'll live with the consequences.

To the degree that any student, and we've experimented with it in a lot of ways, to the degree this student body wants to propose of students getting handle on these specific issues at the President's level and the Trustee's level, I'll be glad to take specific proposals.

Q: I'd like to say thank-you that you're glad to take things as they stand now. Obviously you're not living in the dormitories or paying that rent. You must be aware of a tenants strike going on in Married Students Housing here, there's public hearings coming up next week where students can get a chance to examine the system and speak out about all the dissatisfactions they've had for years.

I contest what you said in the paper for one thing about off-campus housing being more expensive than on-campus housing. I think that's wrong.

I might add that we might consider you a housing expert. When former President Johnson nominated you to be Undersecretary of the Dept. of Housing and Urban Development in 1966, he called you a major architect of the administration's urban program and an outstanding manager.

With credentials like this, you must take seriously these proposals dealing with housing problems. That is why we look at a report you helped write for the Johnson administration which suggests in part the organization of tenants' unions to fight large-scale slum lords (applause)... and a reform of such laws which might channel some of the tenants' resentment away from vandalism and rioting into more constructive paths of litigation.

Now you were just discouraging students and people in the University community from taking the routes of legalism. Now, are you advocating ... that students take the route of more vandalism and rioting? (applause)

Wood: No!

Q: I'd like to say that I find a lot of comments and responses you are making are very useless and meaningless because you can agree with us as much as you want and say, I agree with you, I believe in the same thing. But then you go back to Boston and then a whole different scenario happens. I mean I'm taking you with a whole bunch of grains of salt.

Wood: Your judgement on either my effectiveness or sincerity is your affair. One man's poison is another man's circus, but on tenant unions, on Model Cities and what we undertook to do in the Johnson administration, that is a part of a program that I put a lot into, believe a lot into.

If you want to come back on a specific of a tenant situation in a University context on a debt-service scheme that is non-profit character, and in which there isn't a slum landlord involved, then I'll be happy to sit down.

My judgement is that your 235's and 236's in the lower Pioneer Valley came in at a lower level than your latest of your dorms. My judgement is that if you take your average rents of DCA here, the last time I looked at them, vs. the average dormitories, the differential went the other way.

But that was a response to Bill Densmore on a general situation. I'd have to look at that.

Q: There's a good deal of profit being made here when the bondholders invested ten million for construction of dormitories, the tax-exempt interest rate on these bonds will accumulate to the point when these bonds are through being paid for, they'll have $25 million coming back to them.

Wood: That's an established rate...

Q: What do you call that, is that profit, or...

Wood: That's ... that is ... that is not a tax depreciation, 39 per cent annual capitalization profit. That's not a landlord profit, that's landlord profit.

But that's a topic I guess I'll leave for a special session. Anyone who wants to go back to urban affairs time I enjoy being back there.

Well, thank-you very much.

PRESIDENT MCGRATH: Thank-you President Wood.

Bus capacity insufficient

"We wish we had the capacity to supply the demand. Hopefully it will improve," said Bob Godding, Director of the Student Senate Transit Service, about the UMass bus system.

The number of buses on campus presently is limited, with a total of 16 transit buses. Most of them are in use at the peak periods of the day, which are from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m. and 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

During those hours, eight or nine vehicles are utilized for off-campus routes, while six are running on campus. A limited number of buses are also used for "outreach service," which have routes to Belchertown Center, South Amherst, and South Deerfield.

According to Godding, it is usually necessary for 15 percent of the buses to be held at the garage for maintenance, in case of an accident or if a bus breaks down during a run.

Steve Schwartz, one of approximately 130 students involved in the Student Senate Transit Service, cited several problems concerning the service. A driver for the past four semesters, Schwartz said the buses are overcrowded at times, especially during the peak hours.

He said, however, that he tries not to leave anyone behind, particularly when it is raining or snowing. He noted there is "a definite need for more buses."

Last year, due to the energy crisis, nearly 17,000 UMass students utilized the buses daily. "If gas is in short supply again," Godding remarked, "perhaps we'll have the same problem this year."

Godding suggested a possible remedy in order to help alleviate the problem of overcrowded buses. "If people will find a bus that comes 10 minutes earlier or later than the one they normally take, it may have more room," he proposed.

New male contraception results show promise

By MARK CITRON

A new method of male contraception that also has possibilities as an anti-tumor agent was announced recently by a Purdue researcher at the national meeting of the American Chemical Society.

The contraception method, termed a break-through by many scientists, inhibits sperm production by blocking the action of a sugar needed for sperm formation. The importance of this method is that is shows none of the side effects of other male contraceptive methods presently under development. Other contraception methods, such as hormonal manipulation and chemical agents, have the problems of rendering subjects permantly infertile, interfering with sexual drives (libido), and reacting detrimentally with other body cells.

The discoverer of the method, Roy L. Whistler, relies on the chemical 5-Thio-d-Glucose to interfere with the uptake of the sugar D-glucose by testicular cells. For unknown biochemical reasons, the ability of the testes to produce sperm is directly related to the amount of D-Glucose absorbed by testicular cells. When D-Glucose was depleted in the testes, it was shown in experimental animals to cause infertility without harmful side effects.

Whistler and his associates showed in other experiments that 5-Thio-d-Glucose inhibited tumor cells from reproducing, and also reduced their number by as much as 40 percent.

Illusionist to appear on campus this week

America's leading illusionest, Andre' Kole, will be performing in Bowker Auditorium next Tuesday.

One of the foremost inventors of magical effects today, Kole, has performed in 61 nations on 5 continents where he has spoken to more than 2,600 separate university audiences. Last year, 78 million people saw him perform on television.

Kole is being brought here by Campus Crusade.

A local representative, John Fittz, says that Kole has performed at UMass twice before; the last time was three years ago." His show is an unusual and elaborate stage production presenting some of the greatest illusions ever concieved in the minds of men and the greatest reality ever revealed to men," according to Fittz. In the lecture demonstration Kole will explore areas of psychic healing and communication with the dead.

Viet vets left out in Boston's parade

By JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

Last Monday, over 100,000 people observed the Veterans Day Parade in Boston.

They watched the military precision of the V.F.W., the American Legion, the Massachusetts National Guard, and the State Police. They saw a separate group of World War I Vets, various high school bands, the Boy Scouts, a Boston Police Car, and three police motorcycles. They heard a Legion representative in one of the motorcycles telling them "the parade is over. Thank you all for coming."

But behind the end of the 12,000 people parade, they saw a group of Vietnam Veterans in old field jackets, carrying banners and voicing support for unconditional amnesty, single type military discharges, and increased benefits. These veterans were not allowed into the parade.

The group consisted of about 30 people from the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs at UMass., Amherst, the North Essex Community College Vets, and the V.V.A.W. in Boston.

They had sent two letters to the American Legion requesting entry into their parade. The letters were not answered.

Being Veterans, they decided they had a right to join in anyway, but the American Legion and M.D.C.Mounted Police forced them out of the parade and remained between the veterans and the street to make sure they didn't try to re-enter.

Eventually, the Boston Police told the group that they could march behind everyone else or they couldn't participate at all. The veterans decided to co-operate. Along the parade route they were joined by other people, including a number of students distributing free Kool Aid, until there were up to 75 people marching.

The reaction of the observers was mixed. The group was greeted by emotional applause at many points along the route and some observers told them "You people are the best part of the parade." Other people called them "Commies" and said; "Go back to Russia," "cowards" and "How did they let you bums in?"

Although the Vietnam Veterans were generally received warmly, by the people watching, the military reviewing stands emptied as the group approached. These veterans were ignored by those officials who were honoring all the others in the parade.

Students join picket line

By STEVE ROWLEY
Staff Correspondent

Students from the Five College area will join workers from Holyoke on a picket line at the Shop-Rite store in Holyoke Saturday.

The picket line, beginning at 11 a.m. and ending at 4 has been called in hopes of convincing the Shop-Rite chain to stop stocking scab produce. Rides leaving from the Newman Center at 10:30 have been arranged in hopes of drawing support from otherwise campus-bound students.

It is hoped that through such efforts as these such a commitment will be gained from the chain. Shop-Rite, at this time is one of two chains in Western Massachusetts continuing to undermine the efforts of the United Farmworkers Union.

It has been only through the efforts of the students in the area and the consumers that such committments were brought about in confrontations with the other food chains.

Students at all five colleges are participating in the Western Massachusetts boycott network. A committee at Smith College has taken on the responsibility of picket lines at a Northampton liquor store while another at Hampshire has organized a teach-in and lecture to be held Sunday. Left with the task of concentrating on the Shop-Rite store in Chicopee and reinforcement of previous commitments are UMass, Amherst and Mt. Holyoke students.

Also planned for the month of November is a film series concerned with the farmworkers and their plight. The series will take place at both Hampshire College and UMass in hopes of attracting more student support for LaCausa.

Part of a nationwide network ot boycott committees, the students in this area are actively participating in the New England lettuce, grape and Gallo wine boycotts. They are assisting in pressuring California agribusiness to allow workers free elections with regard to union representation.

Contacts at the Five Colleges include Mack Lee at Hampshire, Jane Frei at Mount Holyoke, MaryJane Maccardini at Smith, John Rivera at UMass and Paul Mansfield at Amherst.

It is through these representatives or regular Wednesday night meetings at UMass that interested students, faculty or residents of the area my volunteer their services in strengthening the boycott.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, November 1 — Born today, you possess exceptional business sense. Money, profit, how best to deal in business matters to achieve a lot of both: This is your greatest commercial asset.

On the other hand, you are somewhat inclined to jump the gun, to attempt to close deals before they are quite ripe, ready to grant the highest yield. It is an inclination that can spoil the effectiveness of your business talents completely if you let it. Cultivate patience, be calm, and you will be on the right track!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care that another's tale of woe does not induce you to take on more than you can comfortably bear today. Be guided by your physical well-being.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A barrier to your forward motion where new projects are concerned can be circumvented today if you are careful to follow directions exactly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Plan for a weekend of moderation. If you allow yourself to be persuaded into activities unsuited to your temperament, both you and friends will suffer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take care that in your effort to progress you don't try to accomplish too much. There will be time enough in future to catch up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The wise Pisces will be selective about his activities for the day. Matters on the employment scene will otherwise take a turn for the worse.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Afternoon commitments are such that you would do well to seek a restful morning. Take another's wishes into consideration in the evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — An early morning disruption of plans on the home front must not be allowed to spoil an otherwise fruitful day. Take what you hear with a grain of salt.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You can be an effective listening post for those who are troubled this morning. Co-workers may take advantage of your good nature; let them.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Keep to plans made earlier in the week if you possibly can. To alter your schedule at this point could cause a confusion of aims.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Others have laid out an especially good plan of action for you; be wise and follow it to the letter. Otherwise, you may find yourself facing failure.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A fast-pace day which may take its toll of temperaments. Don't be surprised should arguments result from early morning tension.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Apply your talents to the job at hand with more vigor than usual. You may have to go around an obstacle or two before you can move ahead.

The Junior Minutemen, sporting a 2-1 record, travel to Chestnut Hill Sunday with hopes of defeating rival Boston College. In undefeated B.C., Coach Maxwell's team will play its biggest and most talented opponent. Boston College is 4-0 with wins over Mass. Maritime, Harvard, Brown, and Bridgeton Academy.

UMass led by quarterbacks Czerapowicz and Harrington, will show B.C. a diversified offense averaging 30 points per game. The outcome, however, will be decided by defense as UMass must sustain itself to win. Game time is 3:00 at Alumni Stadium.

Ruggers vs BH

By TOM CROWLEY
Sports Staff

The UMass Rugby Football Club has a chance to revenge itself on the Beacon Hill Rugby Football Club this Saturday behind Boyden, near the baseball field. The Beacon Hill FFC has beaten UMass two years running during the spring tournament. It is also one of the best teams in New England and this is the best chance to beat them.

The ruggers are currently 4-2 and coming off a 15-3 loss to Brown the present Ivy league champ. Brown is also undefeated and one of the best teams in New England.

The first game starts at 12:30, with a B and a C game to be played afterwards. After the first tilt, there will be beer and later on, a party.

WMUA

Saturday the Minutemen try to bounce back from their disappointing 10 - 9 loss to Connecticut, as they travel to Hamilton, New York to take on the Red Raiders of Colgate. Hear all the action at 1:20 as Russ Small and Larry Convoy bring you Minutemen Football on the Voice of the Minutemen, WMUA 91.1 FM.

Eighth-week panorama

Heading into the eighth week of the football season, the National Football League standings look quite different than those of recent years. The St. Louis Cardinals, featuring the "big play" and the leadership of once mediocre Jim Hart, have reeled off seven straight victories. The New England Patriots are tied with Buffalo for the AFC Eastern Division lead, and the two teams meet this weekend for the second time in three weeks. The Bills, you may recall, handed New England its only loss two Sundays ago, by the score of 30-28. And when was the last time you can remember Tom Landry's Cowboys being under the .500 mark at this stage of the season?

The UMass Minutemen, as the result of an all but impotent offense, can now at best hope for a share of the Yankee Conference title. Jim Torrance has been a bright spot for the Minutemen, 4-3 on the year, but the key to the entire season was the seventh game....and unfortunately UMass saw its Beanpot hopes blocked in those final seconds against UConn.

After last week's somewhat "third class" showing of 8-6, the reliability of my method may be in doubt, but hopefully following fourteen picks will be of some reassurance.

COLGATE 19; UMASS 7

Not much can be said for the Minutemen after the disappointing outcome of the UConn game, except that the rest of the 1974 season will mean very little.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 27; BUFFALO BILLS 24

The Pats gained the respect of Minnesota last Sunday with a last-second triumph. New England should be out to prove a point — that the "Electric Company" can be short-circuited — much to the delight of the Schaefer Stadium crowd.

DETROIT LIONS 28; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 21

The Saints will have their two game upset streak stopped in Detroit as Lions pick up fourth consecutive win.

HOUSTON OILERS 17; NEW YORK JETS 14

Dan Pastorini has the Oilers on the move and the Jets will continue to battle Baltimore, San Diego and Bill Arnsparger's Giants for poorest record in the NFL.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 20; PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 17

This one may be closer than expected, but 5-1-1 Steelers should prevail versus Roman Gabriel and the Eagles.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 21; BALTIMORE COLTS 7

Against the Oilers, Cincinnati committed numerous costly mistakes and allowed the most points in their five seasons at Riverfront Stadium. This week, however, Bengals will get Coach Paul Brown his 200th professional victory.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 14; CHICAGO BEARS 6

If Fran Tarkenton can control his frustrations and remain in the game, Vikings should collect victory number six.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 28; DALLAS COWBOYS 24

Probably the biggest question here is whether or not the Cards will lose the rest of the season. St. Louis has a highly talented squad and the Cowboys are having some problems.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS 21; GREEN BAY PACKERS 20

The Pack should give the Redskins a fight, but if Washington gets in trouble, Sonny Jurgensen's two-minute offense should preserve victory for the 'Skins.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 35; DENVER BRONCOS 24

Raiders have won six weeks in a row, and although Broncos are improved, Charlie Johnson and teammates are no match for Oakland.

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 13; NEW YORK GIANTS 10

Len Dawson returned to the KC lineup after missing four games with a back injury and sparked the Chiefs past San Diego last Sunday. Unless Craig Morton can get New York moving on offense, Kansas City, regardless of who is quarterbacking, will be victorious.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 21; ATLANTA FALCONS 14

Miami isn't the same — as displayed a week ago when Benny Malone and Don Nottingham filled in for the Dolphins' injured running backs. Atlanta is a very inconsistent team, however, and the result should be a Miami win.

CLEVELAND BROWNS 31; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 28

The Browns have improved over the past few games, and even though they had to call on reserve QB Brian Sipe to overcome Broncos, San Diego will lose once again.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 30; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 14

All the previous Monday night games have been close, but Rams should dominate.

LAST WEEK'S RECORD: 8-6 .571
SEASON'S RECORD: 57-23-1 .704

Correction

A photo in yesterday's "Collegian" incorrectly identified a UMass weightlifter as Fred Myerson. The picture was, in fact, of Doug Cooney, captain of the UMass weightlifting team.

Quick count for Foreman--Ali

KINSHASA, ZAIRE [UPI] — Muhammad Ali conceded Thursday George Foreman may have been the victim of a quick count, but said had the fight continued the beaten ex-champion would have been "seriously hurt."

The 32-year-old new Heavyweight Champion made his comments before boarding a Rome-bound jetliner for his return to the United States.

He also revealed at the airport he had received offers to defend his title in London and an unnamed Arab country for $10 million.

Foreman and his manager Dick Sadler both said originally they had no quarrel with the way referee Zach Clayton handled Wednesday's fight, but upon reconsidering, Foreman claimed he was beaten by a short count and by Ali's handlers, who, he claims, loosened the ring ropes to aid their man.

Foreman claimed the count was only 8½ seconds. He asked that the knockdown be timed from the tapes of the fight.

"My head was clear at four," said Foreman, who went down from a left-right combination delivered by Ali. "In my mind I picked it up at four and beat the count."

Rozelle says no WFL merger

NEW YORK [UPI] — Amid increased speculation that several World Football League franchises are near collapse, the National Football League owners have decided to take a hard line, hoping the WFL will fall on its own.

"There will be no complete nor partial merger with the WFL," said NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle Thursday, "Nor will any of its team be taken in the NFL. I say this very strongly and with complete certainty, even more certainly than I said it about the American Football League."

Rozelle announced plans Wednesday for the addition of four teams, two in 1976 and two more that year or later, bringing the league to 30 teams but insisted that none of these teams would come from the WFL.

Gridders trek to Colgate

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

Tomorrow, white teeth or not, the Minutemen are going to brush with Colgate.

Indubitably, when Colgate University and UMass clash in upper New York state (WMUA, 1:20) they'll engage in more than mere brush-ups against each other; in fact, there'll be enough contact at Andy Kerr Stadium to ruin many a clean, bright, movie-star-closeup smile.

The Red Raiders are coming off a 24-18 last minute victory over Lafayette (that powerhouse), which was achieved mostly on the ground. Since the UMass defense has yet to allow a touchdown rushing this year, it should be one of those intriguing "irresistable-object-against-immovable-force" (or whatever) match-ups.

"Our defense has played very well", says Dick MacPherson. "We shut out Maine. We shut out Dartmouth...in fact, the only bad defensive game we've had was against Vermont."

It's good news for the locals that Colgate doesn't have a great passing game, since UMass doesn't have a great pass defense. The story of the Red Raider offense should be three yards and a mound of bodies.

As for the UMass offense, it should be more of the same, with the running attack making up for the lack of an aerial attack. But, "we've got to mind our P's and Q's, and not make the mistakes like we have before," warns MacPherson.

Mistakes for the Minutemen have come in all kinds of packages. Last week against UConn they came in the form of six fumbles (three of them lost), two interceptions, and a new twist: a blocked field goal. Not exactly your devastating, well-oiled offensive machine...

What has been devastating, however, has been the quarterback situation. Brian McNally was struck with Fred Kelliher disease (shoulder separation) in last week's game, and will undergo the knife today. It is not definite yet whether Mark Tripucka or Peter Colton will start at the helm vs. Colgate. Freshman field generals Joe Harrington and John Czerapowicz will dress for the game.

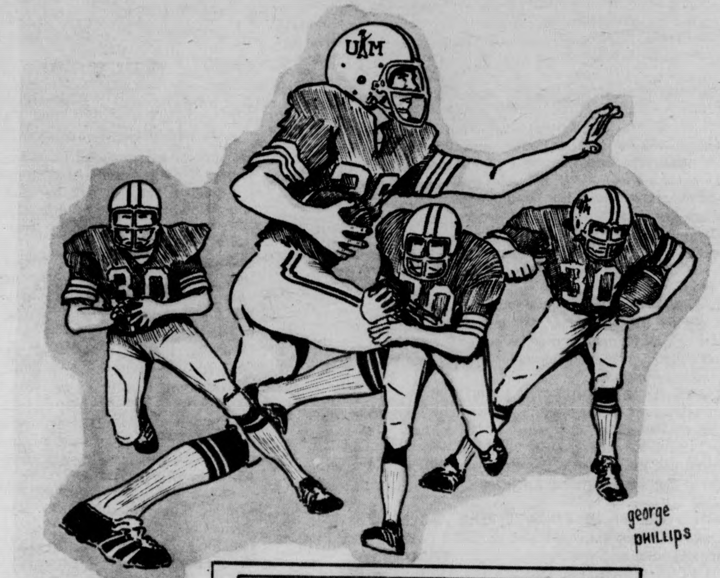
The last (and only) time UMass met Colgate, they were routed 25-0 in 1914. There are few returning Minutemen from that team, so it's doubtful revenge will be much of a motive for UMass.

On the injury front, guard Ned Deane's elbow ("It still hurts, but it's better than before") won't sideline him. And linebacker, co-captain Dennis Kiernan, also injured last week, is healing and he should start.

LATE HITS — John Romboli was cited as a Yankee Conference All-Star last week on the strength of his fake punt run that set up UMass' only touchdown. Jim Torrance, who garnered 149 rushing yards and carried the team on his back during the final blocked-field-goal drive, was curiously ignored...

UMass passers (McNally, Tripucka, and Colton) completed an outrageous two of fifteen attempts against UConn. That's a Garo Yepremian passing percentage...

The MacPherson-Men are 3-2 in the Yankee Conference, 4-3 overall. They play at Holy Cross next Saturday and will finally be seen in these parts again when New Hampshire comes in to finish the YanCon slate two weeks hence....



JIM TORRANCE, 6'2", 212 LB. FULL-BACK FROM RYE, NEW YORK, WILL CONTINUE HIS POWERFUL GROUND GAINS TOMORROW, AS THE MINUTEMEN TRAVEL TO COLGATE.

Soccermen attempt to rebound at UVM

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

"It's the best we've been after a loss," said Coach Al Rufe about the morale of his UMass soccer Minutemen this week.

There is probably no other way that the Minutemen should be after their fine performance in their most recent contest last Saturday against UConn (which they lost, 1-0).

Today the Minutemen are travelling to Burlington, Vermont to take on the Catamounts of the University of Vermont.

The Vermont soccer squad has won the Yankee Conference championship three out of the eight years that the Conference has existed. This year so far their record is 6-3-2 overall and they are 2-2-1 in conference play. Coach Rufe commented, "Any team is tough on their home field, and Vermont is always tough, particularly up there."

But if the Minutemen can play the same type of aggressive game as they did Saturday against UConn, then the game might be tough, but they should be victorious.

Although the Yankee Conference title hopes for the Minutemen were diminished by Saturday's loss they still have a good chance to make the New England playoffs of the University division. The top four teams in New England make the tournament and right now the Minutemen are rated fourth in all of New England.

In relation to the tournament, Coach Rufe said, "to make the playoffs we've got to come away with a win against Vermont."

The Catamounts have lost in conference play to UConn as did the Minutemen, and to Rhode Island, who UMass beat.

They have beaten Boston University and New Hampshire and the Minutemen did the same to B.U. but have not yet played U.N.H. Finally, Vermont has tied Maine, a team that the Minutemen trounced up in Orono.

All this leads up to what could be a very interesting game starting at 3:00 today in Burlington.

UMass will probably be without the services of two starting fullbacks in the persons of Dean Lungu and Ken Banda. Both are out with knee injuries at the present time, and both will hopefully be ready by Wednesday for the Minutemen's very important contest with Springfield College, rated third, just ahead of the Minutemen, in New England.

QUICK SHOTS — Connecticut moved up to 4th in the nation after their victories over Brown and UMass last week. They exchanged places with Brown who moved down to tenth, the spot UConn held before last week. UConn and Springfield played two nights ago and Connecticut was the victor, 2-1, in what UMass Coach Al Rufe termed "a not too impressive performance by Springfield." Gary McKenna and Jim McDonough are expected to fill the holes in the lineup left by the absences of Lungu and Banda. After Vermont, the Minutemen come home to face Springfield College next Wednesday Nov. 6 at 3:00. Their last regular season game is next Saturday versus New Hampshire also at home.

Harriers vie for 5th straight title

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Step number one in what could be the biggest month in UMass cross country history will be winning the Yankee Conference champions, which are scheduled for tomorrow afternoon in Burlington, Vermont.

The Minutemen runners compiled a 9-2 record during the first part of the season, but previous statistics mean little. The performances of the first six meets as well as the practice and hard work that began when the 1973 ended, were all preparations for the final month of the current season.

UMass set a precedent in winning the YanCon title for the fourth consecutive time last year. Randy Thomas captured the individual title and the harriers outscored second place UConn 22-44. UMass held the Yankee Conference championship from 1951-1953, and for another three years beginning in 1960. Bob Brouillet earned individual honors in 1961, 1962 and 1963 for UMass. The only other year Massachusetts took the YanCon title was in 1966, and a year later, UConn earned the honor and held it for the next three seasons.

The harriers are well-rested, and according to Coach Ken O'Brien, workouts have been going well since the Manhattan-William and Mary meet three weeks ago.

The outlook for tomorrow's meet is much the same as it was a year ago. The UMass runners are expected to win again, with Vermont a strong bet for the runner-up spot. The Catamount squad, however, is not quite as strong as the UConn team that placed second last season. Bob Graves and Mike Berry pace the Vermont runners. A battle for third between New Hampshire, Maine and UConn is foreseen.

Defending champion Thomas will be challenged again by UConn's top harrier, Bruce Clark. Clark finished second in the conference last season, ten seconds behind Thomas, but has not been running as well this year. George Reed can also be considered a threat to Thomas' title hopes. Reed finished tenth in the 1973 conference meet, and the UNH sophomore placed first in the Codfish Bowl Championships with a fast time of 23:59 on the Franklin Park course. Reed won the Yankee Conference two mile during the track season and has shown some improvement since then. Other individual standouts include Gerald LaFlamme of Maine and Paul Piliero of URI. LaFlamme was fifteenth in the conference a year ago and Piliero finished first in the dual meet against UMass two weeks ago.

The times should be fast because the race is being run on the Burlington Golf Course, a layout which features several rolling hills but few demanding inclines.

Thomas, Bill Gillin, Tom Wilson, John McGrail, Tom Maguire, Chris Farmer and Cliff Staples will be favored to capture YanCon team honors, but of greater importance, each successive championship meet will depend on the team's performance the previous week. Coach O'Brien pointed out that Maguire is the key to the team's future success. Maguire was the team's third man last season, but suffered through a sluggish start due to illness. The junior harrier has improved and if Maguire can better his efforts of 1973, chances are November, 1974 will be remembered as the month in which the UMass cross country team accomplished great things.

Amherst College to go co-ed

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Beginning in the Fall of 1975 New England will no longer have an all male liberal arts college. Amherst College Board of Trustees voted Saturday 15—3 in favor of admitting women.

Next year about 100 women transfer students will enter into sophmore and junior classes, and in 1976 women will be entering into the freshman class.

George L. Shinn, chairman of the board of trustees said a decision on whether transfer students will be admitted from the five-college area has not been made.

The college will expand from its present enrollment of 1300 to approximately 1500 and the student faculty ratio will change from the present ration of 8.5 to 1 to approximately 10 to1.

The trustees announced that modification in the physical plant, gymnasium facilities and rest rooms, will be made to accommodate the admission of women. "There will be a manageable increase in the operating budget and there will be no new building of dormitories" said President John W. Ward. Also, about 10 per cent of the male students will now be able to live off-campus.

Shinn said, "the major stumbling block was not the reaction of the alumni but the principal concern centered around the size of the college and the quality of education".

The alumni over the years have been huge financial donors. Last month the governing body of the alumni voted preference for single sex education while the faculty and student assembly overwhelmingly voted for co-education.

Ward said' "inflation had nothing to do with the decision." "The compelling desire was to have Amherst College maintain a pre-eminent spot in higher education," said Shinn.

About 100 students anxiously waited outside of the Presidents office for the historical decision and when the decision was announced live by WAMH, a student run radio station, there was an immediate burst of shouting and clapping. The Amherst Student, a bi-weekly newspaper, printed a special edition with banner headlines "We're Coed".

Richard Rodman, class of '77, said, "the decision came three years too late but now Amherst College will become a sane place."

The drive for co-education began in 1969 when students approved a resolution calling for the admission of women to the college. At the same time a casebook about the pros and cons of co-education was drafted.

Presently, each year there are 25 women on campus as part of a 12-college exchange program.

Gordon sees Democrat landslide

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

The head of the UMass political science department says that after the ballots are counted tomorrow night, 1974 will become the year for the Democrats since 1958.

Professor Glen Gordon cautioned, however, that the big gains for the democrats could work against them. He said Republican politicians, as well as the voting public will thus be able to blame the democrats more for "what's going on." So "it may not be so good in '76," Gordon speculated.

Gordon says the next governor of Mass. will be Michael Dukakis. But Gordon added his victory margin will be "not as big" as some polls are predicting.

Sargent's loss, the professor said, will be due in large part to conservative Republicans who will "stay at home" rather than vote for the liberal Sargent.

A strong point for Dukakis, Gordon says, is his running mate Thomas O'Neil," son of House Majority leader Thomas 'Tip' O'Neil. Gordon says O'Neil is a good "cohesion factor" for state democrats but more importantly, the party doesn't want "to upset the O'Neil family."

The closest state-wide race, as Gordon sees it, is between Attorney General candidates Francis Bellotti and Josiah Spaulding. The Professor would not call that race, but did say Spaulding has a "damn good chance."

Gordon says voters may not forget tomorrow that Bellotti, by challenging Chuck Peabody a few years ago for the governorship, was responsible for John Volpe getting elected.

Locally, Gordon said he'll be surprised if James Collins loses his seat in the General court to his Republican opponent Bill Atkins.

In New York, where former Attorney General and anti-war activist Ramsey Clark is challenging Jacob Javits for his senate seat, Gordon says Javits will come out on the top.

"Clark is running a good race, but I have trouble believing Javits can lose," said Gordon.

Congress to hear student union

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

A recommendation for student unionizing has been made by Larry Magid, Director of the UMass Student Center for Educational Research, to a national education commission.

The recommendation was made as part of a three year study established in August of 1971 by the U.S. Office of Education. The completed project will be edited and then presented to Congress this spring.

"The significance of this," said Magid yesterday, "is that it will make people in university administrations aware that the unionizing movement has high respectability. "This is a national recommendation for students to unionize," he said.

Magid was part of the commission as a representative of the National Student Association. Other commission members were government officials, and college presidents, deans and administrators.

"The commission's position," Magid said, "is an example of the growing right of students to control their education and have a role in the operation of institutions."

Magid pointed out that traditionally, institutions of higher education operated in a manner that was mysterious to students.

"Research would be conducted which was unclear to the students about whom the studies were done," he added. "Through student unionization we're trying to break down all the mystification and elitism which surrounds higher education."

The recommendation states in part that, "...students be guaranteed the right to organize, unionize and bargain collectively for their rights and interests. And that the Department of Labor...determine the legality and feasibility of federal and state recognition of Unions of Students to negotiate collectively on behalf of students enrolled in institutions of higher education."

In Brittany controversy tenants, lawyer converge

The court-appointed trustee for Tri-Colonial Realty, attorney E. David Mazzone of Wakefield, will meet with tenants of Brittany Manor and Mt. Sugarloaf apartments Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. in Campus Center 113 to discuss their obligations and options in the complexes' recent bankruptcy.

Also present will be William Ryan, who was appointed by Mazzone to manage Brittany Manor, and his assistant, Art Boothby.

Ryan told the Collegian last night that he was misquoted in Friday's Collegian as directing tenants to "refuse to pay their October rent in order to gain back their security deposit," when in fact he has been urging residents to continue to pay their rent.

Ryan, who stressed that he is "on the tenants' side," explained that witholding rent will only result in an eviction notice, whereas he was "hopeful" that the courts will eventually order Hancock Management to return the security deposits in full.

Ryan also warned against moving out of the financially troubled apartment complexes now because he said, "if you move out now you don't stand a chance" of getting your security deposit back."

Ryan and Boothby told the Collegian that they have been personally visiting residents of Brittany Manor, trying to explain what is going on, and urging them to continue paying their rent. Of the 78 tenants who were served eviction notices last week, said Boothby, at least 34 have since paid their October rent after he explained the situation to them.

Ryan claimed that there is no "organized rent strike" in Brittany; rather, he said, it's a case of "every man fending for himself."

Ryan and Boothby said they are trying to reach as many Brittany Manor residents as possible, and can be found in the Rental Office (apartment 105) between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Ching dance exhibits Japanese movements

By MARLA RICHMOND
Below the Salt Staff

Friday night 600 people with probably as many different expectations, attended the performance of the Chiang Ching Dance Company. Listed as An Evening of Chinese Dance: Classical Ethnic Contemporary, the company did indeed present varied views of Chinese Dance.

I am afraid that those who came to see a view of the People's Republic of China as it is today were sorely disappointed. Ms. Ching, who has been living in the United States since 1970, bases the dances for the most part on traditional Chinese patterns with her contemporary pieces appearing more Japanese than from the People's Republic.

Those seeking a demonstration of the Martial Arts found them in one section of the Traditional Chinese Reportory that was presented first and in the Tai Chi Sword Dance. The latter had no musical background or the shouts used in the former, and restless noises could be picked up in the audience.

The Reportory piece was simple and beautiful. Though European dance terms were listed beside the title of each piece, the total effect was far from European. Imitations of nature went from the very gentle "Dream" to the almost violent "Thunder on a Dry Day". The movements and expressions on the dancers' faces seemed much more real than in the traditional Western ballet.

The audience favored "Pulling the Turnip", and with good reason. The dance started with Kitty Mei-Mei as the happiest turnip I have ever seen seated in a huge turnip costum smiling and bouncing to the music. Ching then entered with very convincing little girl movements attempting to uproot the turnip. With the help of her friends, the deed is finally done and even the turnip seemed happy of it.

The thing that struck me the most was the contrast with traditional Western dances. The performers had real faces, not painted on smiles. Their bodies were not limited to superhuman, unnatural movements. The movements seemed human, even if they did take years of practice to get one simple movement. I guess I have never gotten over my awe of dancers who make the impossible look simple, these dancers were masters of it.

A dance of flowing movement

By DENNIS SUMAN
Staff Reporter

Last Friday evening the UMass Fine Arts Council presented the third offering in its Third World Cultural Series, "An Evening of Chinese Dance," with the Chiang Ching Dance Company.

The program consisted of two parts, beginning with a demonstration of the fundamentals of Chinese dance, and then, a series of Chinese ethnic folk dances, including Mongolian, Tibetian, Manchurian, and other. It was a night of visual grace and beauty, with the company portraying a broad range of themes and styles. Inhanced by subtle lighting affects, Chiang Ching and her group performed dances of constant flowing movement that left the audience spellbound.

Chiang Ching, who incidently is not related to Mao Tse Tung's wife, is the principal dancer, choreographer, business manager, and artistic director of the company. Born in Peking, she was chosen at the age of 10 to begin her studies at the Peking Dance Academy where she specialized in Chinese dance.

In the 1960's she made a tour throughout Southeast Asia in dancing and acting roles, appearing in leading roles in over two dozen films in Hong Kong and Taiwan where she received the "Best Actress" award in 1966. Chian has served on the faculties of the University of California at Berkeley San Francisco State University, and Hunter College, and has performed and conducted workshops at over 40 colleges and universities in the United States.

"The dances we do are derived from the Classical Chinese Repertory," Chiang said. Besides dancing to traditional Chinese music, Chiang also choreographed contemporary movements to the music of the noted composer Chou Wen-Chung, whose works have been regularly performed by orchestras and at festivals throughout the world.

Such dances were performed as the Tai Chi Sword Dance, one of the most popular of the traditional dances- a complex sequence of movements designed to acheive both physical and mental concentration, and "Pulling the Turnip," a popular Chinese children's story of a little girl who learns to work with others and what cooperation can accomplish.

Today at 1:25, Chiang will perform a demonstration of her art in the WOPE auxiliary gym. It is open to the public free of charge.

Smoke at Knowlton no Halloween prank

By LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporter

In keeping with the spirit of Halloween last week, the women of Knowlton staged a bizarre party on North Pleasant Street early Friday morning. To motorists driving by at 2 a.m. the 140 girls clad in pajamas and curlers could have been filming a Fellini classic. Yet, the truth lies somewhere closer to reality. A real fire alarm signaled the evacuation of Knowlton dorm.

Smoke throughout the first floor alarmed two Knowlton residents, Jennifer Burke and Michele Amrich. They believed the smoke to be coming from the apartment of Marian Kowacki, Knowlton's Head of Residence.

"First, we checked the first floor corridor, the basement, the lounge, the kitchenette and outside," said Michele. "Then," she added, "we sniffed at Marian's door; it came from there."

They first tried banging on his door and telephoning his room but there was no answer. Also, at the time, the fire alarm was pulled and the police were called to alert the fire department.

Chief Dougherty and Lt. Chudzik of the Amherst Fire Department logged in their Official Report the response to the alarm at 1:57 a.m. Friday morning. They assumed command of three fire engines and one ladder truck. They "found nothing"; no cause for the fire and odor after a thorough search that lasted approximately 20 minutes.

Marian's apartment was searched thoroughly and there was no sign there of the smoke's origin. "They checked here and found nothing. They checked the screens and nothing could have been thrown in," he said. It was at the same time that Wendy, Michele, and Jennifer were pounding on his door leading to his apartment, that Marian received a phone call from a resident asking how she could gain entrance to the locked doors. He hung up and opened the door. "I saw smoke. I just said, 'Get the people out of here.' I have no idea of what caused it."

Residents' original reaction were mostly of the opinion that the fire alarm was a Halloween prank.

Campus groups evaluate Collegian coverage

By BILL PARENT
Staff Reporter

A recent report representing the views of ten campus groups evaluates the coverage these organizations have been receiving from the paper. The purpose of the report, compiled by two members of the Veteran's Coalition, was to assess the manner in which the Collegian has been handling the coverage of campus issues and events and to make recommendations for improvement.

The organizations which took part in the evaluation process were the Everywoman's Center, the Student Organizing Project, the Student Center for Educational Research, the Student Homophile League, the Gay Women's Caucus, the Poverty Committee, the Young Workers Liberation League, the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ), the Veteran's Coalition for Community Affairs, the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Oppression and the Commuter Assembly.

The report was divided into four sections; the first consisting of a general introduction, the second being a summary of each groups answers to questions asked, the third section, labeled 'general findings', was a compiled list of grievances, and the fourth section dealt in suggestions for improvement.

The questions asked of the groups covered a wide range. Beginning with their general feeling toward the Collegian as a whole, to the question of whether any stories submitted by or reported on their particular group had been lost, poorly edited or distorted by a member of the staff; and participants were asked their opinion of the ratio of national news to campus news in the Collegian.

The major grievance against the paper was stated to be poor coverage of campus issues and activities which, as was written in the report "shortchanged" both the students and the organizations. Kay Marion, the spokesperson for Everywoman's Center (EWC), claimed that the EWC received better coverage last year from the Greenfield Recorder than from the Collegian. As an example Marion noted "there's no coverage of how the University is meeting-not meeting its affirmative action plan, what controversies are handled by the Advisory Board to the Infirmary (particularly regarding health services for women) or the blatant discrimination against women on campus..." C.E.Q. termed this problem "a lack of awareness in student and administrative activities". Other groups voicing similar disapproval of campus coverage included the Veteran's Coalition and the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Oppression and the Commuter Assembly.

Another major complaint centered around poor reporting and shabby editing on the part of the staff. Though the report admitted that Collegian people are human and apt to make mistakes, it went on to say "the printed word does hold a subtle power in the formulation or the influence of people's opinions. Because of this, objectivity must not be sacrificed for mere style, accuracy must not be sacrificed for color. Fact must not be interwoven with opinion in the telling of one's story by another. And the complete story must not be sacrificed for only a part of it."

Speaking on behalf of the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Oppression, Isabel Johnson related an event that happened to her at the beginning of this semester.

The last complaint was in response to racist and sexist attitudes in Collegian reporting. Marion Kay mentioned that some women students could not work for the paper due to "the impossibility of working with the male Collegian staff due to sexist attitudes."

Isabel Johnson carried the idea further by saying "it is also racist, male supremicist and anti-communist".

In its last analysis, though, the report stated "it is beyond the scope of this report to provide concrete examples concerning this finding due to the gravity of the issue. Nevertheless, the implications themselves cannot be overlooked."

There were positive statements also concerning the Collegian. Katy Clift and John Pepi of the Student Organizing Project gave acclaim to recent coverage of their unionizing project. Also, in giving the views of the Student Center for Educational Research, Lawrence J. Magid said that "During the week of October 7 through the 11, the Collegian carried a number of articles which demonstrated the kind of journalism which dominate the paper. John Pepi's piece on housing, Avis Unis articles on the Campus Center workers and other investigative reporting represents good journalism and sound editorial policy for a campus paper. The Collegian is to be congratulated on its improvement."

The report ended by giving various recomendations being that a beat reporter system be set up so that each organization has a reporter to act as a "contact" between the group and the Collegian. The second recommendation was that the Collegian run feature articles on all campus groups, their purpose and their goals.

Groups also would like to have space allocated to them so that they can be guaranteed to have their articles and releases printed.

Other suggestions were for the Collegian to strive for more objective reporting and more careful editing. The report also stressed a need for more campus and staff input into Collegian Policy decisions.

Finally a reminder was made that the Collegian staff be more aware of the implications involved in sexist and racist reporting.

Johnson had submitted a report of her group's history and purpose which had been rejected by Bill Densmore, Managing Editor of the Collegian, on the grounds that it did not meet the standards of journalism. Johnson later contacted Densmore in regard to having the article printed in both English and Spanish. Densmore then allegedly mixed segments of their phone conversations to produce a story which was printed but, she said, "....the meaning of the original article was altered."

Some of the organizations agreed, in reference to the editorial staff that there has been too much power in the hands of too few at the Collegian. Veteran's Coalition said "the proportion of meaningful news to garbage is disgraceful, and this reflects the ideas of the editorial board".

This complaint was also echoed by various groups upset by the fact that articles and Letters to the Editor have been, at times completely ignored by the Editors. Tom Coffey of the Commuter Assembly said, "Preferance should be given to special interest groups in getting letters printed the next day, instead of waiting as long as two weeks."

Parking fee no deterrent to cars on campus

By MARTIN J. WATERS
Staff Reporter

Until 1973 the UMass bus system was old relics making campus-only runs, paid for by the undergraduate student senate; the parking system charged everybody the same tiny amount.

This is the first in a two-part report on the parking set-up 18 months after the big change.

A decision by the UMass parking office designed as an economy move has apparently cost users of the parking system several times more money than it saved.

Officials of the parking system say that the sharp increase in fees has not discouraged the use of cars on campus, as had been hoped.

Robert W. Kittle, director of parking and transportation, took charge of the system in Oct. 1973, soon after the graduated fee structure and expanded bus service were introduced.

He first worked as parking coordinator, and in July moved to the office of H. Jack Littlefield, Jr., the University's director of planning.

A major snafu of administrative procedure in the parking office last spring resulted in notification by mail of some in the campus community about a renewal deadline, but no notification for others.

"Frankly, it surprised me," Kittle said, "We do want to come up with something better to reach people."

The problem arose when Kittle decided to cut expenses by sending parking renewal forms only through campus mail, braking an annual practice of using first class mail.

Many of the 10,000 patrons did not receive any direct notice of the May 15 cut-off date because they had not listed a campus address, according to Kittle.

Other large groups do not have a campus address-notably commuting undergraduates. Some graduate students also fall in this category.

There was another problem, Kittle said. Staff and faculty members who failed to list a campus address also did not get the mailing. Repeated notices in The Collegian and the University Bulletin, a weekly newsletter circulated to staff and faculty, were intended to reach these groups.

"Many people told me they never read The Collegian, or never look at the Bulletin, but there is an individual responsibility at some point to keep informed of the community situation," Kittle said.

The parking office saved perhaps as much as $500, but the additional $2 charge levied on patrons who missed the May 15 deadline, cost patrons several thousand dollars.

Delays and confusion which were widespread among parking patrons this fall can be partially attributed to the mailing decision. Kittle and parking coordinator Susan C. Tie say late delivery of parking decals compounded the problem.

As many as 25 per cent (over 2000) of the participants intending to renew their places in the parking system did not do so by May 15, Kittle estimates.

Late registrants were charged $5, instead of the $3 pre-May 15 fee, and lost top priority in the system. They competed with new applicants for parking spaces.

The late-comers brought more than long lines stretched along the sidewalk of Massachusetts Avenue during September. The parking office received $4000 or more in apparently unintended revenue.

Kittle says he wants to improve on last spring's method but still hoped to avoid the cost of a first class mailing for 1975-76 parking renewals.

The chairperson of the 14-member parking and transportation council, Dr. Alan J. Gross of the division of public health, said, "I questioned the mailing procedure. We did get complaints on it and I can see people being upset. It was a snafu that took place."

Daily administrative activities are not the subject for council debate, and the only early notice members received about the procedures being used was unspecific. Renewal packets "are in the mail," Kittle wrote in a March 14 memo.

It appears the main effect of the steep increase in parking fees started in Sept. 1973 has been a healthy subsidy for free bus service. The talk of reducing traffic congestion and pollution, encouraging car pools and eventually eliminating cars from the central campus has faded.

Kittle and Tie, the two chief administrators of the parking system, say they are disappointed in the response.

"I don't think it's made a bit of difference," Kittle said, referring to the increase in fees. "The energy crisis ended too soon to encourage pooling and bus riding," he added.

"I think students are basically satisfied with the system, in fact most complaints we still get are from staff and faculty," Kittle said.

Even at the higher rates, he rejects charges that the parking system is "a rip-off." According to Kittle, the most expensive lot costs less than 20 cents per day.

Tie said her contact with people and processing of forms shows students parking in the inexpensive peripheral lots, with staff and faculty paying the high price to park where they work.

Strong opposition to the planned closing of the central parking lots and support for charging fares to bus riders come mainly from staff and faculty.

Tomorrow-the coming master parking and transportation plan; bus fares? grass instead of asphalt?

Correction

A story in Friday's Collegian indicated that Chancellor Bromery singled out Gov. Sargent as making a mistake in his rejection of a state-operated law school at UMass.

However, Bromery did not single out Sargent. Bromery said that he thought neither gubernatorial candidate was in favor of the proposal.

"Best morning since hospitalization"

Doctors remove Nixon from critical list

LONG BEACH, Calif., (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon was taken off the critical list yesterday for the first time in six days. He continued to show increased strength since a brush with death brought on by post-operative complications.

"It's his best morning since hospitalization began," Nixon's physician, Dr. John C. Lungren, said in his daily medical bulletin.

Lungren said through hospital spokesman Norman Nager that the 61-year-old former chief executive began a soft food diet and would sit up later Sunday for the first time since entering the hospital for treatment of phlebitis Oct. 23.

Nixon had been fed intravenously during the critical period, until Saturday when he was first allowed to take consomme and gelatin.

Lungren said Nixon was now in "sub-intensive care," which he described as "a step down from critical care." The next less serious condition would be "intermediate care" but there was no indication when Nixon might be put in that category.

Nixon slept at intervals Saturday night, Lungren said. He described his patient's vital signs as normal.

Lungren said the blood clot in Nixon's left leg, which forced urgent surgery last Tuesday morning, had not enlarged.

The doctor said Saturday that internal bleeding near Nixon's abdomen had been stopped and the former president had received no blood transfusions since Thursday.

Connie Hamilton, director of critical care nursing at Memorial Hospital Medical Center, described Nixon as "physically quite ill" during a briefing to newsmen on a change in the nursing arrangement for Nixon.

She said two nurses had been in Nixon's room at all times during the critical period, but now there would be one nurse in the room. A backup nurse will remain on the top floor.

"Today's his first day up," she said. "That means he'll probably dangle his feet on the side of the bed."

Coal miners predict strike as talks lag

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contract talks bogged down yesterday and a top officer of the United Mine workers said: "At this point, there is no way to avert a coal strike."

U M W Secretary-Tresurer Harry Patrick accused the mine owners of "utter contempt" in the negotiations and said that with time running out they had not yet responded to the union's latest economic proposals.

"This is probably the darkest hour in the negotiations and at this point there is no way to avert a coal strike," Patrick told reporters during a break in the negotiations.

However, he said the union was willing to continue meeting with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association in hopes of settling.

The UMW's contract expires Nov. 12 and a tentative agreement would have to have been reached no later than Sunday to allow enough time to put it through the union's complex ratification process.

The negotiations resumed at 11 a.m. EST Sunday, but Patrick said the operators had made no response to the union's revised economic proposal submitted Saturday.

Congressional study says FTC unable to protect consumers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Trade Commission, despite continuing criticism, lacks strong leadership and is not living up to its role as a consumer protector, a congressional study said yesterday.

Part of the problem, it said, is that the appropriations committees of Congress may have worsened the situation with inconsistent directives.

"I am disappointed with the study's finding that there has been little progress in terms of increased output of consumer actions at the FTC, particularly in these times of skyrocketing consumer prices when the American public needs the greatest protection against unfair and deceptive practices," said Rep. John E. Moss, D-Calif., chairman of the House commerce subcommittee which produced the staff report.

Moss said the criticisms leveled against the FTC in 1969 by a Ralph Nader team and a task force from the American Bar Association in large part still remain valid.

The study shows there is a need for a closer look by Congress at the agency as well as a demand for legislation to improve the FTC's powers and performance, he said.

Calvin J. Collier, FTC general counsel, told UPI he was "puzzled" at some of the report's conclusions, especially one that questioned whether the agency needed an improved management system. He said Congress has been monitoring and funding the development of the system right along without complaining and the system is designed to accomplish "an extraordinarily difficult job" — keeping track of exactly how much money the FTC is spending and where it is going.

He said critics and other close observers, such as Ralph Nader, have, if anything, been complimentary about the agency's concentration on fewer numbers of cases but ones which are more meaningful.

Arafat cautions U.S. on taking oilfields

NEW YORK (UPI) — Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, warns in a magazine interview that the Soviet Union will intervene if the United States tries to secure Middle East oilfields militarily.

"The Israelis are trying to use what is called the energy crisis for blackmail," Arafat said in an interview in the latest issue of Time magazine.

"They are trying to convince the West that they can be the spearhead of what is called the military solution."

The guerrilla leader said any U.S. military action would be "an extremely misleading calculation if the Americans think other superpowers will not act."

"It is my understanding that a majority of members of the Israeli Knesset are against any withdrawal from the West Bank," he said.

Has spent $1.7 million this year

AFL-CIO outspends other interest groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — The AFL—CIO's political arm spent $297,861 in 10 days to help labor-approved candidates in tomorrow's elections, topping a list of last-minute spending by special interest groups.

A check of reports on file with the government shows the giant labor group's political spending in the most recent reporting period, from Oct. 15 to Oct. 24 inclusive, far outpaced that of other rich lobbies, including the American Medical Association, dairy cooperatives and big individual unions such as the United Auto Workers and Steelworkers.

Many of these other special interest groups, however, reported large amounts of cash on hand at present, and may be making large donations that won't be disclosed until next year.

The AFL—CIO now has reported spending $1.7 million since the first of the year for federal, state and local elections, the largest total for a single political committee.

More than half the money in the most recent period — $150,000 of it — went into the giant labor organization's "educational fund," which will pay for get-out-the-vote efforts aimed at helping candidates on election day.

The remainder of the money was given directly to 121 individual campaigns. The biggest donations were $5,000 each to three Democratic candidates for the Senate: Rep. Wayne Owens of Utah, Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, and Wendell H. Ford of Kentucky.

The AFL—CIO continued to make large donations even after Oct. 24. Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., reported by telegram that he got $5,000 from the labor federation. Owens also reported receiving an additional $6,000 from the AFL—CIO and a separate $5,000 donation from the Steelworkers.

The Auto Workers and the Steelworkers unions reported spending large sums in the most recent 10-day reporting period. The Auto Workers listed $98,160 and the Steelworkers reported $105,934.

The biggest sum given by the Auto Workers was $15,000 to James J. Blanchard, a Democrat trying to unseat conservative Republican Rep. Robert H. Hubert of Troy, Mich.

The Steelworkers gave $5,000 to Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y. $5,000 to Gary Hart, the former McGovern campaign manager now trying to best Sen. Peter Dominick, R-Colo., and $5,000 to John A. Durkin, Democratic candidate for the Senate in Vermont.

The nation's biggest dairy cooperative, Associated Milk Producers, Inc., had $1.6 million in cash on hand at the end of the reporting period, more than any other political trust.

Sargent outspends Dukakis 2-1 during gubernatorial campaign

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent spent about $2 for every $1 expended by his Democratic gubernatorial campaign opponent through mid-October.

However, despite inflation, the incumbent chief executive may not come close to spending as much as he did in the 1970 campaign.

Unofficial tabulations of expenditures at the state Campaign Finance Office show that Michael S. Dukakis, the Democratic nominee, has spent about $394,000.

Sargent's expenditures for this year were approximately $795,000. The Dukakis figure includes $10,000 in estimated expenditures for 1973. Sargent's start Jan. 1.

The state's Election Statistics publication for 1970 shows that the Republican gubernatorial effort that year cost $2,015,578. Sargent was unopposed for his party's nomination.

The Democratic gubernatorial campaign cost $1,458,523. The document does not give a breakdown on candidates. The Democrats had spirited competition at the pre-primary convention as well as in the primary itself for the party nomination.

In the past, there were frequent complaints that campaign filings were not very accurate.

The current law is much stricter, and some observers believe it has cut campaign war chests. One significant feature-the $1,000 limit for contributions in any one year-has had inpact.

The Dukakis campaign, which includes a substantial number of $1,000 contributors also records some rebates to individuals whose donations exceeded the limitation.

Younger, more liberal Senators expected to be elected tomorrow

WASHINGTON (AP) — Voters in 34 states elect senators tomorrow and the result is expected to be a younger, more liberal and more heavily Democratic Senate.

Twenty of the seats at stake are held by Democrats. Surveys indicate 14 of the Democratic candidates are safe bets for election and another 11 are leading.

Thus, the party that now holds 58 of the 100 seats could end up with 63, the most since the 1966 election.

Regardless of what happens tomorrow, the Senate that convenes in January will be one of the youngest in years because six of the 18 senior members, with a combined tenure of 148 years, are retiring.

Two other veterans — Sen, Milton Young, R-N.D., with 30 years of service, and Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., with 18 years — are facing serious challenges.

Eleven of the seats up for grabs are held by conservatives, but surveys indicate only four of those states are good bets to send conservatives back to the Senate. On the other hand, pre-election polls predict that all the 16 states where liberal-held seats are being filled will return generally liberal candidates to the Senate.

One result of the election is expected to be continued Senate battles with the White House over foreign policy, federal spending efforts to control inflation and recession.

But even if the polls are correct, there is little indication that the necessary 67 votes could be counted on whenever President Ford vetoes a bill.

Democrats rate Colorado as their best chance to take a Republican seat. Sen. Peter Dominick, 59, the Republican, is challenged by Gary Hart, 36, who managed Sen. George McGovern's ill-fated presidential campaign in 1972. Dominick is conservative; while his opponent is a liberal who has backed away from some of the positions taken by McGovern.

Democrats favored to win big in state

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts voters will re-elect an overwhelmingly Democratic House and Senate tomorrow with few possible surprises in the offing.

Democrats start out with 22 of their senators unopposed while Republicans have only three unchallenged incumbents in the 40-member body.

In view of redistricting and other factors, there is speculation that the GOP could be down to five or six seats in the next Senate. The party won only seven in the 1972 election and added one in a special election.

The Democrats have 107 unopposed nominees for the 240 single-member districts election to the House. The Republicans have only 19 free rides. There are 62 independents seeking House seats, including Rep. Terrence P. McCarthy of Oak Bluffs who is unopposed for a second term.

The gerrymandering that came with elimination of two-and-three-member districts apparently has clouded prospects for election gains by Republicans. The party emerged from the 1972 election with 52 seats and picked up another in the interim.

The redistricting automatically suspended the political careers of four Democrats and one Republican in the primary and another incumbent will go down tomorrow. In Franklin, Rep. George L. Woods Jr., R, and Rep. Robert E. Ficco, D, are competing for the same seat.

The turnover in January in both branches is expected to be minimal. The greatest turnover in the House comes in the 1968 election which produced 72 new faces.

There will be 51 new House members in January, plus challengers who defeat incumbents tomorrow. There were five vacancies when the legislature adjourned in August and 32 members, including one who received but declined the primary election nomination, did not seek new terms.

No leadership in busing dispute

Boston spiritual, academic leaders silent

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent
Part 4 of a 4-Part Series

There are other areas of leadership where the response was seen as less than expected.

The spiritual leader of Boston's 1.8 million Roman Catholics, Humberto Cardinal Medeiros, was selent for long periods, keeping his own counsel. The church is heavily in debt, and antibusing sentiment is concentrated in Catholic areas.

The cardinal did announce early in the year that parochial schools would not be accessible to white parents trying to avoid busing their children. And he did speak out in favor of observing the federal court order.

But even that commitment was enough to severely cut the Sunday collection plate offerings in South Boston churches. On television recently the cardinal said he was against busing.

"If only Cardinal Cushing were alive there would be a big difference," said a Catholic doctor from Massachusetts General Hospital. "He would have personally been leading the kids by hand to school. He was a liberal in the Kennedy tradition, a leader in social issues."

Richard Cardinal Cushing died in 1970.

There has been no intellectual leadership from Harvard and other Boston universities which were in the forefront of the civil rights movement in the South in the early 1960's.

"Academicians are like anyone else, the mood of the country has changed since those days," said city planner Pettigrew. "The students have lost interest in civil rights. In the mid 60's I had 350 students in my class on race relations. Today I have 23."

The big campaign at Harvard today is the Gallo wine boycott in support of California migrant grape pickers. No busing reverberations seem to cross the Charles River separating Cambridge-home of Harvard-from Boston.

The Boston Teachers Union has been wavering. It wanted all Boston schools closed when violence erupted early in October. And earlier in the year it had turned down an offer of help in handling integration preparation problems from the National Education Association, the nation's largest teachers' organization.

Boston police also wavered for some time, with the patrolmen's association declaring that police did not have to obey the orders of superiors if they went against their conscience.

Overall, police performance in the streets of Boston is regarded as adequate.

The city's black leadership has remained calm, backing busing all the way and urging black students to control themselves. Black adults from social services have patrolled on the streets outside schools and in black neighborhoods.

What does the future have for Boston?

Some observers see more trouble coming when the second stage of the busing plan integrates the Irish Charlestown and Italian East Boston next September.

Others see this as an opportunity to do it right next time.

Candidates rated on pollution issues

MassPIRG is a non-profit corporation, inspired by consumer advocate Ralph Nader and designed to generate research and action in the areas of consumer protection and environmental preservation.

MassPIRG Clean Air Research Associate Louise Doucette has issued a Pre-Election Air Pollution Alert, revealing the results of MassPIRG's recently completed Clean Air survey of candidates for the office of Governor, Lt. Governor and Attorney General.

The survey according to MassPIRG, considered most of the principal clean air questions which will affect future state efforts to clean-up the Bay State's air, including: transportation control plans; non-deterioration; and air quality maintenance planning. On the basis of all the information provided by the respondents, each candidate was ranked on a relative Clean Air Index running from 1 (dirtier than average) to 5 (cleaner than average).

The survey results indicate that Massachusetts' Clean Air program may be in for difficult times no matter who is elected to the office of Governor. The 3½ rating earned by Francis Sargent and Donald Dwight was only slightly better than the 2½ rating earned by Michael Dukakis.

The person whose answers would most likely lead to improved air quality in Massachusetts, particularly in Boston, according to their survey, was Josiah Spaulding, candidate for Attorney General, whose answers earned him a rating of 4½. The Socialist Workers' Party also earned a 3½ rating. Leo Kahian, Thomas O'Neill, Nicholas Greco and Francis Bellotti did not respond to any of the questions.

In contrast, the Sargent-Dwight team supported the continued use of less stringent air pollution controls at this time, while Dukakis' answers on this point were simply not responsive.

MassPIRG Environmental Lawyer Peter Bogle noted: "Clean Air is everyone's business, and among the issues which we hope voters will consider before they vote on Election Day is the candidate's proven ability to protect and enhance the quality of the air we breathe.

Copies of MassPIRG's questionnaire, and the candidates' responses, are on file in MassPIRG's Amherst Office.

Boston guard cut

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's calm continued over the weekend as a contingent of National Guardmen, on alert for 20 days, was quietly reduced by two-thirds.

Four hundred fifty guardmen yesterday left an armory in Reading, 20 minutes from the city, to be replaced by 150 troops from the 101st Artillery.

In announcing the reduction earlier in the week, Gen. Vahan Vartanian said he had been informed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent that "conditions in the city of Boston now permit a reduction in the number of National Guard troops on state active duty status."

Sargent activated the Guard Oct. 15 after a stabbing and several fights broke out at Hyde Park High School as racial tensions ran high over court-ordered busing to integrate the city's schools.

U.N. downgrades $

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The American dollar, the major international currency, no longer is regarded by some Communist and Third World countries as good enough to pay the bills of the United Nations.

Inflation and the unstable world economic situation have created a financial nightmare for the world body, whose budget for this year was set at almost $257 million. The United States pays about one-third of the cost of running the 138-member United Nations.

Egypt demands shift

By United Press International

Egypt has demanded that the United Nations shift the headquarters of its peace-keeping forces from Ismailiya on the Suez Canal back to Cairo, a U.N. spokesman in Tel Aviv said.

He said the U.N. delegation planned to go to Egypt from Jerusalem to discuss the request, which he said Cairo has been making for the past two months.

An Israeli government source said the Egyptian request recalled the Egyptian demand for the removal of U.N. troops in the Sinai peninsula in May, 1967, shortly before the Israeli pre-emptive strike that launched the Six Day war.

Socialists harassed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Socialist Workers Party, a small but well organized leftist group, has once again gone to court seeking an end to what it considers harassment of its activities by the government.

The party is seeking an injunction to stop FBI surveillance of the SWP national convention, scheduled for St. Louis in December. The government must respond to the SWP motion by tomorrow.

The motion, however, is just one part of a much larger and broader legal effort aimed at winning a permanent injunction against what the Party calls the government's "unconstitutional harassment of political opponents."

Oceans are becoming world's garbage dispose-all

By JERRY McCALLUM

In October, 1968 during a routine dive 120 miles off the coast of Cape Cod, Alvin, a 23-foot mini-sub sank in 5,051 feet of water. The crew safely ejected in a pressurized sphere before the vessel reached deep water. Ten months later, when Alvin was brought to the surface, the lunch which the scientists took on board, bologna sandwiches, apples and thermos of bouillon were unspoiled. Through this accidental finding, scientists learned that biodegration in ocean depths proceeds at a rate of about one percent as fast as it does on land. Just how important was this discovery? Very important! Let me give you some examples.

Every day several barges leave New York Harbor bound for deep water. When they reach deep water these barges dump tons of refuse and garbage into the ocean. Once it reaches the bottom, it remains garbage for who knows how long! The garbagemen and barge owners will tell you that they help feed the fish. I wasn't aware that orange peels, banana peels, styrofoam cups and plastic bags were part of a fish's normal diet. I also should mention the hundreds of sewage outfalls into the sea from industrial plants and the dyes from chemical companies. The typical outfall pipe is wide and reaches deep into the sea several miles offshore so as not to pollute the water near the coast for bathers. What about the sea? Has it no rights? Pumps at these plants work day in and day out, pumping every imaginable chemical and waste into the ocean. After all, what else is the sea but an all purpose dump.

We shouldn't overlook the U.S. Army, for where does the Army dispose most of its toxic mustard and nerve gas when it finds out it must dispose of these deadly vapors? The ocean, where else! Ocean liners, merchant ships, and the U.S. Navy contribute their pollution to the sea also. Each day, seamen toss overboard refuse and garbage instead of burning them in incinerators. Thor Heyerdahl, who recently crossed the Atlantic in a raft saw plastic cups and aluminum Coke cans float by when he was thousands of miles from Africa and South America in the middle of the South Atlantic. His crew was so disgusted they protested to the United Nations. Oil tankers have been known to discharge excess oil at open sea frequently because there is no law saying that they can't. They're in international waters.

What is happening to the ocean? It is slowly dying through man's spoilation and pollution. And if the oceans should die, man too, would die. Let me draw you the scenario of a dead ocean. To begin with, bereft of life the ocean would at once foul. Such a stench born of decaying organic matter would rise from the ocean that it would drive man back from all coastal regions. Harsher consequences would soon follow. The ocean is the earth's principle buffer, maintaining chemical balances between the different salts and gases of which we live and depend on. The carbon dioxide content of the atmosphere would rise rapidly. When the CO2 level passed a certain point the "greenhouse effect" would begin: heat radiating outwards from the earth to space would be trapped beneath the stratosphere, shooting up sea-level temperatures. This would melt the icecaps at the North and South Poles. In several years the ocean would rise about a 100 feet. All the major cities on earth would be inundated. To avoid drowning, one third of the world's population would have to flee to high ground which wouldn't be ready to receive these people or provide them enough food. Global drought and famine would come about because the surface of the ocean would become coated with a thick film of dead organic matter, affecting the evaporation process and thusly reducing rain greatly.

The disaster is only entering its terminal phase, now. Packed together on highground, starving, subject to bizarre storms and diseases, with families and societies totally disrupted, what is left of mankind begins to suffer anoxia (lack of oxygen) caused by the extinction of plankton algae and the reduction of land vegetation. Caught in a narrow belt between dead seas and sterile mountain slopes man coughs out his last breath in agony. Thirty to fifty years after the ocean has died the last man on earth takes his last breath. After that, all which will remain are bacteria and a few scavenger insects ("Hellstrom Chronicle" come true).

Why write of this morbid nightmare? Because the ocean could die — very easily — and we must make sure that it doesn't. Man much change his attitude towards the ocean. He must stop regarding it as a universal all-purpose dump for his own waste. He must cease to regard it as a mystery, a menace, something which is so vast and invulnerable that he shouldn't concern himself with it. He must view the ocean as a source of life, for without it man would not exist. How ironic it would be if man were to kill the sea, cradle of all life from which man probably originated from eons ago?

What can be done to stop this killing of the ocean? First of all, a moritorium should be called in the U.S. on all sewage and waste pipelines into the sea from chemical and industrial companies until scientists can study biodegration at the ocean depths more extensively. These outfalls must halt in the future. Secondly, oil tankers should be regulated strictly by their governments and the U.N. from discharging excess oil at open sea. Thirdly, ships at sea should all be equipped with mashers or incinerators so as to avoid throwing refuse and garbage into the sea. Seamen must break that age old habit. And lastly, the Pentagon should be required to dispose of toxic gas cannisters elsewhere or not manufacture them at all. Why is the Pentagon producing such fiendish biological weapons in the first place? After the biological finality of a nuclear holocaust one wonders who will be left to play with these fiendish canisters.

Sod waste of money

To the Editor:

During this time of tightened budgets and cutbacks on spending, money is carelessly being thrown away sodding the vast area around the entrance to the student center. I've asked more than a dozen people what they think about this unnecessary action, and no answer has convinced me so far that it is worthy enough to be called careful spending of the university funds. Now I understand that students are known for trodding pathways across large expanses of grass, but all that has to be done to protect a freshly seeded area from being tromped on is for temporary snowdrift fences to be securely put up surrounding it. Since there are paved walkways on either side and through the area in question, I'm sure everyone would find it easy enough to walk on these, and not go to the trouble of jumping the fence only to have jump it again to get out. Don't get me wrong, sods have their purpose; they are great for patching up bare spots around paved areas, and for filling in those trodden pathways I mentioned previously. The graduate research center has a lot next to it previously used as a parking area for the construction workers. This was seeded last week, and is doing fine; the grass is already more than an inch high [in spite of the cool weather], and even though this area receives very little pedestrian traffic, only a string fence has been used, and is adequate.

On top of the innecessity of the whole project, the company doing the job thoughtlessly has caused damage adjacent to the original being sodded, and will have to fix this area also, only to suck more money from the university for repairing it. The area I refer to is alongside the parking garage, abutting a very wide paved pathway which is daily traversed by pedestrians and occasionally a few vehicles. The company in question has strung a loose snowdrift fence around the construction site for safety purposes. They left enough room between the parking garage and fence for only the pedestrians to walk on a thin strip of the pavement. When a mail truck or one of the physical plant vehicles and even the companies' own vehicles wish to get around the construction area, the vehicles must run up on the grassed area alongside the garage. After the rain last week you can imagine what condition this grassed area is in now. On questioning several of the workmen why they couldn't have strung the fence four feet further from where it was to allow vehicles to pass on the pavement, [which was totally possible], they just replied, "Well, we'll just have to fix that area too."

In conclusion, I don't know who has allotted this money, probably upwards of $7,-10,000 [or maybe more before they finish] for rolls of sod and their installation instead of ample seed, probably no more than a few hundred dollars worth or less, [which requires no tending at all after grading and seeding], but it seems to me to be a perfect example of the misuse of the University of Massachusetts' funds. I sure would like to hear an excuse or rebuttal which would convince me [and anyone else who agrees with my opinion] that sodding this area was the only way to go.

Volunteer services

To the Editor:

Student Volunteer Services opened its doors over a year and a half ago as a referral-resource center for both community services agencies who are in need for student volunteers and for students who wish to support these agencies who are in need of assistance [particularly those connected with their fields of study]. Over the past two years, though, we found that the program was failing in a very important way — that of assisting the campus community by providing a format and vehicle for examining the agencies they are involved in and analyzing the social problems that they intend to ameliorate. We feel that it is imperative that we, as students, must evaluate the attitudes as they get worked out into social programs as they have great implications to our futures, our jobs, our roles in society.

It is with this in mind that S.V.S. has developed its Film-Lecture Series, the fourth in our series dealing with the area of Psychology, to take a look at its history and of the implications of its use. As fitting to our overall philosophy, we see the need for the University to be exposed to those issues which directly relate to the area of Psychology, as it is here that we prepare to become practitioners in this field as counselors, psychotherapists, researchers, etc. and as we see that the University does take a direct role in our communities in the research that it has done effecting our schools, prisons, and other institutions.

"The Use and Abuse of Psychology: Dealing with Social Problems" is a four week program during the month of November. The participants are professionals and lay people — all are activists. Some are nationally known, others working on the grass roots level locally. Their common bond is a commitment to evaluate psychological theories and practices in dealing with questions of social deviancy, social inequality, and Racism. Each week individual speakers will address themselves to the attitudes of Psychology towards the poor, Nationally Oppressed People, women, alcoholics, and homosexuals.

The schedule is listed below. The series is free and open to the public.

Tues., Nov. 5th, 8:00 P.M., 429 Grayson, Feminist and Gay Counseling, Kathleen Reardon, Nancy Schroeder.

Mon. Nov. 11th, 7:30 P.M., C.C. 113, Skinnerism-Racism & Behavior Mod., Dr. Elliot Mishler.

Thurs., Nov. 14th, 7:30 P.M., C.C. 101, Alcoholism; Film - "The Secret Life of Sandra Panel Blair".

Mon. Nov. 25th, 8:00 P.M., C.C. Aud., "Blaming the Victim", Dr. William Ryan.

CC/SU Complex got you down?

To the Editor:

In an effort to increase communication, disseminate information and provide for a greater awareness among students in the UMass community about the Campus Center, the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors has undertaken various projects. This letter concerns itself with the newly established avenue by which the Board of Governors can be heard by the student body. The information flow and feedback that the Board receives is, at times, quite limited. Thus, we are announcing the Question, Suggestion and-or Grievance card. This little gem, an outlet for all your frustrations, questions, etc. will be available at the Student Union Lobby Counter and at the Campus Assistance Center on the concourse. It gives ample space for you to air your gripes, comments and, most importantly, suggestions as to how the Campus Center can better serve the students. These forms will be answered if name and phone number are left. Factual information, not rhetoric, will be provided to the inquirer. Any and all areas of the CC-SU Complex are open to questioning. Basically, the student body is stuck with this building; the problem now lies in reducing the fee, which we all pay, and providing more services to everyone concerned. If there is any part of this University that the students have a definite right to question, it's the Campus Center: no state funds are involved here. That point cannot be emphasized enough; it's your right to question. After all, it's your money.

Views on Ted

Books had been read. At least a dozen. I wanted to "know" Ted Kennedy. I was going down for a personal interview with the Senator, and I didn't want to come off like some dip dong small bore, little questions, no answer interviewer. All the questions had already been asked before. "Are you running for President in '76?" "What happened at Chappaquiddick?" "Will you run in '76?" "What were you doing that night with that woman?"

I didn't want to get into those kind of questions. There were two reasons for it. The first there were real doubts that he would answer them. Two, for some reason there didn't seem to be any real reason for him to answer them. Dammit, I knew the guys record, in and out, up and down, inside out. Knew his health care legislation, knew that he was working to break off our commitment in South Vietnam totally; knew that he was working to cut taxes. Damn, I wanted to cut away the fatty questions, the ones that he gets his junior aides to pump out.

Could a college interviewer break through with Senator Kennedy? By the time that I met him in his private audience near the Senate chambers he seemed just beat. You can always tell where someone is at by his eyes. Ted Kennedy's were weary, folds of skin like a second round boxer were closing in. His moderate sideburns were capped by long strands of gray hair. When I first saw this my mind blurted out inside the fact that he was probably the first of the Kennedy brothers to show gray.

Somewhere back home there is a tape cartridge that is filled with mediocrity. Neither the questions nor the answers given that day, were worth much. As he answered questions about his future plans, the role of the Democratic party, further elaborations on how he had beaten the Pentagon on the issue of aid to South Vietnam. Every now and then he would look up from his compulsive doodling and would flash that Kennedy grin; wide and bright, it could light up a room. Yet for the most part there was little new. I was a bit disgusted at how standard his answers were, and too awed by his presence to get aggressive while questioning. The time factor was also a real problem. Constant phone calls, Senate roll call votes, continually interrupted our interview. Twice, he excused himself for a few moments, only to return. I was never quite sure that he would. There was this fear that some lower aide would come in and say, "The Senator is sorry, but he has big business to attend to and cannot return."

But he did return. As the interview ended I felt pretty low. My feelings about Ted Kennedy were ambivalant. If he didn't want to be totally candid, why the hell was he so patronizing? If he didn't want to say anything, why did he grant the lousy interview? On the other hand I reached out and was burning mad at myself, "you just didn't give him the right questions. You wasted the man's time."

So I left Washington with disgust that day. Angry and confused, I felt that I had been had by a skillful pol and by my own inexperience. It would never happen again.

Yet I read the papers these days and I realize that I really like Ted Kennedy. Even though, parts of this country are trying to spread rumors, ugly rumors about Ted Kennedy and that tragic night at Chappaquiddick.

You're driving fast, a bit of booze, and the night is late. Your car plunges off the road, and the next thing you know water is flooding your car. What the hell are you going to do? There probably are contradictions in the Kennedy testimony. If the major ones have any substance, reopen the lousy case. But the ugliness of the situation doesn't come from the interview in the Boston Glove it comes from those who get off on talking about the murky side. It comes from those who don't so much care if Mary Jo Kopechne was killed, but rather are concerned with whether she and the Senator were first involved in sin.

I don't know Senator Kennedy. Who knows that really happened that night, five years ago. Joe Gargon, his cousin? The various investigators? Who?

Go for the facts, and if they show Ted Kennedy guilty of anything more than panic, shock, or honest negligence (in trying to save Kopechne's life) then go after him. Up to now however most of the publicity deals with his sex life and his ambitions. Forget the ugly rumors that the whisperers spread. Unfounded. Unproven. Get to the truth, but don't make up your truth.

I feel for Ted Kennedy. Despite his money and position he had had a painful life. It makes me sick to see people rejoice at his downfall. Sick to see them smirk. Sick to see them laugh. I don't know Ted Kennedy, but I do know that he is a pretty damn good Senator. Unless people can prove otherwise, I think that someday he'll make a damn good President. And if I can ever help him get there, I'll do my best to try.

Time for a Parliament

By ERIC FLEET

For the first time in our history we, the American People, are faced with a form of government which simply does not work. As a result of the Watergate Inquisition the Presidency is no longer capable of leading the American people and solving our national problems. The Presidency has been stripped of its powers, the express purpose of "Watergate", and is only capable of frustrating Congress with the devastating veto. President Ford has proposed anti-inflationary measures which Congress chooses to ignore. Congress has cut off aid to Turkey, causing President Ford to veto the Defense bill. What we have is a stalemate caused by the separation of powers. As the American people are not required to make a responsible choice at election time we have a Congress of one party and a President of the other. As long as this paradox is allowed to exist we will be at an impasse, unable to try anything to save the country.

The solution to the paradox is to adopt the Parliamentary form of government. Under this system the people must choose one party, i.e. one ideology or set of ideas. This government would be allowed to exist as long as it had public support as in Canada and England. As soon as public support is withdrawn, as in the event of a scandal, a general election would be held. This would make an appointed President impossible.

The Parliamentary system is the purest form of representative democracy. The legislators are constantly under public scrutiny as their tenure may be terminated at any time. Scandals such as Watergate, and pressing issues like Vietnam are not allowed to fester for years until elections, but are voted on immediately by the people, before the media can distort the truth. Parliament, expressing the will of the people, combines the executive and legislative branches of government, thus avoiding the present stalemate crisis.

Finally, a Parliamentary system would necessitate a realignment of the political parties. Present allegiances are based on ancient loyalties rather than philosophy. Thus we have a McGovern and a Stennis in one party and a Goldwater and a Weicker in the other. Two defined parties, Conservative and Liberal, would make voting easier for Americans and allow for blame to be established after the fact. Politicians would no longer be allowed to hide behind their wishy-washy labels.

Some may say that our government worked through the Watergate coup d'etat. What Chairman Sam failed to do was put something in the place of the Presidency..Now we have no workable government at all and are helpless before inflation, unemployment and recession. Only through a new system can we solve these problems.

Belloni sent me

Strolling down the Champs Elysees of UMass, the fashionable Fearing Street perusing through the blank stares and concealed shock of would be rape victims grimacing by, the loud hum of a suped up jet black limosine roared up behind me. BBRRRhummmmmm. Not having seen such props since my youthful Charlie Chan days, I was somewhat taken aback. Thinking vague thoughts of my "feets" and possible failure, I could no further advance my fate when two huge paws collared my neck.

"Come wid me mistah."

"Hey whats this all about. I'm on my way to enjoy a hardeeburger or two, if you don't mind."

"I mine. Da boss wants yis. I dunno whad for, ya puny mutt."

With this I was garreted into the idling vehicle which immediately sped off. Two more hands jerked a coarse blind to my eyes and harsh klout ensued onto my skull.

"Here he is boss."

"Thank yis Alphonse, Carlo. Don't be frightened, I merely want some woids wid ya. Den yis can be on your way."

"Who are you, and what am I doing here?"

"Relax, relax. My name is Don Vito Belloni. You've probably seen my picture before..."

"Why yes...yes I have. On a wanted poster in the post office."

"No dummy! You've seen my picture on countless campaign posters over da years. This year I'm running for the Highest Pig in the state - Attorney General!"

"Then why have you kidnapped me. Aren't you supposed to prevent crime, not cause it?"

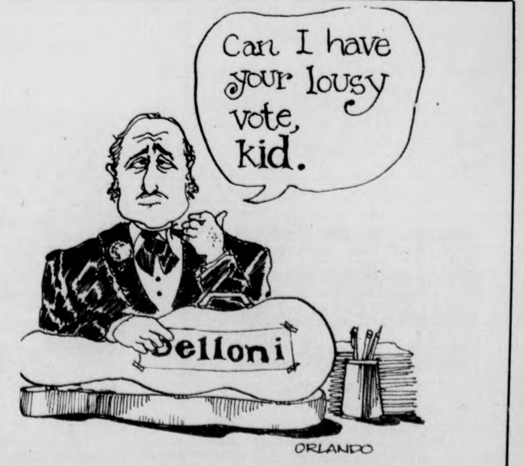
"Look kid, its been a long hard road for me. I once had an office. But da boys across town blocked my chances for another one. Time and time again I was frustrated. My boys and I finally went to the mattresses. Even though I've suffered terrible losses for all these years, we've finally got em cornered. And tomorrow we're gonna finish em off. Vito Belloni is finally gonna be Top Dog. People are gonna have ta' show some respect. And if some gonna give a little trouble, Luca Brasciola will take care of em."

"All of which doesn't explain why I'm here!"

"Aw that's simple. This is part of my door to door campaign to meet the voters. I like to call it my "New Politics." You see why should I have to do all that walkin' in all them greasy neighborhoods when my boys can bring all the voters I need."

"Have you had much success?"

"Its been great so far. I haven't had a voter that hasn't jumped up and down in his admiration for me and in his zeal to give me a vote, or even two if he can squeeze it. And all this without any voluntary campaign finance disclosures."



Can I have your lousy vote, kid.
Belloni
ORLANDO

"Unnamed sources. You really don't wanna know kid; take it from me. Listen kid, can I have your lousy vote."

"Do I have a choice, or is it one of those offers that I can't refuse?"

"Lemme put it this way, do you like sleeping with dead horses kid?"

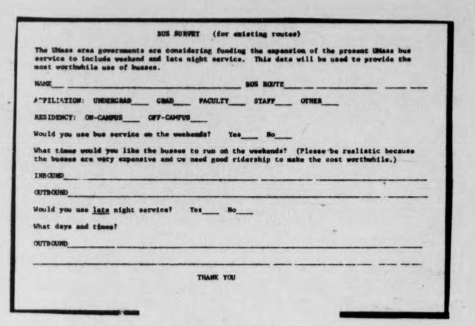
Bus service requests input to ride survey



BUS SURVEY (for existing routes)

The UMass area governments are considering funding the expansion of the present UMass bus service to include weekend and late night service. This data will be used to provide the most worthwhile use of busses.

NAME________ BUS ROUTE________

AFFILIATION: UNDERGRAD___ GRAD___ FACULTY___ STAFF___ OTHER___

RESIDENCY: ON-CAMPUS___ OFF-CAMPUS___

Would you use bus service on the weekends? Yes___ No___

What times would you like the busses to run on the weekends? (Please be realistic because the busses are very expensive and we need good ridership to make the cost worthwhile.)

INBOUND________

OUTBOUND________

Would you use late night service? Yes___ No___

What days and times?

OUTBOUND________

THANK YOU

A survey concerning possible changes in the evening-outreach bus service, as well as weekend scheduling, is being conducted throughout this week.

The data gathered will be used by the Student Senate Transit Service in cooperation with the Commuter Assembly, Student Senate, Grad Senate, and Veterans Coalition to determine rider response to such changes and additions. What is needed is information on who will be interested in using extended late night and weekend busses, and when they would like them. It is imperitive to prove that sufficient need exists before any changes can be made. (The changes do not mean any exclusion of present service.)

The form found on this page may be filled out and deposited in the designated boxes. The boxes will be located in the following areas: Commuter Lounge-Student Union Basement (Beside games room); Commuter Student Affairs-229 Whitmore; Parking Office-105 Hampshire House; CASIAC-E-22 Machmer Hall; Business Administration Office-359 SBA; Engineering Office-201 Engineering East; Food and Natural Resources-110 Stockbridge;Campus Center-Concourse Level, Campus Assistance Center; Student Activities-R.S.O. Dalkon shield deemed safe

Recently there has been much in the press concerning the safety of intrauterine devices, particularly the Dalkon Shield. This has occurred since the FDA and A.H. Robins Company, maker of the Dalkon Shield intrauterine device, suspended sales in June pending further research. This action resulted after 7 deaths were recorded from septic spontaneous abortions during the 4th, 5th, and 6th months of pregnancy in women who became pregnant with the device in place and did not have the device removed.

Recommendation was that while the research was going on, there was no reason to remove the Dalkon Shield from women who were wearing it successfully. It was noted with emphasis, however, that women who suspected a pregnancy with the Dalkon Shield or any other intrauterine device in place should consult their clinic or physician and get a pregnancy test.

OB-GYN Advisory Committee hearings were convened in August by the Food and Drug Administration. This Advisory Committee noted the IUDs have been shown to be a safe and reliable means of contraception and they compare favorably with oral contraceptives.

What seems to be still debatable, however, is whether the Dalkon Shield form of the IUD presents a greater risk than other types. Some of the data reported in a study done by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's Center for Disease Control noted a higher incidence of complications of pregnancy occurring in women wearing the Shield than among those using other devices.

On the other hand, some physicians have been critical of this study on the grounds that it relied on self-reporting by physicians and that the response rate was low, about 50 per cent. A subcommittee of the OB-GYN Advisory Committee has subsequently reported that it did not find any increased hazard resulting from the use of the Dalkon Shield. However, the device has not yet been returned to the market for new insertions. Further discussions by the full Committee are scheduled for the end of this month.

The Contraception Clinic staff of University Health Services advises Dalkon Shield wearers of the following recommendations. If a woman is wearing the device successfully (i.e. without significant bleeding, spotting or cramping), there is no indication at this time that the Dalkon Shield be removed since the problems found are those associated with pregnancy with the IUD in place. However, should a woman suspect pregnancy, she is urged to come to the Clinic and if pregnancy is confirmed, the IUD will be removed. Until data on further research is available on the Shield, the Clinic is inserting the Copper 7 IUD and a limited number of Lippes Loops for those women desiring an IUD.

When making decisions about contraception choice, a woman should take into consideration the risks of the intrauterine device compared with other methods of contraception and with pregnancy itself. It is on these grounds that an informed decision can then be made. Estimates are that the mortality rate for all IUDs is approximately 3 deaths per million IUD wearers per year. There are approximately 30 deaths per million users per year with oral contraceptives and 200 deaths per million live births per year associated with pregnancy. Obviously, there are other relative risks to be considered.

If you have any questions, please call the Health Services Health Education Office (549-2671). Contraception Educational Sessions are offered every Monday (3 p.m.), Tuesday (7 p.m.), Wednesday (7 p.m.), and Thursday (3 p.m.) in the Health Center Conference Room.

Stockbridge throws costume party

By BOB PAQUETTE
Staff Reporter

On any night besides October 31, the groups of people forming about campus might not get a second look. But on Halloween night, the menagerie of costumed faces got second looks, a smile, and in some cases, fits of laughter.

Stockbridge College held its annual Halloween party in room 1009 of the Campus Center Thursday night, with about 250 people in attendance.

There were Monks, Mexican bandits and Mickey Mouse; pumpkins, pirates and Playboy bunnies; Scarecrows, sailors and even "Super Stockie"

Liquid entertainment was furnished by kegs of beer, a punch and bar, while musical entertainment was furnished by Grampaw, probably one of the better bands in the area, despite the fact that they were almost an hour late in showing up.

Everyone at the party enjoyed themselves, and this reporter hopes that they aren't suffering too much for it as a result.

Gym majors form club

All majors in the Department of Professional Preparation in Physical Education and Dance are invited to meet on Wednesday evening, November 6, at 7:00 P.M. in Room 153 of the North Physical Education Building. Several majors have expressed a desire to coordinate a student organization or club.

The development of a Physical Education Major's Club would provide a representative group who could establish communication with the Department Committees; elect student membership to serve on the Student Committee of the State Association; plan special programs requested by their peers; assist in bringing guest speakers to campus; and provide a much needed dimension of student leadership.

Students with questions, should contact Arlan Barber at 545-2323.

Liberate political prisoners

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Is it the millions of people in Vietnam who are fighting against the repressive Thieu regime and the millions of people in this country and throughout the world who marched and struggle and even died for the rights of the Indochinese people? Is it the millions of us who protested, marched and demonstrated during the civil rights era of revolutionary consciousness of the sixties and seventies?

News analysis

Is it the millions of migrant workers who are slaving in the hot sun whose rights are constantly being denied, and whose rights are conspired against by big growers and unscrupulous unions bosses and the police? Is it the Indian people whose land has been taken and treaty rights broken year after year and acts of genocide continually perpetrated against them?

Is it the fathers, mothers, sisters, and brothers of the millions of Black, Chicano, Asian, Puerto Rican, Indian, and other working class people whose rights as human beings have never been recognized in this country? Is it the thousands of people who find themselves in prisons, asylums and neofascist dungeons? Is it the people who are told they are being rehabilitated because they have committed crimes against the oligarchy?

Is it the daughters and sons of the people in Harlem, Bedford Stuyvesant, Watts, Roxbury, Chinatown, reservations, barrios, and other ghettos in this society who are faced with hard drugs and police terror and chronic unemployment? Is it the many different organizations, individuals, revolutionary collectives, political prisoners, movements, and basically peace loving people that have supported others with posters, pamphlets, leaflets and various kinds of materials?

Who is this United States government that is against us? Is this the same government that killed Patrice Lumumba, Malcolm X, George Jackson, Salvador Allende, Amilcar Cabral, Martin Luther King, the people of Wounded Knee and My Lai?

Is this the same government that is against the Leavenworth Brothers, the Barrigan Brothers, Angela Davis, Lelita Levron, Carlos Rlincians, the Gainsville 8, the New York 21, Dennis Banks, Russell Means, Ruchell Magee, Martin Sostre, David Rice, Ed Poindexter, George Merritt, Gail Madden, the Houston 12, Lee Otis Johnson, Chuck Armsbury, Grey Lui-Kwan and Ray Euglin.

Is this the same government that imprisoned the 200,000 political prisoners in Vietnam, the Palestinian people, the Chilean people, the brothers and sisters in South Africa, and the 50,000 Americans who refused to participate in the Pentagon's imperialist war against the people of Southeast Asia.

Now, the increasing depression of workers, unemployed, and others in this society along with the continual failure of the economic stability of the capitalist system has triggered a massive rejection on the part of the people to the way "business as usual" is handled by the ruling class and their supporters.

The people of the United States stated in a recent survey taken by the U.S. News & World Report, described Americans as having a "far-reaching feeling of frustration and discontent, skepticism about the government and fears for the future." This is certainly the time to FREE ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS!

Donald Bogle to speak

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Donald Bogle will be the last speaker in the Black Film Festival Series, tonight, at 8:00 p.m. in Thompson 106.

Mr. Bogle, a graduate of Lincoln University, was a former story editor for film director Otto Preminger. He also worked as an assistant editor and staff writer for Ebony Magazine at the home office in Chicago. His book on black films, 'Toms, Coons, Mulattoes, Mammies, and Bucks, which traces black film history from 1903 to the present was first published in hardback by Viking Press last year and just this summer was released in a paperback edition by Bantam Books.

His articles have appeared in such publications as Ebony, Saturday Review, University Review, and Trends, and he has spoken about black film history on a number of television programs throughout the country including The Today Show, Tomorrow, Kup's Show, Panorama (in D.C.), Black News, et al.

This program is being sponsored by the Afro-Am Society and Harambee. The admission is free and the public is invited. Mr. Bogle will do a slide and lecture presentation.

Only two of Africa's 52 Nations are more populous than Blacks living in America: Nigeria and Egypt.

Of the 36 Nations of both North and South America only three are bigger than the Black Nation in America: White U.S.A. (184,000,000), Brazil (91,000,000), and Mexico (45,000,000).

Dracula to stalk S.U.B.

"We have no doubt that there really was a Dracula," claims Radu Florescu who is speaking in the Student Union Ballroom November 5 at 8:00, as part of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

The Romanian born scholar is co-author of a book about the fiendish count entitled, In Search of Dracula.

Professor Florescu and his associate Raymond McNally have explored Dracula's Transylvanian castle and have done exhaustive research into the area folk lore.

Dracula, also nicknamed, "Vlad the Impaler," was a 15th century Romanian prince with a reputation as a master of cruelty. "Dracula refined torture to almost an art form," says McNally. "Once he made a virtual forest out of 20,000 impaled Turks."

The lecture will feature a film showing scenes from horror movies and from Transylvania. A coffee hour will follow in the Colonial Lounge.

WFCR airs election coverage

This year on election night, National Public Radio will focus its attention to the political races which are usually ignored by the national media, according to WFCR spokesmen. "The best seats in the house" will provide comprehensive coverage of the elections in the House of Representatives, a body which bears responsibilities, and wields influence equal to the Senate.

Congressional correspondent, Linda Wertheimer, will host comprehensive coverage of the house elections, on WFCR Tuesday night, concentrating on the 140 most hotly contested races. These have been picked out of the 435 up for election because they are the ones most open to possible change.

Police busy as thief hits UMass

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Two robberies and two arrests occurred on the UMass campus last Thursday, according to Captain Robert Joyce, of the UMass Department of Safety, who released the information Friday.

A sum of $539.00 was stolen from the Campus Center lobby, by a suspect described as a black male, Thursday at approximately 11:32 p.m. said Joyce.

The suspect escaped on foot and was believed to be carrying a 22 or 32 caliber gun. There were no injuries, Joyce said.

The suspect is also believed to be responsible for three other robberies occurring the same night, in the vicinity of Northampton and Hadley, Joyce said.

The case is currently under investigation by the UMass Police.

A UMass student was arrested for non-payment of parking fees Thursday, said Joyce.

William A. Santos of Amherst was issued a warrant by the Hamshire District Court. His case was heard in court Friday.

According to Joyce, Santos will either have to pay the fines or "work it off in jail". The UMass Police do not yet know the final outcome of the case.

Also on Thursday, a former UMass student was involved in a motor vehicle theft, said Joyce.

Frank E. Maubry of Brighton, Mass was arrested by the State Police for stealing a Domino's Pizza Truck.

Outdoor group forming here

A new group on campus, The Outdoor Interest Group, comprised of individual students, staff, and faculty, is working on the creation of an Outdoor Program at the University.

The purpose of this program is to provide opportunities for members of the University community to participate in voluntary individual and small group educational and recreational experiences in the outdoors. The group will be conducting surveys of the faculty, students and staff to determine the areas of need and interest.

The direction and scope of such a program is flexible. It could involve student-initiated recreational activities, instructional trips, academic courses, special workshops, or other possibilities people might suggest. One important function will be to provide a central source of information on, and coordination of, existing Outdoor related activities and resources which are now scattered through various parts of the University.

Many other colleges and universities have Outdoor Programs, and they vary greatly in character, organizers say. Some have a very loose structure which attempts merely to help people come together who have similar outdoor interests, and make it as easy as possible for people to get out into our natural environment.

Others have professional instructors who teach outdoor skills and techniques, and emphasize progressing towards very ambitious and highly skilled outdoor activities.

Study art in England

Sophomore or junior studio art majors with a 3.0 cumulative average can apply for a spring semester of study at the Sir John Cass School of Art in London, England, the International Programs Office has announced.

Sir John Cass offers courses in painting and drawing as well as crafts such as jewelry making, silversmithing, and art history. The cost to the student should not exceed the cost of an equivalent time period on the Amherst campus.

Applicants must have a mixed portfolio to show by November 6 and an official transcript and two recommendations by November 10. Any interested candidate should see Judy Epstein at the International Programs Office in 239 Whitmore as soon as possible.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

SUNDAY, November 3 — Born today, you possess a warm and affectionate nature but are somewhat inclined toward the kind of shyness that disallows you the full advantages of both warmth and affection.

You are very willing to give of yourself to those of whom you are fond. Time, energy, effort, closeness: All these are your gifts to those who offer you affection. The difficulty is that you often do not recognize affection when it is offered, and are prone to overlook gestures to true friendship, being too shy to look beyond the obvious.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Self-improvement is the order of the day. Do what you can to impress another with the seriousness of present enterprises on the home front.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21) — Success arrives at eve for the Sagittarius who has managed to make the moments count today. Opportunities — fortunately! — knock twice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Effective solutions may not appear practical to the casual observer. Don't take the word of an outsider when choosing a course of action.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Professional associates may not be of help to you at this time. An anxious morning yields a satisfying afternoon. Receive gifts in the evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Employ your own good judgment in matters concerning another's recent efforts to help you out. Don't reject an offer of a repeat performance too soon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Overconfidence breeds carelessness. Make sure that you do not fall victim to your own efforts to make the most of the present situation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take your cue from those who have already passed through this particular phase of life. Be sure of your own worth in the eyes of a friend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Spend some time this morning in an effort to make contact with one who can be of great help to you in the immediate future. Relax!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Approach new assignments as though you were a beginner in the field. Otherwise, you may make the mistakes of the overconfident.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take a good look at your best past and you will gain more than a hint about your future. Don't resist another's efforts to clue you in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — If you present your plan both well and with originality, you will double your chances of having it accepted by those in authority.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A business matter involving buying and selling of personal property is highly favored at this time. Don't be afraid to state your case openly.

Welfare: Who can get it and how

By MAURICE SMITH
Legal Services Office

This is the first of a weekly column by the campus Legal Services Office. The office is located on the 8th floor of the Campus Center and is open to any student needing legal assistance.

the law & you

Many students at UMass. who are eligible for public assistance from the Massachusetts Department of Public Welfare may not be receiving aid simply because they do not know of the programs and aid available or know that they are eligible for assistance. Generally, needy families with dependent children in which a father is not in the home or is unemployed or blind or disabled persons are eligible for assistance.

The above are only a few of the eligibility requirements for public assistance; the detailed requirements and procedures are in a manual covering several hundred pages. These requirements and procedures have been established under the auspices of federal law, the primary law governing must public assistance programs.

For further information regarding eligibility, people should contact an attorney, a welfare advocate group or the Welfare Services Office (W.S.O.).

Ordinarily, an individual or family must apply in person for public assistance at the local W.S.O. (Northampton office for Hampshire County, Greenfield Office for Franklin County, Holyoke Office for Hamden County). When a person applies for assistance, a welfare intake worker will interview the applicant of the assistance program for which the applicant may be eligible, the conditions for eligibility and the extent to which the applicant is expected to participate in establishing eligibility.

The intake worker also must clearly explain the applicant's rights and responsibilities under the law. This includes responsibility for notifying the W.S.O. of any changes in a recipient's living or financial situation that my affect the amount of assistance or the eligibility, for assistance.

In determining eligibility, the W.S.O. considers both the income and assets of the applicant. An applicant's income and assets must be less than defined amounts in order for the W.S.O. to be required to provide assistance.

Income includes money received as wages, support payments, gifts, dividends, interest, public assistance benefits, trust fund payments, investment profit, capital gains, rent, annuities, etc. Income does not include loans and grants such as scholarships made to applicants or recipients which are of such a nature that the principal is unavailable for current maintenance. Also exempt are any grants or loans made to any undergraduate students through a program administered by the United States Commissiioner of Education.

The W.S.O. defines assets as personal property owned by possible recipients such as cash, securities or similar assets which may be readily converted into cash. Essentially, these assets must be liquid and available for the applicants' use.

The amount of assistance given to an eligible family varies with their "need" as defined by the Massachusetts Department of Public Assistance Manual. These "needs" vary with the living situation and family size.

Please do not confuse your actual financial needs with those established by the welfare system. The two standards, that is yours and the State's, probably differ greatly. The State probably will be supplying significantly less than you actually need to live reasonably.

The W.S.O. must act on an application within a specified time, usually thirty (30) days. The W.S.O. must respond by issuing either benefits or a letter of denial within the specified time. Any benefits granted are retroactive to the first day of the month in which the recipient applied.

Any applicant denied assistance may request a "fair hearing" to appeal the denial. In fact, any recipient or applicant may appeal any decision or action taken by the W.S.O. that:

1. denies the right to file either a verbal or written application or reapplication for assistance
2. fails to act upon an application within the specified time period
3. denies participation in any food program in communities which have such programs.

The above reasons for hearings are not exclusive, there are other less obvious causes for requesting a hearing.

A "fair hearing" takes place before an appeals referee. The hearing is a quasi-judicial proceeding in which you should be represented by an attorney or welfare advocate. The applicant or recipient receives a written decision after the hearing and may appeal that decision into the court system.

As I mentioned earlier, the welfare system is exceedingly complex. If you have any questions, you should direct them to someone who will help you understand your rights and what you may be entitled to receive in assistance.

Markides to speak on the Cyprus Crisis

As part of its Monday Afternoon Seminar Series, the Anthropology department is sponsoring a lecture on the recent Cyprus crisis today at 3:45 in Room W-15 Machmer Hall. The guest speaker is Prof. Kyriakos C. Markides of the University of Maine at Orono. The title of his talk is: The Cyprus Crisis: The Causes of the Coup and the Turkish Invasion.

Prof. Markides, a native of Cyprus, did his dissertation at Wayne State University, on the Enosis (union of Cyprus with Greece) movement. He was residing on Cyprus during this past summer's coup and the invasion of Cyprus by Turkish forces which followed the coup. He has been studying the social implications of the events on Cyprus and has published an article with the title: "Social Change and the rise and decline of social movements: the case of Cyprus."

The Hellenic-American Association encourages all its friends and members to attend.

Itching the night away

By FRANCES BROCK
Staff Reporter

Do you itch?

According to Dr. Thomas McBride, Medical Director of the University Health Service, a good number of students suffer from itching every year.

Itching can develop from a number of sources, the most common being dehydrated skin. People who spend a lot of time in showers and a lot of time scrubbing to stay clean, are washing away the skin's oil surface, and drying out the skin. When the skin gets dry, it itches.

Other cases of itching come from lice and scabies. Many people frown when they hear these terms, ignoring the fact that anyone can attract the bugs.

Lice are more prevalent then scabies, but cases of "both have increased in the country in the last few years," said Dr. McBride.

No one knows for certain, said the two men, but closer sex relations between people seem to have more affect on the increase of cases.

Scabies appear on the skin as red, raised bumps with burrows extending around the area. They mostly occur in the folds of the skin. Itch mites do not carry serious diseases.

Lice prefer to live in the pubic hair, chest hair, armpits, eyelashes and eyebrows. Lice can be picked up from places other than close contact with people, but as with scabies, close contact is the dominant source.

Both scabies and lice can be cured with a generous application of Kwell cream. It is a prescription drug and can be obtained at the Health Service Pharmacy.

J.V. gridders lose

They couldn't stop the pitch! That was the UMass Minutemen sub-varsity's fatal flaw yesterday, as they were unable to contain the Boston College sub-varsity, losing their second game of the year, 37-15.

The Eagles utilized a running game which had the BC quarterback, Joe O'Brien, consistently using the option, pitch to a running back or keep it, and taking advantage of UMass' inability to stop the play. Only once during the first half, in which the Eagles scored 30 of their points, did the Minutemen stop BC, forcing them to punt.

The opening minutes were about the only time UMass seemed to be in the game. They scored first when Steve Ciccolini kicked a 25 yard field goal, set up by quarterback John Czerapowicz' 47 yard run.

Boston College countered with their own touchdown, a 70 yard drive.

The Minutemen's only touchdown until the fourth quarter then put them ahead for the last time when defensive back, Phil Puopolo made a diving interception of one of the few BC passes thrown all day.

Three plays later Czerapowicz swept right for a touchdown, but after this it was all Boston College, as their size and overall quickness was too much for the Minutemen.

Running back Jack Buchanan, who looks like BC's replacement for Mike Esposito, constantly ran around the UMass defense for long gains.

For all it was worth, the second half shouldn't have even been played. UMass looked as if the game was already over, and BC seemed complacent with their 23-9 lead.

One bright spot in the total UMass picture was Bob Zawada, who tried without much success, to initiate a Minutemen rally, by breaking punts and kickoffs for long yardage.

Costly mistaked by UMass, such as offsides infractions and missed tackles hurt the rhythm and effectiveness of the team, and there seemed to be a noticeable lack of the spirit that was a vital element in the previous two wins by the sub-varsity.

The next game for the Minutemen will be this Friday at 2 o'clock in Alumni Stadium.

Second half woes doom UMass ruggers; Beacon Hill prevails

By TOM CROWLEY
Sports Staff

A poor second half gave the Beacon Hill Rugby Football Club a 14-4 victory over UMass. The contest was close the entire first half as each team scored a try apiece.

UMass scored first, in the middle of the first half. Inside center Walter Elsmore scored on a long run down the middle of the field. The conversion was no good.

Beacon Hill scored near the end of the half, but could have scored a couple more if UMass had not held near the goal line. At the half, it was tied 4-4.

During the first half, it was back and forth with some excellent kicking on both sides.

The second half started off the same way the first half ended, but Beacon Hill slowly started to dominate the play. In the middle of the half, Beacon Hill scored on a long run after they had won the scrum in the UMass half of the field. The conversion was good and made the score 10-4.

This score brought the ruggers down mentally as Beacon Hill scored not that long after on an intercepted pass. The conversion failed to keep the score 14-4.

The rest of the half was spent trying to play catch-up but the score stood till time ran out.

The Minutemen won few scrums or ruts and in the second half got sloppy in passing.

There were two bright spots as the ruggers record goes to 4-2. Jeff Stephanie kicked excellently all game and ran hard as a fullback.

Halfback Rick Lopes played well in the second half as he intercepted several passes and ran well with the ball.

The next game for the ruggers is against Holy Cross, here next Saturday.

The B game was a 6-6 tie.

Girls end fine year

The junior varsity field hockey team displayed the same remarkable offense, defense, and teamwork they have shown throughout their 8-1-1 season as they defeated Smith College on Thursday night 4-0.

The first half was so clearly dominated by UMass, the ball remained in Smith's possession for only seven minutes altogether. UMass took twenty-seven shots on goal compared to Smith's three.

Cheryl Meliones scored the first goal after only four minutes of play and scored the second one two minutes later.

The fog, which was not as heavy as during the varsity game, barely stifled the junior varsity players. They successfully passed the ball among them, with seemingly every player perfectly positioned.

Sue Kibling and Karen Gipps added the extra two goals to the UMass score still during the first half.

The second half provided more even entertainment, with strong defense and increasingly heavier fog combining to shut-out both teams. Shots on goal were more equally distributed, UMass making nine to Smith's seven.

Coach Albert wished to praise the entire team, with specific focus for Thursday's game on Karen Gipps, Kelly Salls, and Olivia Lovelace.

J.V. lose to S.C.

By RON ARENA
Sports Staff

After six straight wins since their opening loss, the UMass J.V. soccer team finally tasted defeat again Friday afternoon, as visiting Springfield College recorded a 5-2 triumph.

Springfield jumped to a 2-0 lead, but UMass battled back to tie it on two quick goals by Raffi Donoyan. The first came on a superb individual effort as Donoyan dribbled in from the goalie's right past two defenders, and scored. The second developed on a fine assist from winger Kurt Grazewske.

Trailing 3-2 in the second half, the Minutemen had a golden opportunity to deadlock the game, but a direct kick from Donoyan sailed over the net carrying with it any hope of a comeback. S.C.'s defense tightened up and the offense added two more goals putting the game out of reach.

One important factor must be noted, however. In J.V. soccer, neither team receives any reports on the other, so there can be no planned defense. Springfield surprisingly played a very aggressive and physical game which the home squad didn't expect. Said Coach Todd Buck "We weren't ready for a physical game. They played the man extremely close. We went away from our game and played their kick and run game."

QUICK KICKS On October 22, UMass defeated Stockbridge 5-2, and on the 26th trounced U-Conn, 4-1. The team ends its' season Thursday traveling to Westfield to take on the Owls.

Swimmers in "swim-a-thon"

Can you swim 5000 yards in 2 hours? That's 200 lengths of the North PE pool and that's what each of the members of the women's swim team plans to do next Thursday afternoon.

On November 5 from 3-7 p.m. the UMass swimmin' women will participate in their 2nd annual swim-a-thon at the North Pool. The team has been soliciting sponsors for the last few weeks. Sponsors pledge a penny, a nickel, or whatever they can per length that the women can swim.

The money raised in the swim-a-thon will be used to send those swimmers who qualify to the National A.I.A.W. Swimming and Diving Championships in March. The championship will be held at Arizona State University, in Tempe, Arizona.

Spectators are welcome, so come and cheer on your favorite swimmer.

Booters succumb to combination of bad play and wet field

What a difference a week makes. In direct contrast to their fine performance against Connecticut last week, the UMass soccer Minutemen played poorly against Vermont and suffered a 5-2 defeat for their efforts.

After leaving sunny Amherst Friday morning the minutemen expected to see similar weather and game conditions in Burlington. Actually things were quite different and it was a big factor. Rain had saturated the Vermont field and made the playing conditions quite slippery. Both teams had to contend with pools of mud in front of the goalmouths and conditions like these make breaks become a bigger part of the game than they already are.

After Vermont opened the scoring about 5 minutes into the first half the Minutemen tied the game with forward Bill Belcher getting the goal. That was the extent of the scoring in the first half.

Vermont though put everything together in the second half and came up with four big goals to easily float (almost literally) to a 5-2 victory. With about 15 minutes gone in the half the Catamounts broke the tie game and quickly came back with another score within five minutes that proved to be the game-winner.

The Minutemen's second score came very late in the second half by Bill Spyker (played well in a substitute role) after the game was out of reach.

Coach Al Rufe said, "obviously we didn't play a good game, in fact it was probably our worst game. Vermont did a good job in moving the ball up something that we were not able to do. Because of the field conditions it was definitely a day for the team that got the breaks."

The weather definitely hurt the UMass short passing game because of the slickness of the field. Vermont, on the other hand, was able to deal with the field conditions better than UMass and because of their play possibly made some of those breaks come their way.

QUICK SHOTS — Fullbacks Dean Lungu and Ken Banda did not play against Vermont and although their replacements played well their absences were still felt somewhat. Banda should be ready to play against Springfield on Wednesday but Lungu is still doubtful. Both were sidelined with knee problems. The 4 goals Vermont got in the second half were the most scored in one half on the Minutemen this season.

UMass' playoff chances were certainly hurt by the loss to Vermont, but they were not killed. Victories in their last two games of the season could edge them into that final fourth slot. Wednesday at 3:00 p.m. in front of Boyden is the day, time, and site for the next game. The opponent is Springfield College, rated in the top twenty teams in the nation.

Top 20 struggles

Pencil in Florida and Penn State for New Year's Day Bowl berths. And while you're at it, pencil in Ohio State's Archie Griffin for the Heisman Trophy too.

For, barring a dramatic turn of events in the final three weeks of the season, all those things seem likely to come to pass — especially after the latest college football "ups and downs" Saturday which saw six top-rated teams lose and three others nearly lose.

But in the aftermath of it all, it was Florida, Penn State and Griffin who came out the biggest winners.

"We beat Auburn, we beat Auburn!" came the chant from the record crowd of 64,912 at Gainesville, Fla. and indeed they did. Behind touchdown runs from James Richards and Robert Morgan plus a seven-yard scoring pass from Don Gaffney to Lee McGriff, the 10th-ranked Florida Gators knocked off previously unbeaten and fourth-rated Auburn, 25-14.

And at Penn State, in the other game involving two top-rated powers, Joe Paterno's eighth-ranked Nittany Lions re-established themselves as the "Pride of the East" by putting away 12th-rated Maryland, 24-17, behind a pair of opportunistic touchdowns by defensive back Jeff Hite.

As for Griffin, well, after a record-breaking 144-yard, two-touchdown performance, it would appear the compactly-built Ohio State tailback is more and more the frontrunner to become the first junior since O. J. Simpson in 1968 to take home the coveted Heisman.

Oh yes, the top-ranked Buckeyes ran their record to 8-0 with another big ten runaway, 49-7 over Illinois, for Woody Hayes' 200th career victory.

Elsewhere among the top-ranked teams, there were some surprises. No. 2 Michigan kept pace with Ohio State in the big ten race, but was pushed hard by an aroused Indiana club before winning, 21-7. Third-ranked Alabama crushed No. 15 (tie) Mississippi State's Southeastern Conference Title hopes 35-0, but fifth-rated Notre Dame had to wait for two fourth-quarter td's to put down stubborn Navy 14-6.

Oklahoma also had its troubles before subduing Iowa State 28-10; seventh-ranked Texas A&M stopped Arkansas 20-10; No. 11 Texas downed SMU 35-15; No. 14 Minami of Hhio clinched a tie for the Mid America Conference Title by whitewashing Western Michigan 31-0; No. 15 (tie) Arizona State was shocked by Texas El Pase, 31-27; No. 17 (tie) Oklahoma State put down Kansas 24-13; No. 17 (tie) Houston ambushed Georgia 31-24 and No. 19 UCLA was stunned by Washington 31-9.

but New England responded four minutes later with Plunkett's 43-yard strike to Herron for a 7-3 lead.

Less than three minutes later Leypoldt struck from 20 yards to become the highest all-time Buffalo scorer. The kick gave him 251 points, and he added five more before the game was through to eclipse Cookie Gilchrist.

Plunkett and Herron hooked up at 1:43 of the second period, beating linebacker Washington to the right corner to give New England a 14—6 lead. Joe Furguson, able to beat the New England secondary long and short, hit ahead Rashad from 25 yards out for the first Bills touchdown. But Leypoldt's extra point attempt was blocked, leaving New England ahead, 14-12.

Sam Cunningham gave New England a 21-12 lead with a 31-yard option sweep and the Patriots threatened to go up 28-12 at the half when they drove to the Buffalo 15 with 1:22 remaining. But Plunkett, who had three passes intercepted, threw into the hands of Buffalo linebacker Merv Krakau, who returned the ball to the Bills' 42.

Ferguson completed passes of 20 and 10 yards to Rashad and 27 yards to J. D. Hill to the one before Simpson dove in for the score with 39 seconds remaining to close the halftime gap to 21-19.

Bruins romp, 10-1

BOSTON [AP] — The Boston Bruins broke up Phil Esposito's high-scoring line, then exploded for five goals in the first period Sunday night en route to a 10-1 National Hockey League victory over Minnesota.

Bruins coach Don Cherry moved Wayne Cashman onto a line with Gregg Sheppard and Johnny Bucyk in place of the injured Bobby Schmautz and Cashman and Sheppard responded with goals.

Esposito, with Dave Forbes in place of Cashman on his left side, collected his 13th goal of the season in the first period barrage.

Andre Savard and Don Marcotte also had goals for Boston in the opening session. Bill Goldsworthy tallied on a power play.

Darryl Edestrand, Forbes, Bobby Orr, Terry O'Reilly and Ken Hodge completed the Boston scoring in the second and third periods.

Field hockey team in triumph over Smith

by LINDA MACKLER
Sports Staff

The field hockey team finished their season with the discovery that they perform best when faced with adversity. On the way to defeating Smith College 4-1, the women overcame a transportation problem, an extremely thick fog, and a serious injury.

The injury was a result of the fog, which was so heavy that the goalies disappeared from sight looking from the fifty yard line. The ball also came in and out of clear vision and so surprised Shiela Higgins in the first half with a clout in the mouth that required seven stitches on her right outer lip and three on the inner one.

All which hung an emotional cloud over an earlier amusing experience and a later well-deserved victory.

The team feared they could never even make the game, when Trish McCarthy's converted school bus came to a stop right past the bridge in Hadley on Route 9 to Northampton. The twenty players, dressed in uniforms, got out and pushed the bus to the nearest gas station, which made an apt picture for Halloween night. The problem? Out of gas.

Once on the field, the team put together their best effort of the season. "The passing game was good," Coach Albert said. "It was one of their better games, despite the fog. It was a good team effort."

The two teams appeared evenly matched in the first half until with twelve minutes left to play, Donna O'Brien scored one goal and followed with another minute later.

With sixteen minutes left, there was a time out to wait for the fog to lift. And four minutes later, UMass' Kathy O'Neil scored the third goal. Then with four minutes left to play, Elaine "Slink" Senosk scored the final UMass goal and an unidentified Smith player immediately countered with their one goal.

The team was elated with the victory, as it brought their season's record over the .500 mark, establishing it at 5-4-1. Some players even expressed enjoyment at playing in the haze.

Harriers dominate again!

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

There have been numerous dynasties in sports, among the most memorable, the 1958-66 Boston Celtics, the 1949-53 New York Yankees, the 1967-73 UCLA Bruins and the 1955-60 Montreal Canadiens. The UMass cross country team joined the league of five-year dynasty clubs by easily winning its fifth consecutive Yankee Conference championship, Saturday morning in Burlington, Vermont.

Although a team may not become storied for Yankee Conference supremacy, Coach Ken O'Brien's success dating back to 1970 does fit the definition of a dynasty.

The Burlington Golf Course, analyzed in Sports Illustrated several years ago, was the site of the twenty-seventh annual meet. The course, which is located in the midst of Vermont's alluring mountains and aesthetic countryside, proved to be a fast layout as expected. Some spots were wet, and as a result of the slippery footing, the times were not as good as they could have been.

Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, Tom Wilson, John McGrail, Vermont's Bob Graves and UConn's Bruce Clark made up an early six-runner pack, which was reduced to four by the completion of three miles. Gillin, Thomas, George Reed of UNH, and McGrail took charge and retained their positions until the end of the race. With a little more than half of the five-mile course completed, Tom Wilson was in sixth place, while teammates Tom Maguire, Tom Wilson and Cliff Stapes held the number nine through eleven spots.

Reed won the individual title by setting a new course record of 24:37.5 Thomas, Gillin and McGrail decided during the race to let Reed finish first, in case of a team battle between UNH and UConn. Thomas commented, "The team title was already decided, so we let George go rather than cause another problem like the Northeastern meet."

Co-captain Gillin said that the group finished the race relatively easy, although they did speed up the pace over the final half mile. "If it came down to a sprint between Randy and George, I really don't know who would've won," added Gillin. The performance of Tom Wilson impressed Thomas, but the senior co-captain stated that the number five, six and seven runners still need more work. "It was the last easy race of the season. From now on it's blood and guts," quipped Thomas after the race.

The Minutemen runners completely dominated the meet, capturing seven of the top eleven places. In fact, UMass had seven runners across the finish lines before two men from any other team finished. The harriers totalled 24 points, as Vermont finished a distant second with 75 points. UConn placed third, while Maine, UNH, URI and Boston University completed the order of finish.

Thomas, Gillin and McGrail finished two-three-four as Clark took fifth. Wilson finished sixth, Graves seventh and Gerald LaFlamme of Maine took eighth. Staples ended up ninth in his first championship meet.

Coach O'Brien was concerned with the team splits, or the distance between team members. Only thirty-three seconds separated Thomas and the number seven man, Farmer. O'Brien pointed out that Staples ran as well as McGrail did in the 1973 Yankee Conference meet before he came on to spark the team in the New Englands and IC4A's. Maguire also ran his best race of the season, finishing tenth in 25:12.

Thomas and company now have to prepare for the New Englands, which will be held at Boston's Franklin Park a week from today. UMass will be entering the meet as the defending champions and will have to run as a cohesive team if the New England cross country title is to stay in Amherst.

Colgate, 42-34

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

HAMILTON, N.Y. — For three hours last Saturday, the end zones here at Andy Kerr Stadium became the second-most-densely populated area in the state, as Colgate and UMass rollicked to a combined total of 76 (seventy-six!?) points.

There's definitely no credence to the silly talk that Red Raider coach Neil Wheelwright and Dick MacPherson met beforehand and agreed, as in backyard two-hand touch, that's exactly what happened, with Colgate finishing on top, 42-34.

It was a meaty meal of a game, with a scrumptuous amount of Colgate scoring in the first three quarters — by way of a shocking six running touchdowns against UMass' previously unscored upon rushing defense. Then the pointfest was spiced with a heady Minuteman comeback that provided more than a pinch of fourth-quarter dramatics.

After fighting back from a 42-14 deficit to come within eight points, the Minutemen had a fourth and one at the Colgate 32. A little over five minutes were left. Quarterback Mark Tripucka, to everyone's surprise, faded back, looked deep left, and then threw short right to wide open tight-end Walt Parker.

Parker, who had earlier snared a seven-yard TD pass from Peter Colton, dropped this one. Colgate took possesion and things looked bleak for UMass.

But the Minutemen stopped Colgate, received a punt, and marched back to the Red Raider 30. With under two minutes left, Tripucka threw to Gary Mika at the fifteen, who leapt, caught the ball, and was immediately hit. The official ruled Mika out of bounds and the pass incomplete. Mika, displeased, spiked the ball. That resulted in a 15-yard delay-of-game penalty.

The Minutemen thus ended up punting after Tripucka was sacked by left defensive and Greg Sinapi. Colgate then got a couple of first downs to run out the clock.

It was a bitter ending to a 20-point comeback effort that started when Jerry Mondalto scampered thirty-one yards for his second TD of the game to make it 42-20.

Late in the third period, Ron Harris, who seemed to be getting clunked on every other play, returned a Jerry Andrewlavage punt 90 yards, only to be caught by that punter with the long name at the Colgate 7.

"We tried to take him out for that punt", said MacPherson afterwards, "but we couldn't" (due to Colgate's quick, no-huddle method of punting). "He would have gone all the way if he hadn't been shaken up so much before that." No matter, for shortly thereafter Colton threw the aforementioned TD to Parker.

Then, in the final quarter, Tripucka (who looked the best he has all year after replacing Colton, who had replaced him) lateralled to Mondalto who fired a 41-yard TD strike to flanker Mark Finnerty. The conversion pass to Finnerty made it the final 42-34.

Earlier, Colgate's wishbone offense made turkeys of the Umass defenders, as John Anderson rushed for three TD's and Pat Healy (24 carries for 100 yards) garnered two. Quarterback Bruce Basile ran for the other score.

A downcast MacPherson shook his head as he mulled over his usually reliable defense; "I was disappointed with the way they ran against us — especially outside"; and on a naggingly persistant part of his offense, "there were the fumbles (3) again".

UMass is now 4-4 and suddenly faces the prospect of having to bust their gut for a .500 season. The Minutemen are at Holy Cross next week, then face formidable New Hampshire, and finally Boston College.

Bills eke by Pats in 29-28 thriller

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — John Leypoldt kicked his third field goal of the game, a 47-yarder at the start of the fourth period, and the Buffalo defense blocked a last-minute field goal attempt by New England's John Smith to give the Bills a 29-28 victory Sunday over the Patriots and sole possession of first place in the AFC East.

Leypoldt's winning kick came five seconds into the final period, after the Bills had moved the ball to the New England 22.

New England, which lost its first game of the season two weeks ago, 30-28 at Buffalo, recovered an O. J. Simpson fumble at the Patriot 25 with 4:35 remaining. Quarterback Jim Plunkett moved the Patriots to the Buffalo 29, where the drive stalled. Smith, who earlier had missed a 47-yard goal, attempted one from the 46, but the kick was blocked by Earl Edwards and linebacker Dave Washington.

New England got three touchdowns from Mack Herron on passes of 43 and 25 yards from Plunkett in the first half and a two-yard run in the third period that gave the Patriots their final lead, 28-26.

After Smith's field goal attempt was blocked, Buffalo ran out the clock with three rushing plays.

Buffalo took the lead 4:50 into the game on Leypoldt's 45-yard field goal,

UMass and the Pats

Two football teams of local interest, the UMass Minutemen and the New England Patriots have had certain similarities so far in their 1974 seasons.

The UMass season, for all intents and purposes, is over. Sure, they can "sneak in the back door" and still win the Beanpot, but it will take a miracle to do so. Sloppy play in the form of turnovers led to defeat at Colgate on Saturday. A valiant comeback attempt in the fourth period almost resulted in victory, however catch-up football when you're four touchdowns behind is not the most enviable task there is.

I have been guilty (though not on these pages) of criticizing Rich Jessamy. At the UConn game I felt that Coach MacPherson should have ordered Jessamy to carry the ball all around campus — to classes and wherever he goes — to cure his penchant for fumbling. Jessamy scored the first Minuteman touchdowm vs. the toothpaste team and for a short-lived time, UMass enjoyed a lead. Jessamy, though, did play a good game Saturday and a fellow running back, Jerry Mondalto, came through with his best performance of the season. Mark Tripucka also had his moments of glory. But, following the one-point loss to their big rival the previous week, a non-conference game against a team from upstate New York could not inspire the best from the Minutemen. The rest of the schedule probably won't amount to much. It would be nice of beat BC now that the Eagles have lost Mike Esposito for the year, but don't bet on it. It'll most likely be a cakewalk for the Jesuits from Chestnut Hill.

The season was over on the blocked Greg Sprout field goal attempt in the waning moments at Alumni Stadium a week ago. The Huskies from UConn played the less sloppy game on that occasion and the result when your team has fewer turnovers is usually victory. Larry Naviaux can keep his Beanpot.

The Patriots have exceeded pre-season expectations what with the talk they were playing "one of the toughest schedules in the entire NFL." They've won six of their first eight games and are destined for their first winning season since the Paleolithic Era of 1966. They can still sneak in and gain a playoff berth — even as the wild card team from the American Conference.

The Patriots' big rival over the years dating all the way back to the birth of the old AFL in 1960 has been the Buffalo Bills. (as a matter of fact Lou Saban the current Bill kingfish was the original Pat mentor). Coming into yesterday's Gowdy-Derogatis-Meredith show, Buffalo led the all time series 15-14 with one tie. It was these two teams who battled in the snow and on an icy field, with every player wearing sneakers for traction, on a December day in 1963 at Fenway Park. Both squads had finished the regular season tied for the top rung in the AFL East and now were having this playoff game to see who would face the San Diego Chargers for the league championship. The Pats won and thus claimed their only divisional title in history. (though they got bombed 51-10 in the title game, it was a successful season)

And now both teams, the Pats and their rivals from upstate New York are back on top. And the Pats lost a home game to their rival by one point, just as the Minutemen did a week ago. Three points separate the Pats from an undefeated season at this time. Though their hopes for a playoff berth could have been jolted yesterday, the possibility still exists.

The Patriots lost this weekend the same way that UMass did. Turnovers were converted into scores by Buffalo. With six games left, they will have their winning record. But Buffalo is lucky. They got the breaks, they weren't as sloppy as the Pats. (and when a team plays 60 minutes without punting they ususally win)

Two distinct teams having similar problems on the same weekend. One team is through for the season. The other, no matter what happens from here on, has been a success.

World Food Conference

Panel suggests rich nations spread the wealth

ROME [AP] — A panel of economists and food experts sounded yesterday what probably will emerge as the central theme of the World Food Conference: Americans and other affluent people had better eat less or face a confrontation with half a billion hungry people.

At the same time, the panel suggested that countries of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries spread around their new wealth among the other Third World nations. They and the rich nations annually should invest $2½ billion each in poor nations, the group said.

"Societies do not survive long in moral isolation or human indifference, least of all on a planet made one by physical interdependence and a shared biosphere," the group said in a report issued on the eve of the 11-day conference.

"We do not believe that either the 'old rich' of the industrialized world or the 'new rich' within OPEC could live in peace and self-respect in a planet moving toward recurrent famine."

Headed by British economist Barbara Ward and including Nobel laureate Norman Borlaug and former U.S. Agriculture Secretary Orville Freeman, the panel met for three days to focus opinion on the world's food crisis. Its report is expected to have impact on delegates from Asia, Africa and Latin America, where most of the world's hungry live.

"Megadeaths from famine are not less terrible than the slaughter of war," the report said. "They require the same political effort and authority to hold them at bay."

Government ministers from more than 100 countries are to attend the conference organized by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. Conference planners have proposed three main tactics for a war on hunger:

—Increase food production in developing countries by a minimum of 35 per cent by 1985.

—Improve distribution systems to insure more equitable consumption of existing supplies.

—Establish a system of food reserves as insurance against crop failures and other disasters. A half-million-ton supply for use in relief operations would be strategically placed and controlled by an international body like the FAO.

In Brussels, U.S. Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz endorsed the idea of food reserves and increased production among the poor countries as answers to the world crisis. He also said the burden of food aid should be spread more evenly among the rich countries and suggested that the oil nations contribute more at least toward allaying increased costs of transporting food donations.

On-campus residency defended in SOP hearings

by LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Bromery and Associate Provost John Hunt defended mandatory dorm residency for financial reasons in a hearing on Educational Value and Environmental Psychology of dorm life last night.

Bromery told an overflow crowd in Baker Lounge: "By law we have to pay the debts off. Somehow we have to work out a different financing arrangement. Somehow the state is going to have to subsidize part of the cost of residence halls."

However Bromery did not conclude the mandatory residency will be permanent. "One expects that this compulsion regulation will go by the wayside," he said.

A student in the audience objected, "I think it's infringing on my rights to be required to be living in a dormitory."

Bromery replied: "I agree with you".

He then countered by saying, "If we just said everybody could live where they want, the impact of this would be that the private sector would raise prices (of housing)."

He pointed out that this would be unfair to students already living off campus.

Student Organizing Project member John Pepi questioned the lack of control of students over residential life. He pointed out: "A primary role of the educational system in this country is to prepare students for participation in a democratic society."

See details of tomorrow's meeting on page 16

Bromery responded: "I think people in the Office of Students should facilitate decision making in residence halls."

"I think you're going to find that there is more democracy here than you will find outside the university," he added.

John Hunt defended the mandatory dorm fees saying: "There is no possible way that we can endanger rent."

John Pepi read out loud a letter by Hunt written in 1971 saying: "Our observations suggest, however, that the experience of residential living is as likely as not to be destructive to the possibility of human growth and development of intellectual ability."

In the letter Hunt also described "deterioration of ability to have mature relationships" and "atrophy of the decision making faculty in the individual" as characteristics "prominent among Southwest residents."

Direct fares, passes might finance bus service

By MARTIN J. WATERS
Staff Reporter

This is the second in a two-part series on the parking and transportation system at UMass.

Today: the future of busing and parking.

A plan to start more direct collection of fares for the UMass bus system and another attempt to close parking lots in the center of campus over strong opposition are being considered as part of a long-term master plan for the parking and transportation system.

The parking and transportation council, a 14-member advisory group, is expected to formally ask for a study of alternative funding methods for the buses from Robert J. Godding, director of the student senate transit service.

The council includes two members from each of seven groups: the chancellor's office, the faculty, graduate and undergraduate student senates, and the three labor unions.

The chairperson of the council, Dr. Alan J. Gross of the division of public health, is a leading supporter of financing the buses with fares.

Under such a system riders would buy monthly passes to be displayed when boarding a bus; a fee would be deducted from employee paychecks and added to student bills; or fares would be collected on the buses.

One of those payment methods would more fairly distribute the cost of the buses among those who actually ride them, according to supporters of the plan.

Dispute over the proposal centers on lack of information and assertions from critics that the bus users are now paying most of the bill.

Funds from the bus service come from the student senates, general University allocation and the "convenience" parking fees. One purpose of the convenience fee is to help pay for the buses which reduce congestion on the roads and in the parking lots, according to parking and transportation director Robert W. Kittle.

The convenience fee ranges from $12 to $50 above the basic registration fee of $3 for renewals and $5 for new patrons.

Some segments of the campus community object to the use of fees paid by car owners to operate buses used by others. The Massachusetts State Employes Association (MSEA), a union of over 500 UMass physical plant workers, has been most vocal.

The 1973-74 final report of the parking and transportation council includes a statement by MSEA that free parking convenient to the work place must be a condition of employment.

A check of council records shows that students have not written with suggestions or complaints, for the most part. Letters from faculty and staff fill the report.

Council member Joseph Lemanski, a graduate student in the department of mechanical engineering, says students did not appear at the weekly meetings either.

"I think it's because students are used to being pushed around," Lemanski adds.

Several professors wrote that undergraduate students should not be allowed to have cars on campus, or be limited to the use of peripheral lots, as a solution to the parking problem.

Med college admissions criteria questioned

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

Dr. Lamar Soutter, Dean of the UMass medical school, said yesterday the medical college will accept a qualified 22-year-old applicant before it accepts an equally qualified applicant who is 25 or older.

Soutter said the reason for the age policy is based on records which show students 25 or older have a "high failure rate" from medical college.

He denied, however, that the admissions policy was specifically aimed at veterans, but simply referred to any applicant 25 or older. "Anytime we can give a veteran a break we do so," he said.

Speaking on campus last week, however, Soutter told an audience that the medical college will "everytime" accept a 22-year old student before accepting an "academically equivalent" applicant who is 28.

The Dean said two of the 150 students now in the school were 25 or older when accepted. For sure, he said, one of them is a veteran. Soutter said that person has a Ph.D in physiology and is an "excellent student."

Reached at his office in Boston yesterday UMass President Robert Wood said the trustees, although they seldom become involved in the University's admission policy, may decide to look into the veteran situation at the medical school.

"Dr. Soutter's comment is only his opinion, but it could have some impact on the medical school's admission committee," Wood said.

Tom Reardon a spokesman for Governor Francis Sargent, said he did not want to immediately comment on Soutter's statements, but added the office could get "concerned" if there is a pattern of discrimination at the Medical School.

Amherst American Legion commander, Herbert Scurrah said, he was "disappointed" with the Medical School and University as a whole for not meeting the "needs" of veterans.

The UMass medical school, located in Worcester, this year graduated its first class of 16 medical students. One of the graduates was a former hospital corpsman in the U.S. Navy.

This year the school accepted 64 students and current plans are to accept 100 students for next September's class. Administrators do not expect the freshman class to grow beyond 100 students for many years.

CC overtime pay procedures underway

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

The Campus Center must and will pay students back overtime pay for all hours worked in excess of 8 in one day, as well as in excess of 40 in one week, John Corker, Director of the Campus Center told the Collegian recently.

Corker said that he, Timothy Cox, Campus Center Personnel Director, Gerald Scanlon, Dean of Student Employment; and Robert A. Gartska, Personnel Officer for the University; had a meeting last Thursday afternoon, October 31, to finally get the question of overtime straightened out.

At the meeting, Corker said it was finalized that the Campus Center must pay overtime for hours worked in excess of 8 in one day as well as in excess of 40 in one week. Corker mentioned a memorandum he had received from Gartska on October 23.

This memo Gartska wrote he had investigated the question of overtime compensation and under which circumstances it must be paid with legal counsel, the bureau of Personnel and Standardization, and the department of Labor and Industries.

The memo said student employees, since they are state employees, fall under the provisions of Massachusetts General Law and are thus due the overtime pay at the rate of 1½ times the regular pay rate.

Corker said that the Campus Center only has time cards covering the past 16 months while by law they are required to pay back overtime pay owed over the last 24 months.

At the meeting Corker said they found they actually were required to maintain time cards for three years before discarding them. He said they will do so in the future.

However, Corker said he did not know how they will handle the payment of back overtime pay for the 8 months they don't have time cards for.

He said Whitmore has the pay records of the Campus Center over the past seven years. However, these, no student is noted as having worked over 40 hours in one week. The policy was to hold over the overtime hours to be submitted the next week that the student worked under 40 hours, and could have extra hours submitted.

Corker said this week they will pull all time cards with overtime hours noted but it will probably be two weeks before everything is turned in. While they have already pulled some of these cards, Corker said all records will be double-checked to make sure all have been pulled.

He said all the data will be fed into the computer and then one check will be given to each person to whom overtime is owed that will cover all the money owed them.

Searching for Dracula

Dracula may not have been a vampire but, according to Professor Radu Florescu, who will speak tonight in the S.U.B. at 8:00, "The count was as fiendish as his fictional reputation."

Author of In Search of Dracula, Florescu has spent years researching evidence that the legendary count was not only a real 15th century Romanian prince, but also a master of maniacal cruelty.

"Vlad the Impaler" as Dracula is nicknamed, lived near the Transylvanian border, in a castle which Florescu has explored several times.

The local villages are the source of many chilling stories of the real Dracula. These stories plus a film of scenes from horror movies and views of Transylvania will be featured at tonight's lecture sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

MassPIRG reports

Small Claims Court still 'people's court'

By DONALD J. PARSONS
Small Claims Court

The following is a report from MassPIRG, the Public Interest Research Group of Massachusetts.

Your landlord will not return your security deposit. You brought your car in to have the oil changed and wound up with a bill for new oil seals. What do you do? First, you demand satisfaction, if denied you simply make use of your Small Claims Court.

Small claims court had its origin in the 1920's. The concept is an excellent one: to provide a 'people's court' to facilitate cheap, efficient, lawyer-free settlement of small consumer disputes. By creating an informal court atmosphere where people can tell their stories in their own words at their own pace to an impartial judge, it was hoped that an efficient forum for resolving everyday consumer grievances had been realized. But there are problems.

In the years of its existence, the small claims courts have developed some rather serious shortcomings:

a) Many people do not know the court exists; others do not know how to use it efficiently. And many people who want to make use of it cannot because the courts only schedule daytime hearings at times when most people are at work.

b) The court is being used by the wrong people. Corporations are using the court to collect debts.

c) The discriminatory attitude of some of the court officials (clerks, judges and sheriffs) has led potential users of the court to feel that the small claims courts are biased toward big business and will not guarantee them the justice that they seek.

There have been moves to reform the court by barring lawyers and corporations from the courts, providing evening and Saturday hearing hours for the convenience of working people and speeding up the process for collection of money after court case decisions.

Another real problem is the fear that people have of courts in general. There has been a Federal Bill filed to provide individual States with money to institute programs to improve the quality of the courts. In Massachusetts this money might be used to hire "counselors" to advise people on their cases and thereby make them comfortable and less fearful of the small claims courts.

The sponsors of the Federal Bill recognize the fact that there needs to be a system of justice, catering to lower-income citizens, for the redress of relatively small consumer grievances. Without such a system, these small, easily resolvable problems can grow and fester into larger problems and give vent to criminal actions.

Despite the shortcomings of the small claims courts, indeed because of them, it is important that people make use of the courts and the services they provide. If more individuals rather than businesses do use the courts, then there are indications that the quality of justice will be improved and the mechanisms for redress in small claims court will run more smoothly until it again exists as the 'peoples court.'

The procedure to be followed in small claims court is very simple. Your claim must not be criminal or libellous in nature and cannot exceed $400.00. The court only allows for money settlements. The process is:

1) You file suit in the District Court where the person or business you are suing officially resides. You pay the $3.55 fee to the Small Claims Court clerk, filling out the form provided.

2) You will immediately be given a day and a time for which your hearing is scheduled. Usually 2-6

Prof gets first hand feel of jail

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

"I think I enjoyed the experience more than I'd like to admit. I had more free time, no calls or appointments and I was being 'taken care of.' I didn't have to make plans, they were made for me," was the response from Professor of Education Alfred S. Alschuler when asked about his weekend prison stay last May.

Alschuler entered the Berkshire County House of Correction in Pittsfield for a three day weekend in May in order to evaluate the Model Education Program instituted in the House of Correction. The purpose of the program is to change the emphasis in prison from 'crime-oriented' to 'education-oriented.'

There are various programs and options for the inmates to become involved in such as work-release (prisoners go out and work during the day, return in the evening), study-release, and volunteer programs such as working at Belchertown State School. "Prison should be an educational resource for the community," according to Alschuler.

"Seventy percent of those in county jails are not there for life, but are holdovers awaiting trial or sentence. Prisons are like schools of crime and when prisoners talk with each other they talk about crime, and thus reinforce each other" he said. "It becomes a cycle the prisoner may find difficult or impossible to break."

Crime is a game like anything in life, Alschuler found. It is a high risk game, and it can be exciting. Time in jail is considered an occupational hazard; if you're not willing to take the risks, you shouldn't play the game, he said. The goal for the program is to change the desire to go out and commit crimes to preparing the inmate for something useful and instilling a desire for learning and thus break the cycle, added Alschuler.

Alschuler, Chairman of the Human Applications Cluster, said that the "real shocker" for him was not his prison stay, but his reaction when he left the prison.

"I wasn't told about what the prison would be like but I wasn't apprehensive about going there. The atmosphere was friendly, the inmates were interested in talking about school and education. When I got out, however, I found that I couldn't stay in one room for more than a couple of hours, I had to get in the car and drive around...", he said.

Alschuler said he felt it was a good experience and found many prisoners were seriously getting involved in education. "At night, people were found in their rooms studying, instead of playing cards. It's almost like a dorm, but in a much more restricted atmosphere."

Hunt memo released at trial

Nixon failed to pardon burglars, memo says

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Watergate cover-up prosecutor James F. Neal disclosed yesterday a long-hidden "bombshell document" accusing the Nixon administration of failing to provide promised money and pardons for seven defendants in the Watergate break-in trial.

E. Howard Hunt Jr., a mastermind of the Watergate bugging and one of the break-in defendants, testified last week in the Watergate cover-up trial that he wrote the memo Nov. 14, 1972, and gave it to his attorney, William O. Bittman.

The memo said that the seven defendants had not wanted to break into the Democratic headquarters in the Watergate either on Memorial Day weekend of 1972 or the following June 17 because Democratic National Chairman Lawrence O'Brien was rarely in his office.

"Objections were overridden and the attempt was loyally made," Hunt wrote.

The memo said the defendants' sponsors "compounded the fiasco" by indecisiveness, failure to quash the initial investigation, permitting an FBI investigation of "unprecedented scope and vigor," permitting defendants to fall into the hands of "a paranoid judge" -a reference to presiding Judge John J. Sirica - failure to provide promised support funds, and "an apparent wash-hands attitude now that the election has been won."

"The administration, however, remains deficient in living up to its commitments," the memo said. "These commitments were and are: 1. finance support, 2. legal defense fees, 3. pardons, 4. rehabilitation."

The memo also pointed out that the Watergate bugging was "only one of a number of highly illegal conspiracies engaged in by one or more of the defendants at the behest of senior White House officials." It also pointed out that "congressional elections will take place in less than two years."

"Half measures will be unacceptable," the memo said. "The foregoing should not be misinterpreted as a threat. It is among other things a reminder that loyalty has always been a two-way street."

Hunt had said he made no copies and did not know where the memo was. With the jury of eight blacks and four whites out of the courtroom, Neal said Bittman disclosed to his during the weekend that he had received the memo -which he characterized as a "bombshell document" -but had not divulged this to the grand jury or the special prosecutor.

Lawyers for defendants H.R. Haldeman, former White House chief of staff and Kenneth W. Parkinson, former lawyer for the Committee to Re-Elect the President, immediately asked for a mistrial. Judge Sirica denied the Haldeman motion, and did not act on the Parkinson motion pending his consideration of the circumstances of calling Hunt back to the stand.

Courtroom observers said the memo provided little new information. But it serves, they said, to "rehabilitate" Hunt, who has admitted he has lied in the past, as a witness, and it poses new problems for Bittman, one of 20 unindicted co-conspirators in the case.

A farmer aims his pistol at his dairy cow as another cattle kill begins to protest low prices. Farmers in central Minnesota claim that it takes $50 to raise a calf that can be sold for only $35. Around 100 calves and pigs were killed yesterday.

Demonstrators protest appearance of PLO

NEW YORK [UPI] - Thousands of pro-Israel demonstrators yesterday jammed a three-block area across from the United Nations to protest the scheduled General Assembly appearance of delegates representing the Arab guerrilla Palestine Liberation Organization.

Five blocks away, security men surrounded a group of about 20 pro-Arab demonstrators carrying "Welcome PLO" signs.

Separating the two groups were federal, city and United Nations security officers. City police boats patroled the East River alongside the world headquarters. The main U.N. buildings were closed to the public during the noontime rally.

Both gatherings were peaceful but police reported 12 arrests of reputed members of the militant Jewish Defense League. They were taken into custody when they sat down in the street near the pro-Arab protest.

The rallies caused massive midtown traffic jams on the East Side.

There was no official estimate of the number of pro-Israel demonstrators, many wearing yarmulkas and carrying placards reading "Arafat Go Home," but police sources placed the figure at close to 50,000.

Among the speakers at the pro-Israeli rally was former Israeli defense Minister Moshe Dayan. "The fate of Israel will not be decided by the PLO or at Arab summit meetings in Rabat. It will be decided by the soldiers of Israel; our fate will be decided by ourselves," Dayan said.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., who has championed efforts to ease, emmigration for Soviet Jews, as greeted by prolonged applause.

He told the crowd that the PLO was "a murderous band which represents no one but itself."

Coal strike would seriously hurt nation's economy, experts say

By United Press International

A strike -even a short one - by the nation's coal miners would have a severe impact on the U.S. economy and could put as many as one million persons out of work, economists said yesterday.

"Such a strike could have far reaching effects on both industry and employment," economists at Chase Manhattan bank said in a new study.

"Steel, railroads and electric utilities would be the first sectors to feel the impact but the effects could spread beyond these industries if the strike were to be an extended one," the report said.

The United Mine Workers, which represents 120,000 miners, has threatened a nationwide strike on Nov. 12, unless a new contract is reached. The possiblity of a strike was heightened Sunday when negotiations broke off in Washington between the UMW and mine owners, represented by the Bituminous Coal Association.

UMW miners produce about 70 per cent of all coal in the United States.

In addition to its impact on industry, a coal strike could add up to one million workers to the nation's unemployment roles, according to government reports. This would drive the unemployment rate, now at a three-year high of 6 per cent, to 7 per cent.

The Chase Manhattan economists said the U.S. economy is "particularly ill prepared to withstand a long strike."

"Coal inventories are generally low. Since the threat of strike surfaced last spring, coal users have found it difficult to accumulate inventories capable of carrying them through a long strike," they said.

The latest available survey of the 1,500 manufacturing plants, excluding steel, that depend on coal for their primary energy source showed that only a 30-day supply had been stored, with some plants holding only enough "for a week or two."

Frederick G. Jaicks, chairman of Inland Steel Co. and head of the American Iron and Steel Institute, warned that a coal strike would "shutdown the steel industry overnight."

Major steel producers have less than a 20-day supply of coal on hand.

Coal strike appears certain after walkout

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With negotiations broken off and the United Mine Workers preparing for a walkout, a nationwide coal strike Nov. 12 appeared virtually inevitable despite White House efforts yesterday to get the talks going again.

William J. Usery Jr., the chief presidential labor trouble-shooter, met separately with the top negotiators for the UMW and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association in an effort to get them back to the negotiating table quickly. He expressed hope a strike could be headed off.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, meanwhile, told reporters that "talk of a coal strike is premature" and said President Ford hopes to avert a walkout. He said it was "much, much too premature" to discuss whether Ford might invoke the Taft-Hartley Act to postpone a strike.

Ends widely televised campaign

High turnout predicted for state election

BOSTON [AP] - More than 80 per cent of the state's nearly 3 million voters were expected to cast ballots in the Massachusetts election today, ending one of the most widely televised campaigns in the state's history.

The state Election Division forecast a voter turnout as high as 81 or 82 per cent is skies remain clear, with heavy participation particularly in the Boston area. However the U.S. Weather Service predicted an 80 per cent chance of rain statewide for today.

The face of all the candidates have become familiar to voters, after a series of four televised meetings between the gubernatorial candidates and numerous television appearances of other office seekers.

A Boston Globe poll published yesterday became a last-minute factor in the election, drawing angry reactions from some candidates.

The Globe poll, which had shown Democrat Michael S. Dukakis leading the governor's race in mid October by 25 percentage points, now showed him only 6 points ahead of Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

A spokesman for Dukakis said, "I don't think their poll of this morning is any more on target than their poll of two weeks ago."

She said Dukakis' own polls have shown him consistently with "a healthy lead."

"The Globe's perception of this gubernatorial race merits a good deal of discussion on Wednesday," said Dukakis press aide, Mary Fifield.

In that race, Sargent has taken the tack of the challenger and the underdog, criticizing the proposals and promises made by Dukakis.

The candidates are ideologically similar, and the campaign has turned on the contrast in personalities between what one commentator called "Folksy Frank" Sargent and "Mighty Mike" Dukakis.

At stake, in part, is the future of the state's Republican party, which is fighting to maintain its tenuous grip on power at the State House.

Sargent and Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight are virtually the only Republicans in positions of political influence on Beacon Hill.

If Dukakis and running mate Thomas P. O'Neill III are elected, Democrats will control both the executive and legislative branches of state government.

Republicans are not even contesting the re-election of Democratic State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane and Auditor Thaddeus Buczko.

However they are involved in races for the statewide offices of attorney general and state secretary.

Former Democratic Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti was the favorite in the campaign for attorney general, but the Globe poll now shows Republican Josiah A. Spaulding leading by two percentage points.

Both men are experienced political losers. Bellotti has run for statewide office four times and lost three of them. Spaulding, a former chairman of the state Republican party, ran and lost in an attempt to unseat Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The race for state secretary is between 10-year state Sen. John M. Quinlan, R-Norwood, and four-year Rep. Paul H. Guzzi, D-Newton.

Both bill themselves as fresh young faces, aiming to throw out the political establishment. Guzzi defeated seven-year incumbent John F. X. Davoren in the September primary.

The Globe poll gave Guzzi an 18 point lead, evoking an angry Quinlan response.

In the legislature, the GOP is conceding most of the seats by default, and the Democrats are virtually assured of keeping their grip on a 3-1 margin in both House and Senate.

Ford urges high voter turnout to show confidence in America

WASHINGTON [AP] - As Republicans braced for major off-year Democratic gains, President Ford urged Americans to vote today to show confidence in the nation's political system - a system struggling with economic woes and shaken by scandal.

"You will not just be voting for Democrats or Republicans," Ford said yesterday.

"You will be casting your vote of confidence in the United States of America."

Ford's election-eve statement from the White House Rose Garden did not mention Watergate. But it was implicit in the prospect of a voter backlash facing his Republican party.

The final Associated Press survey shows Democrats have a chance at two-thirds control of both the House and Senate and a record number of governorships in the first election to feel the full brunt of the Watergate scandal and the nation's economic problems.

While the survey and other polls pointed toward above-average off-year gains by Democrats, there were forecasts of a far below average voter turnout.

Some surveys indicated a record low turnout of less than 40 per cent, a figure cited by Ford in his message.

"If this is true," Ford said, "the Congress with which I must work ... to control inflation, strengthen the economy and preserve peace in the world, could be elected by only 21 per cent of the voters. I don't think anyone wants that kind of minority decision."

Ford and his spokesmen refused to make specific re-election predictions, but the President expressed hope last week that the current Republican-Democratic ratios would stay basically unchanged.

The latest AP survey, based on reports from bureaus in all 50 states, recent polls and interviews with political strategists and candidates, yielded this picture:

Senate - The Democrats have a good chance of holding all 20 of their own seats up for re-election, and to gain from five to seven of the 14 Republican seats at stake. This could mean a new Senate with 63 to 65 Democrats, compared with the present 58-42 margin.

Candidates find new out in disclosure law

BOSTON [UPI] - Some Massachusetts political candidates have discovered legal ways to avoid making full disclosure about their campaign fund raising activities despite the requirements of a new, tough campaign finance reform law.

Reports on file with the state campaign and finance office show candidates legally have received contributions under the new law from various groups and associations without identifying the original source of the funds.

In addition, the reports show what many had assumed was a strict $1,000 limit on contributions does not apply to those same groups and associations.

Though legislators and state officials are relunctant to call them "loopholes," they have acknowledged that there are "problems with the new law" and a bstantial redraft is expected sometime during the next session.

House Election Committee Chairman George Keverian, D-Everett, already is working on that redraft and he said it will probably be forthcoming even if the state's voters approve a binding referendum question on campaign finance reform.

"Most people are quick to say they expect me to make the two laws fit together," Keverian said.

As Keverian pointed out, if the referendum question is approved, it will automatically become effective Dec. 5, replacing a law which is less than a year old and now in the shakedown process. The new bill early in the next session, would give Massachusetts three campaign finance laws within a year.

Keverian defended the existing law, which he helped draft, and disclaimed reports of confusion.

"By and large I don't think it's been as confusing as some people have made it out to be. It has produced detailed and timely reports," he said. The committee chairman said recent debates over loans have provided most of the confusion.

"And politics has become involved," he added.

"That area will have to be worked on, since it was never given that much consideration," he added.

Other state officials, however, have acknowledged several other problem areas in the law.

Butz proposes new food agency to feed world

BRUSSELS [UPI] - Secretary of agriculture Earl L. Butz yesterday proposed a new international food agency to bring the resources of the Soviet Union and wealthy oil nations into efforts to feed the world's hungry.

Butz said shortly before departing for Rome that creation of a small food organization to supplement the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization may be one of the results of the World Food Conference opening Tuesday in Rome.

"The FAO does not include one of the world's leading food-producing and food-consuming nations, the Soviet Union," he said.

"I think any program like this that will involve a better monitoring of food supplies...to be meaningful, must have some input from the Soviet Union."

"By the same token, one of the groups of nations currently able, and which is exhibiting some willingness, to increase their participation in world food aid programs, are the oil-producing nations."

Pierre Lardinois, the Common Market agricultural commissioner, said he had learned FAO would propose an associate agency to give the Soviet Union a share in the world food effort.

He said the Common Market itself is "not very much in favor of creating new bodies where other bodies exist to do the job." He said FAO Chairman Addeke H. Boerma, however, would propose a new body "not totally separate from the FAO."

Accidents are major concern to coal miners

More than 100,000 coal miners have been killed in mine accidents in this country since the turn of the century. The mines are less dangerous today than they used to be, but mine safety remains a subject of hot dispute in the coalfields and at the bargaining table when labor contracts are negotiated.

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer
Part 1 of a 2 part series

FAIRDALE, W. Va. [AP] — A chewing tobacco commercial making the rounds on many Appalachian radio stations these days opens with a deep-voiced country and western singer commiserating with the men who work in the coal mines.

"You have respect for the mine...pay attention all the time," the singer tells his listeners, before going into the particular pleasure offered by his product.

"Pay attention all the time..." Here in southern West Virginia, where many men spend their entire working lives in the dark, dusty tunnels beneath the ancient hills, the message strikes a responsive chord — especially in Tory Henderson, who is 24.

A slender, fair-haired man from nearby Glen Daniel, Henderson is a bituminous coal miner — one of the 120,000 men who mine 95 percent of the nation's coal. His empathy with the chewing tobacco jingle stems from events at the Maple Meadow Mining Co. one recent morning.

On the day in question, Handerson and three other men were working on a water pump near the bottom of a 2,800-foot supply slope at the mine. Suddenly, a voice began shouting over the safety phone, some 75 feet up the steep, dark shaft.

"I couldn't make out what the hollering was all about," he recalled. "But I didn't have to; I'd already heard it coming and had seen the fire where the pipe was scraping metal."

Seven tons of twisted metal pipe had broken loose from a surface cable and were hurtling down the 12-foot-wide tunnel like a runaway locomotive. By the time Henderson looked up from his work, the tangled maze had slid more than a third of the way down the 17-degree slope and was gaining momentum every second.

Henderson dropped his wrench and made a desperate leap for a narrow rock ledge on the tunnel wall. No sooner had his feet landed on the ledge, than the monstrous mass roared past and slammed into the face of the shaft, 50 feet behind him.

The impact was defening. Dust and smoke filled the air.

Henderson jumped down from his four-foot-wide perch and landed on shaky legs. The only light came from his helmet lamp, and there was no sound of human voices.

"I saw one body on the ground in front of me. It was dark and smoky and I was scared. I broke and ran for help," he said with an apologetic little shrug.

Seated in his cozy living room, Henderson showed little emotion as he recalled that fateful morn. His two small children were in the back bedroom and his wife, Meta, was fixing dinner. The accident was the first he's been involved in since he became a miner in 1971.

The three other men in the supply slope were killed instantly. It was the second time this year that a triple mine fatality had occurred in this part of District 29 of the United Mine Workers of America.

"We've lost 16 brothers in our district so far this year," said Everett Acord, the UMW's chief safety coordinator in the district, where some 14,000 miners are employed.

Tomorrow: Union demands.

Wisconsin nuclear power plant protested by two hundred

MADISON, Wis. [AP] — Plans to build a $1 billion nuclear power plant at Lake Koshkonong were protested by about 200 persons Sunday who marched to the Capitol and then to the offices of the Wisconsin Public Service commission.

Stephen Brown of Madison, a representative of Concerned Citizens of Wisconsin, said farmers opposed the stringing of addition electric transmission towers in conjunction with the plant. He said they would be a threat to health, devalue land and be an eyesore.

"According to the PSC application, there will be as many as three lines on some farms in Dane County," he said.

Brown said the PSC should consider alternate methods of delivering electricity such as stacking additional transmission lines on existing towers.

A moratorium on construction of nuclear power plants was urged by other speakers.

"We can't allow Wisconsin citizens to become the guinea pigs for power companies," Dane County Supervisor Albert Holmquist said.

The protestors taped anti-Koshkonong material to the main doors of the state building in which the PSC offices are located in the hope that commissioners would see them when they arrived at work Monday.

Nixon improved

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon's condition improved enough yesterday for him to try walking in his hospital room but doctors were concerned about a small congestion of fluid in one lung.

The 61-year-old Nixon was being encouraged to cough and breathe deeply to dissipate the deposit of fluid which is a complication fairly common in patients who have to lie on their backs for a long period after operations.

The morning medical bulletin issued by Dr. John Lungren said Nixon "still continues to show gradual improvement" and that his vital signs were stable.

"We will attempt careful ambulation today in his room with help," Lungren said. "During this activity he will be closely monitored."

It was the first time that Nixon had tried walking since he went into a state of shock and almost died last Tuesday following surgery to block passage of blood clots.

Car stickers stolen

BOSTON [AP] — A continuing demand for fake or stolen auto inspection stickers keeps some thiefs and counterfeiters in business in Massachusetts according to David J. Lucey, Massachusetts Registrar of Motor Vehicles.

Motorists who face expensive repairs to meet inspection standards would apparently rather pay $15 or $20 for a phoney sticker, he said.

The problem is a continuing one, and peaks every year at inspection time. About 4,900 possibly stolen inspection sticker numbers were reported to police this weekend.

Last year, the number of unaccounted for stickers was about 4,000.

Counterfeiting is an ongoing problem, but one that does not seem any worse this year than it has been in the past.

The registry is also investigating a scheme to counterfeit new car ownership certificates to be used in selling stolen out-of-state cars.

Lawyers argue busing

BOSTON [AP] — The lawyer for the Boston school committee argued yesterday before the U.S. Court of Appeals that the committee was not responsible for whatever segregation has existed in the city's public schools.

But the lawyer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People argued that the committee was.

As they argued, some 200 students refused to enter Hyde Park High School after a fight broke out between black and white students. Elsewhere, the situation was generally quiet.

Parking lots...

Most of the money contributed to bus operations by student government groups is earmarked for the expenses of nighttime and "outreach" bus runs: the South Deerfield, Belchertown center and South Amherst routes.

Martha Esquivel, a council member and a representative on the commuter assembly, says that commuting students are taxed most heavily for bus service. They pay part of the $10,000 subsidy from the student senate and the $15,000 given by the commuter assembly, according to her.

Bus director Godding says it appears commuting students are also the heaviest bus users. He expresses serious doubts about the proposal to scrap the present bus budget system and charge riders directly.

"No one has sat down and done a definite analysis yet, though. The council wants a clearer picture of who uses the buses and who pays for them, and we need that," Godding says.

He also cites potential legal problems if fares are charged: "We've tried to avoid conflict with the commercial carriers. A formal complaint might mean the federal government would back out."

One condition of the federal grant which bought most of the equipment in the transit system was that UMass would not compete with bus companies in the region.

Godding is applying for a new Dept. of Transportation grant to purchase ten more buses, build a maintenance garage and cover the cost of transferring ownership of the present fleet from the government to UMass. Godding estimates total cost a little over $1 million.

Increased service to South Amherst is the main aim of the new grant proposal, Godding said, adding that he expects some relief of overcrowding on other routes.

"The greening of the campus" is a phrase attached to a years-old plan to transform the parking lots in the central campus to lawns with rows of shrubbery.

The plan is related to the proposed construction of a new road and the closing of North Pleasant St. to eliminate motor traffic through the campus.

Last spring Kittle proposed closing parking lot 65, adjacent to the main engineering building complex. Opposition was very strong and the transportation council "was 100 per cent against it," according to Martha Esquivel. A petition with over 100 signatures opposed the lot closing and the idea was dropped.

The idea is not dead, however. Kittle says it is possible one or more of the core parking lots will close after this academic year. He mentions lot 65 as one under consideration for closing.

Closing the core lots will be a focus of the transportation and parking master plan, which Kittle says should be ready for presentation in rough form to the council by December.

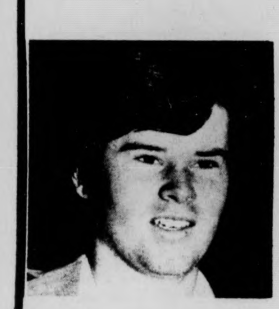
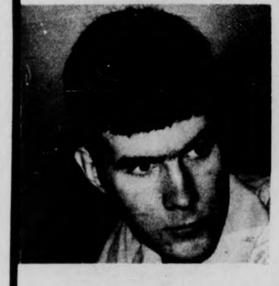
It's election day, time to apply the processes that theoretically maintain the people as the soverign body. Campus Comments decided to learn how much faith people have in this essential democratic process.

The questions - Are you going to vote? Do you think your vote counts?



Richard Grady-Sophomore from Braintree living in Dickinson majoring in Natural Resources Economics. What elections? I'm not registered, I just didn't feel like it. I'm not apathetic, I just don't feel it will do any good. It's not much of a choice, really. I'm interested in politics and everything, I just don't think voting carries any weight.

Nancy Elwell-Senior from Northampton majoring in Art. I don't know anything about politics. I think that no matter what you know, you never know the truth. You can't trust anybody. I think the United States should be a Socialist country. Everything for the people, nothing for Rockefeller. Make Rockefeller work.



Vincent Walsh-Freshman from Weymouth living in Baker. I missed out on registration here and I can't get home to vote. I'd definitely like to vote. In a lot of instances, the politicians are different from each other. Like in my home town, in the twelfth district, Gerry Studds the Democrat versus his Republican opponent. The two of them are very different.

Debi Huisken-Sophomore from Lynnfield living in Dickinson majoring in Comparative Literature. I'm not going to vote tomorrow because I don't know much about it. It's not that it's a dull election, it's just that I haven't had time to find out about the candidates. I don't want to vote for somebody I don't know anything about.

Dan Rackliffe-Sophomore from Springfield majoring in Geology. Whether it's worth it or not, you have to vote to get some say in the matter, because they give you a choice which I feel is more or less the worse of two evils. I'm going to go down and vote because I want to get my ideas in there. A lot of people say "I don't have enough time to go out and vote and what difference does it make if I vote, anyways?

Jim Jackson-Freshman from Methuen living in Dickinson majoring in Business. I'm not registered. Dukakis has too many ideas. I don't think he's logical enough. He sounds like he wants to get things done, but he's not going about in the right manner.

They say today is V-day, OK

By REID FISHMAN

This years local elections present an interesting contrast between Democrats and Republicans. On the one hand, John Olver and Jim Collins have been outspoken in their proposals towards education and increased aid to mental health programs. Both have only been in their respective positions for two years, and both show good prospects for re-election.

On the other hand, McCarthy and Atkins have criticized the Democrats for spending too much and being afraid to say, "no". They are running on their years of community experience and the feeling that the common person has been neglected by state government. They both provide plausible alternatives to the liberal Democratic policies.

What emerges is an unusual contrast between Democrats and Republicans in what could be a most interesting election year.

For State Senator

By REID FISHMAN

Democrat: John Olver
Address: 1333 West St., Amherst
Telephone: 256-6643
Occupation: State Senator
Education: B.S. Renselleer Politechnical Institute
Masters: Tufts
PHD. in Chemistry: MIT
Public Service: 4 yrs. State Representative 1968-72
State Senator since 1972

Senator Olver favors increased aid to the Belchertown State School and is a member of the Special Commission on the Belchertown State School. He fostered the program for the Children's Center in Northampton and considers this to be a great accomplishment to his record. As President of the Holyoke Range Utilities program, he has worked hard towards wildlife conservation. He is viewed in the State Senate as the expert on utility matters.

Republican: Gerald R. McCarthy
Address: Leyden
Telephone: 773-7276
Occupation: Speech and Hearing Therapist in Greenfield
Education: B.A. Emerson
Masters in education from UMass
Public Service: Member of Leyden School Committee, Member of Leyden Finance Committee

McCarthy is running as an Independent-Republican on a conservative oriented platform. He generally believes that the Democratic State legislature has been spending too much on unnecessary programs, not meant to serve the needs of the district. His main differences with Olver would be on issues such as gun control, and feels that he is better equipped to handle the needs of all the voters in the district.

For State Representative

Democrat: James G. Collins
Address: 67 Butterfield Terrace, Amherst
Telephone: 549-6886
Occupation: State Representative
Education: B.A.: UMass
Public Service: Former Asst. Director of Regional Upward Bound Program

Representative Collins, as a member of the Special Commission on the Belchertown School, has worked for increased financial aid for that school. He favors increased aid to education and other related programs (i.e. independent studies or Outreach, etc.). He is generally looked upon as a liberal and has fostered such a voting record.

Republican: William C. Atkins
Address: 15 Mt. Pollux Drive, Amherst
Telephone: 256-6777
Occupation: Production Manager for Atkins Farm
Education: UMass graduate
Public Service: Amherst School Committee for 12 yrs.
Amherst Recreation Commission
Amherst Town Meeting Member
Amherst Finance Committee
Chairman of Regional School Committee

Atkins has based his campaign on his years of experience with the Amherst community. He feels that because of this and the fact that he has "five college children", that he'd be the most fitting representative to unite the students and the members of the Amherst community.

Statewide

Statewide, the race for governor between incumbent Republican Francis Sargent and Democratic contender Michael Dukakis has been characterized by general agreement on most aspects of the campaign, the big difference being in the area of economics where Dukakis plans to create jobs through public works projects. Sargent appeals to conservative elements with claims of cutting back on state spending.

The campaign for Attorney General between Francis X. Bellotti, Democrat and Josiah Spaulding, Republican should be close. Spaulding is the underdog, but so was Muhammad Ali last week.

Michael Dukakis will find great support from Thomas P. O'Neil 3d, son of Congressman "Tip O'Neil," in the race for Lieutenant Governor. The O'Neil family has considerable political clout in Massachusetts. Donald Dwight is Sargent's running mate.

Most observers predict Dukakis-O'Neil to win big in 1974.

Xmas, now!

It's Christmas again. What? That's right, Christmas. Forget about Veteran's day which is next week, but was celebrated last week (or was that the Fourth of July).

Chop Thanksgiving. It is not being played up too highly this year. A trip to the supermarket is more like getting rolled for a week's pay than partaking in America's abundance.

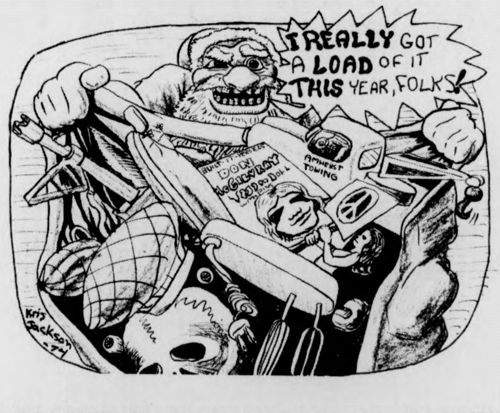
We're having Indian summer, but Christmas is coming. Pretty soon the Avon Lady will come ding-donging at people's doors laden with all manner of powders, perfumes, and other non-essential items that have their way of finding an obscure spot in the linen closet to dry out, be spilled, or rewrapped and given away again.

The trees are not completely devoid of leaves yet, but a department store in Northampton already has its artificial Christmas tree up. The World Series is only three weeks old but it is time to get new skis, poles, boots, jackets, hats, gloves, etc. Because Christmas is nearly here and Christmas means snow, even if it takes until January to be deep enough to make footprints on a sidewalk.

People are still wearing shorts and topsiders, but plans for the arrival of Santa Claus by helicopter, parachute or yacht are in the wind. Santa Claus, the once mythological figure, will be on the streets with the frequency of winos around Times Square. Yes, Christmas is coming and by the time all those Santa's tell all the children they can have anything they want, parents will be at the bank trying to cop a second mortgage.

Halloween costumes are just being put away, but hurry up because before long enterprising youth will be at the door with a catalogue of Christmas Cards, personalized at the factory with the name of your choice, before the rush for sure as a discount is available. The Christmas spirit isn't necessary, just save some money.

While the costumes are being put away, have a real pigout on the candy that kids mooched the other day. In the next week, groups like the North Amherst Fire Department Auxiliary will be interrupting dinner with an invitation to buy overpriced, sugar-laden cookies or candy, to help them with their annual Christmas Party. (Doesn't hurt the dentist either.) Every house needs eight or ten pounds of scrumptious ribbon candy to become rancid over the holidays. It's the American way.



I REALLY GOT A LOAD OF IT THIS YEAR, FOLKS!
BUILT-IT-YERSELF DON McGILVRAY VOODOO DOLL
AMHERST TOWING
Kris Jackson -74

Sick of Christmas yet? Fear not, the Chamber of Commerce will soon unload its annual contest for the best home-lighting in town. It's the country's one big chance to be garrish and get rewarded. The $25 dollar prize will pay the bill for blinking Santas (what him again) and Rudolphs...or light the Nativity Scene and supply it with music too. Losers: tough luck, back to the fuse box, and see you next year.

No Christmas is complete without music. Right now, and hurry because the supply is limited to 100,000,000 copies. Department stores, gas stations, pharmacies, supermarkets, and other cultural strongholds are offering records of the best liked songs of the season for 99 cents. The album you want to buy for a gift will be higher priced this year because there is a shortage of petroleum product, vinyl chloride.

Start your '75 Christmas Club soon. Don't let the holiday creep up on you.

I THINK THAT IT IS TOO LATE FOR THIS GERRY!

Your chance to speak is now

Robert Wood, President of UMass, has determined the mandatory residence hall requirement to be a matter of economics rather than legalities, as, in his opinion, living on campus is less expensive than living off. At present, students are paying from $307.50 to $350 per semester for a concrete walled double room, and an additional $308.25 for a ten meal ticket, which may go unused more than a few times due to the sometimes intolerable quality of the food or the environment in which it is served. It would seem that President Wood does not have a clear idea of the quality of life in the dormitories, physically, mentally, or economically.

A lack of communication is nothing new, it has been declared a major reason for disputes ranging from World Wars to a family argument. The Student Organizing Project is holding hearings into the housing situation to alleviate the lack of communications between students and the administration. The hearing will be held every night this week in each of the residential areas, beginning tonight in Baker House. Witnesses will include Vice Chancellor Dr. Robert Gage, Ken Dean, Director of Residential Life, and Arthur Warren, Director of Food Services. Also attending will be State Representative Jim Collins.

But one of the major factors of the hearings will be the students of UMass. Student groups and individuals will also be testifying about grievances toward the residence hall system. Student input is essential for the hearings to be a success. Here is a situation in which the students will have a direct voice to the policy making administrators of the campus instead of useless complaint boxes or comment cards. One does not have to be a great orator or student leader to testify. Anyone under the classification of "UMass student" "UMie", etc. may speak on what's bothering him (her), by contacting the S.O.P. at 545-2415.

We urge all students with grievances or ideas to attend the meetings and to voice their opinions. A failure to communicate ideas can usually be attributed to one side or the other. In this case, let's hope that students are not to blame.

The opinions expressed in this space represent those of a majority of the Board of Editors.

Being committed to committees

It seems that with the advent of each semester the Student Government Association attempts to out do whatever the previous administration has contrived. Last spring there was a masochistic conspiracy to destroy themselves through legal abolition. This year the great plan is autonomy.

According to a pink and black pamphlet delivered to my mail box, "this time something's DIFFERENT on campus! Introducing THE STUDENT ORGANIZING PROJECT." The latest gimmick is a push to procure a student union. What then, is the purpose of that massive red brick building that one must encounter in daily duty here on campus that bares the name of Student Union? What, other than the housing of RSO, Collegian, and the game room is its reason for existence? A more pressing question would inquire as to what exactly is a student union.

A university, of, by, and for the students is its basic aim. It conisists of a body of volunteer membership officiated to deal and bargain collectively with the administration.

What possible progress can be made if we, the students, are asked to jump from one cause to another, to join one committee and help form another one to achieve a similar if not the same purpose? What is the function of SGA, RSO, and SOP if not merely to feed each other with membership and thought? Last week I came across a yellow card placed on every dining commons' table reading "Join a committee!" and then listed six or seven different assemblages that one might affiliate oneself with. There was one for food, one for housing, one for entertainment, one for publishing such literature, each one demanding your presence if action is to be taken against the collossal bureaucracy that is intent on our elimination.

How then is one to play the prime role — student— and remain as such? It would appear that when something needs doing a process of buck passing is commenced and a new committee, organization, association, assembly, et cetera is formed. A nonentity becomes a prospective scapegoat to the cause.

Have you ever entered such an institution as Whitmore or RSO and asked who's in charge? Total confusion, the zenith of anarchy ensues. Like a human ping-pong ball you are volleyed from one authority to another. In rage, frustration, and sometimes tears, you exit having accomplished nothing.

In President Wood's recent speech to the Student Senate, one might be lead to believe that he advocates a love it or leave it policy. If the students do not shape to the prefabricated mold outlined by the administration then they can be disposed of and another group of students can come and be poured into the mold.

It is our right to mold our own life and education and not be forced into a shape that we do not fit. A student union may well be the answer but the method of formation is surely not proper. This vicious cycle that gets us nowhere, juggling your time between twenty committees, and attempting to squeeze in some academics is a totally negative process.

President Wood states that he admits that we have a legitimate and major concern over what kind of education we're paying for. He further reports that are we to be taken seriously in the expression of such concerns. I can clearly see his point when reflecting on last spring's push to abolish the SGA and the circus-like farce that carries over in attempting to formulate a union.

What this all boils down to is that if there is to be student power it must come from a central, nucleus; one forcible source. We have no need for another set of initials to take up office space at the Union building where SGA members will shuffle from one office title to another and discuss the same subject matter under the guise of SOP or RSO. Only through some formal structure can we possibly attempt to usurp this "cookie-cutter" conspiracy.

Voters to decide NUKE issue locally today

The Progressive News Service is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular basis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, should submit them to the Progressive News Service, c-o Veteran's Coalition in the Student Union, second floor.

and JOHN BUSCAGLIA

Today the people living in Hampshire and Franklin counties will vote on two referendum questions asking whether they want nuclear power plants in Montague, Mass., Rowe, Mass. and Vernon, Vermont.

These questions were placed on the ballot by the Alternative Energy Coalition because, they believe the people whose lives are most affected by the corporate decision to build the nukes never have a chance to say much about it.

The Atomic Energy Commission they say, was supposed to protect the public but unfortunately it was also supposed to promote nuclear power -- a conflict of interest in which the people lost.

President Ford recently signed into law a new bill that splits the Atomic Energy Commission into two new agencies, supposedly to resolve this conflict.

The first, called the Energy Research and Development Administration, will be headed by Robert Seamans, currently president of the National Academy of Engineering. Its task will be to explore new modes of energy production, including solar, geothermal, and wind energy, as well as nuclear energy. The second new agency, called the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, will supposedly insure the safety and efficiency of nuclear power plants. President Ford has appointed William A. Anders, former astronaut and currently a member of the Atomic Energy Commission, as head of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

It remains to be seen whether the two new agencies will actually change this country's energy research and development or give the people any greater say in decision-making. The Alternative Energy Coalition of Amherst and Turners Falls points out two reasons why this reorganization probably doesn't mean much.:

First, they say, it is questionable whether making William Anders head of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission will really protect us. Senator Abraham Ribicoff, one of the main reorganizers of the Atomic Energy Commission asked "whether the AEC commissioner who now has the lead role in promoting the new plutonium fueled breeder reactor should serve as the chief regulator of this potentially dangerous technology." With Anders as its chief, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission may find itself with the same contradictions that the Atomic Energy Commission floundered under.

PROGRESSIVE
NEWS SERVICE

Second, the Alternative Energy Commission notes, the amount of money the federal government is allocating for research of atomic energy is grossly disproportionate to allocations for other forms of energy. This year the government spent only $50 million for the development of solar energy and only $42 million on other advanced energy systems, while $700 million was allocated for the development of nuclear power. What the budget will be for the new Energy Research and Development Administration is not known.

If Congress allocates money in the same proportions as it has up to now, the new agency will accomplish very little in developing advanced energy systems, says the Alternative Energy Coalition.

The Alternative Energy Coalition also points out that the utilities companies and the oil industry, foreseeing that petroleum reserves will be depleted by the turn of the century, are investing heavily in nuclear power. They are determined to steer the United States toward a nuclear economy, in order to preserve their own control of this country's energy resources and insure their profits after the oil runs out.

Almost no money is being invested by the power cartel in the development of advanced energy systems such as solar power. This is because the industries know that, once the technology for a solar economy were established, this country would have unlimited amounts of clean energy, virtually for free. The availability of solar or wind energy cannot be regulated to insure high profits, the way the availability of oil or nuclear power can. For this reason, the utilities and oil companies have been doing all they can to discredit the feasability of advanced energy systems and to maintain the illusion of solar, geothermal, and wind energy systems as backward, impractical, and inadequate for America's energy needs.

Stopping the spread of nuclear power plants must begin on a local level. The two referendum questions on today's ballot are a beginning. It will be the first chance to hear from people living in the hazardous radiation zone surrounding the proposed Montague nuke -- an area that roughly corresponds to present State Senator John Olvers' district.

The first question opposes the construction of the proposed Montague nuke, 15 miles north or Amherst. The second question calls for closing and dismantling the nuclear power plants in Rowe, Massachusetts and Vernon, Vermont. If these two proposals are approved by the voters in Hampshire and Franklin Counties, the political impact will lend tremendous support to the growing anti-nuclear movement across the country. It will tell the legislators that the public objects to the course currently being charted for this country by the private, corporate interests who control our power industry. In order to oppose the nukes on the ballot you should vote "YES" on these two questions. If you want to help promote the no nuke referendum, the Alternative Energy Coalition needs people to canvass and distribute literature. Come to the People's AEC office today, at 165 Main St. in the First Congregational Church in Amherst or call 253-2564.

As a British company we'd like to explain our 810QX automatic turntable in plain English.

How the 810QX reproduces recorded music accurately.
The BSR 810QX has a sophisticated synchronous motor, spinning a heavy 7-lb. platter for accurate speed (regardless of voltage supply or record load) and all-but-nonexistent wow and flutter. Anti-skating force may be adjusted for optimum pressure with either conical or elliptical styli, so stylus sits perfectly centered in groove for precise stereo separation without audible distortion or uneven groove wear. A strobe disc is integrated into the platter design and a variable speed control is provided should you want to vary from, and later return to, the normal speeds. The tone arm will track as low as 0.25 grams to make use of finest light-weight, high-compliance cartridges for maximum fidelity and dynamic range.

How the 810QX protects records and cartridge stylus assembly.
Tone arm descent is viscous-damped in automatic operation and also when using the manual cue and pause control, for gentle contact with record surface. Platter rubber mat protects records during play and cushions discs during automatic drop. Automatic spindle uses umbrella-type suspension, without outboard balance arm. Stub spindle rotates with record to prevent distortion of center hole. Stylus setdown adjustment prevents stylus damage if dropped outside of entry groove range. Tracking pressure adjustable down to 0.25 grams for newest lightweight cartridges for minimum record wear. Stylus brush whisks dust off stylus between plays. Lock automatically secures tone arm to prevent damage to stylus from accidental movement. Stylus wear meter records accumulated stylus use in hours. Knowing when to replace a worn stylus protects your records.

How the 810QX provides convenient operation in any desired mode.
After touching a single feather-weight button, the 810QX can either: play a stack of records, shutting off after the last one; play a single record and shut off; or play a single record, and repeat it indefinitely until you stop it. Manual operation uses a single button to start the motor, and the cue control to lower the stylus.

How the 810QX operates quietly, emitting no sound that can intrude on the music.
The 810QX uses a unique sequential cam drive mechanism. It is a rigid precision assembly that replaces the plumber's nightmare of rotating eccentric plates and interlocking gears that other changers use. Unlike other changers, there are no light metal stampings that can go out of aligment and make a lot of noise, from being carried, bumped, or just from use.

Rally demand end to U.S. colonialism

By PAUL H. JIMERSON

"Comrades, this gathering is a beautiful expression of militant solidarity. We gather here in frank comradeship and cohesive brotherhood — Puerto Ricans and North Americans; Afro Americans. Chicanos. Asians, Indians, representatives of the different communities in the United States, who, above and beyond national frontiers, ethnic and language differences, reach the highest identity to which human being aspire, that of becoming universal beings." Juan Mari Bras.

Sunday, October 27 was proclaimed the National Day of solidarity with Puerto Rico, and the rally, held at Madison Square Garden in New York , drew about 18,000 Puerto Ricans, Blacks, whites, native Americans, and Asian-Americans. The rally was well organized and expressed a feeling of solidarity amongst the third world peoples within the United States, who came from twenty-five states to give their support for Puerto Rico's independence.

The theme of the rally, "A Bicentennial Without Colonies," emphasized the need to re-examine America's attitudes toward Third World peoples in light of our own revolutionary past. Jane Fonda, from the Indochina Peach Campaign, spoke on the need for America to live up to the ideals it was founded on. "The U.S. failure in Indochina," Fonda added, "is creating a shift in world power, as evidenced in Guinea Bissau, Cuba, the anti-imperialist (U.N.) General Assembly, and a balance of forces in favor of national liberation."

The primary emphasis of the rally was that the struggle for Puerto Rican independence should be viewed not as an isolated event, but rather as part of the ongoing struggle of Third World peoples in the U.S.

Juan Mari Bras spoke to this point: "Along with Afro-Americans, Chicanos, American Indians, Asian Americans, and the so-called national and racial minorities in this country, we compose the presence of the Third World within North American frontiers.

Bras pointed out the need to emphasize solidarity with the oppressed people of this country for the Bicentennial, "and denounced the oppressive character of this system."

Irwin Silber, in a somewhat lighter moment, said "If you think this country is in disarray, you ain't seen nothin' yet." With its subdued laughter, the crowd seemed to, agree. Silber went on to say, "We are a dagger aimed at imperialism. Imperialism is underneath a dying system."

Pete Seeger was on hand to sing "Guantanamera," his only song, since time was short; Phil Ochs was cut from the lineup, also because of time. Holly Near was also there, along with Groupo Taone, a Puerto Rican group, and El Grupo, a group of Latin American singers, musicians and poets who have performed throughout the U.S., dramatizing the struggle against imperialism through their art.

Angela Davis addressed the enthusiastic crowd with pleas of solidarity. She also extended greetings of solidarity from the Attica Brothers, who said in a separate written statement to the Solidarity Day Committee, "We, the Attica Brothers, declare our unconditional support for the Puerto Rican people and their struggle for independence. Your struggle is our struggle, so we are both fighting against the same oppressive conditions."

Arthur Banks, a black actor-playright recently released from prison after serving 27 months of a five-year sentence for draft resistance, did an eloquent portrayal of abolitionist Frederick Douglass, quoting, "There can be no progress without struggle. Power concedes nothing without a demand — it never did and it never will," and "Tyranny lasts as long as people make no resistance."

Owusu Sudaukai, former chairman of the African Liberation Support Committee, stated that "Countries want liberation, nations want independence, and the people want revolution." Mr. Sudaukai's assertion drew an enthusiastic response from the audience.

Among the other speakers were: Le Ahn Tu, a Vietnamese woman and a member of the research team at National Action-Research on the Military-Industrial Complex, said that the people of Puerto Rico will have to fight for their independence: Virginia Collins, who has worked for years on black struggles in the deep south, and is a member of the Republic of New Africa, said "Both black people and Puerto Ricans have been made citizens without their consent," and that both peoples are working essentially for human dignity; Barbara Reilly, representing the North American Women's Movement, stated that no liberation struggle can ignore the oppression of women, and women must turn their anger from themselves toward the condition of their lives to join the fight for the liberation of all people.

Women played a major role in the rally, indicating an awareness on the part of women that they are victims of the same repressive conditions that minority groups and other oppressed people in our society are. This point was eloquently conveyed by all the women who spoke, in their show of overwhelming support for the right of the Puerto Rican people to self determination.

Bringing the rally to an end was Russel Means, national leader of the American Indian Movement (AIM), who gave a short but energetic statement of support from AIM, saying the Native Americans and Puerto Rican people have the same heritage. He then gave the floor to Chief Philip Deer, spiritual leader of AIM, spoke briefly of the destruction of the spiritual bonds that the Indians had before they made their biggest mistake, which was as Chief Deer put it, "discovering Columbus." Afterwards, the Wounded Knee Traditional Drum and Song Group performed the AIM victory song, which brought the entire group of 18,000 to their feet in a moving show of solidarity and togetherness.

The rally for "A Bicentennial Without Colonies" was fundamentally a gathering of Third World peoples aimed at dissolving the racial and ethnic hatreds that are inherent in separation, expressing a show of "Militant solidarity", and denouncing the "environmental colonialism" of the U.S. in Puerto Rico.

Juan Mari Bras had this to say concerning the Bicentennial: "There is, then, a magnificent historical opportunity to convert the celebration planned by the imperialists into a great movement where the forces of all marginal and super-exploited sectors of this country can join together, and denounce the oppressive character of this system. In that sense the organizational implementation of the slogan "A Bicentennial Without Colonies" from this gathering on, could be an important contribution of the movement of solidarity with the independence of Puerto Rico to the development of the struggle of the liberation of all the oppressed sectors here, of the internal Third World of the United States.

Long live the solidarity of anti-imperialist forces of the World. Long live a free Puerto Rico!

Wake up

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

It is no surprise that Black People throughout the World are in a precarious position. If one reads the paper daily; starvation, genocide and liquidation of the peoples of color is amply documented.

The decline of Western civilization (which is inevitable) is being blamed on a powerless people, who raped no country, who were never avaricious but who on the contrary have been the victims of the shortcomings of the Western man and his civilization.

It would seem that Black People are not waking up to these realities. Here at the University Black Students and Administrators sit passively in their ivory towers, while little children are being beaten in Boston. Black organizations namely, Afro-American Student Organization, Harambe etc. are doing absolutely nothing to raise the consciousness of the students. Obviously the leaders of these organizations need to be purged. Black Mass Communication Project is rightly undergoing reorganizing and redefinition.

The leadership in these organizations seems to forget that it was only through struggle that they were given the privilege of attending this University imperative that they continue in the path of Nat Turner, Fredrick Douglass, Marcus Garver, Eliaj Muhammad, Malcolm X. and all the loving Brothers and Sisters that died in the name of Struggle!! The serious times we live in make it imperative that we cut down on our excessive partying and begin to get serious. For the bus is not only going to be busing little kids in Boston, they will be busing Black Students and Administrators out of University of Mass.

Wake up Black Administrators and Students the bell tolls for thee!!

UMass prof's works to be in design exhibit

UMass Assistant Professors Jeff Fiala and June B. Gaeke were notified recently that original works of theirs have been selected for inclusion in the International Theater Institute's exhibit DESIGN 70 (Contemporary Stage Design: USA).

Scheduled for a December debut at Lincoln Center, DESIGN 70 consists of 250 scene and costume renderings and set models determined representative of the best of contemporary stage-craft by a judging panel made up of, among others, such theater luminaries as Robert Joffrey, Ming Cho Lee, and Donald Oenslager.

Following the New York exhibition, the collection goes to Prague, Czechoslavakia, becoming a part of that city's quadrennial celebrations. 1976 will see the exhibit returning to this country for a nation-wide tour under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institute that includes a tentative stop in Amherst at the UMass Fine Arts Center beginning mid-March of that year.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tensions and counter-tensions on the celestial scene make a precisely predictable week all but impossible. Ups and downs on all levels of life cause careers to bloom or fade personal relationships to be strengthened or diminished with little warning either way. Occupations and preoccupations are apt to bring material gain one day and little but frustration and disappointment the next. Lovers are inclined to quarrel; enemies may quite suddenly find a pathway to friendship emerging from the unexpected discovery of much in common. There is little to bolster egos on the one hand — and must to instill self-confidence on the other. Success and failure seem at times to vie with each other for the last word, while good moods and bad alternate in swift succession.

Those who are wise in the ways of the world will make no plans that are not flexible. More important than a basis in soundness where plans are concerned this week is an ability to change horses mid-stream — or anywhere else that circumstances demand. This is no week for those who are set in their ways — but it is also no week for those who insist that the new and different are all that are important, all that will insure progress. Rather, this is a week when the new and the old must exist in harmony together, just as the usual and the unusual must be at peace with each other.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 7) — There is no excuse for ignoring the advice of others. Make certain that you know which side your bread is buttered on this week. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Business affairs are such that there may be much confusion early in the week. Make an effort to cooperate with co-workers — even those you dislike.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Though a number of new schemes may present themselves early in the week, you would do well to ignore all but the most flexible. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — If you would add appreciably to your business or professional income, act at once on the suggestion of one who has recently known great success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Investigate any new plans for gain, especially should you be asked for a cash contribution to get the scheme underway. Take your time. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Profits run high where partnership activities are concerned. On the other hand, there is much to indicate that present partnerships may dissolve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Take no notice of those who are blowing their own horns. There is much to be gained by sharing knowledge about present endeavors. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — Execute your plans quickly — but don't rely on other people's approval of them. Results may not be what you expected — though they may well be good.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Promises may be kept even though you may have changed your mind about what prompted them. Don't be surprised to be charged with error. (March 6-March 20) — If you would be able to take advantage of present opportunities, take the time and effort needed to inform higher-ups of your abilities.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — A week when flattery, though it may be easy to apply to another's ego, will gain you very little. Take care not to rest on your laurels. (April 5-April 19) — Logic serves you well, when it serves you at all, this week. Don't be alarmed should the illogical seem to take over now and again.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Keep to what you know well, especially during the early days of the week when success is an unpredictable outcome of time and effort. (May 6-May 20) — Make your ideas practical ones and you will have little to fear from higher-ups should a diminishing of the labor force be in the making. Remain alert.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — Conservative action must be alternated with progressive action if you are to be able to take advantage of what the week has to offer. (June 7-June 20) — Present profits may not be enough to gain your ultimate ends. Make your way easier by following the advice of an old friend. Remember an old rule.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — Take care not to plan too much activity this week. This is an excellent time for changing your life-style — but only if loved ones agree. (July 8-July 22) — Be wise in your selection of the week's activities. Otherwise, you may choose with an eye to profits only and, thus, bring failure upon yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — Disruptions on the home front cannot be counted upon to disturb things on the employment scene. The ways and means prescribed may not be sufficient. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — A fast-moving week during which difficulties with present business or profession increase in some aspects and decrease in others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — A tendency to begin immediately to act upon any suggestions others may offer may make this a week of unexpected surprises for all. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Impulsive moves may not be as difficult to deal with as usual this week. Where youngsters are concerned, think over your advice once again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Delay carrying out intentions. Otherwise, you may find that you have blocked your own changes of heart and mind. Consider new reforms. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Unless you can deal efficiently with lapses of discipline on the home front, you can hardly expect to deal with them on the employment scene. Act!
